So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that something should be done to stop this very illegitimate business. How are we going to do it? In my State they have been talking about building State elevators, but they have had no local inspection system, and if they tried to establish one it would be difficult to establish one that would be accepted in the markets of the world. Under this warehouse bill, if the State of North Dakota builds warehouses or elevators at the outlets of the State sufficiently large to handle cargoes of grain, the Federal Government will inspect it for them and issue certificates of inspection, giving the proper grades, and then if they ship even a small amount, say 5,000,000 or 10,000,000 bushels out of a 100,000,000-bushel crop, what they ship to Europe will establish the price in Europe for real northwestern No. 2 wheat. And then, when Liverpool prices are quoted by our home markets they will give the Liverpool price on the real No. 2 instead of giving it as they do now upon the exporters' fictitious No. 2, and the result will be, even though the amount exported may not be great, to raise the value of all the grades of grain in this country at least one grade.

If it does that, it will result in a greater saving to the farmers of this counry than has ever been brought about by any law ever passed by this or any other Congress; it will result in saving hundreds of millions of dollars. I believe this bill will make such a saving possibe. Under these two bills I think we are going to bring about a change that is going to benefit both the producer and consumer.

It is quite a common thing to find that Congressmen representing cities will look upon every bill that is called an agricultural bill as being wholy in the interest of the producers, whereas they are just as much in the interest of the consumer as they are in the interest of the producer, for anything that tends to increase production or prevent economic waste should benefit both producers and consumers. Two years ago when I made a speech on the tariff question I went into the markets of Washington and Baltimore to try and find out what the consumers were paying for farm products. I found that the spread between what the farmers received and what the consumers were paying was 140 per cent on flour, the lowest, up to 800 and 900 and 1,000 per cent when it got to such things as breakfast food. [Applause.] It is therefore evident that there is an ample opportunity to increase the price to the producer and decrease the cost to the consumer and still have a sufficient margin to cover all the legitimate costs of distribution.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I asked for a few minutes in order to commend the Committee on Rules and the majority of this House for bringing this resolution before the House as they have. If they had not done so, the House would have spent a week on the passage of these three amendments. I have heard some complaint here by Members because very few Members were present to hear the debate, and therefore when the amendments offered to the bill were brought to a vote many of those who vote on them would not have heard the debate and would not know how to vote. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is not the fault of the committee that brought in the rule. I think the Members who are not here do not want to hear debate, that they have heard so much talk, talk, talk, that they have got tired of it, and they prefer some place where they can rest without listening to it.

The majority in the House should, after reasonable discussion, be permitted to transact business and bring measures to a vote. The country will hold them responsible if the legislation is bad. If the legislation is good, we should all help to pass it.

For the reasons above stated I voted for the resolution submitted by the Committee on Rules. I voted for the resolution also because of the provisions limiting debate on the three amendments provided for in the resolution to four hours. Certainly four hours' debate is ample, particularly when the debate will not change the vote of any Member. Allowing five minutes to each person taking part in the debate, it will permit 48 Members—as many as are now in the House—to be heard. That is the average number present when the House is in committee.

I would like to see the majority bring in every bill that is likely to be unreasonably discussed under a rule to limit debate. If this is done in the future, I shall vote for such a rule when the time allowed for debate is as liberal as here.

I am willing to remain here until December if it is necessary to do so to enact all necessary legislation; I am not anxious to remain that long to have the opportunity to be a listener to a "talkfest."

In saying what I have said I criticize no Member. If I made any criticism it would be that the majority does not take the bull by the horns, limit debate on all bills, do business, get through, and adjourn.

We are here not alone to talk and hear talk, but to do business, and if the majority had the sand they ought to have they would do business, and the only way to do it is to gag the Members who are determined to talk all the time. I am in favor of stopping the talk. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS].

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to talk upon this amendment, but I do want to correct myself in the RECORD. In the RECORD of April 24 there was a little controversy over the migratory-bird law, and I undertook to interrupt the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who declined to be interrupted. By some chance the language spoken by the gentleman from South Carolina was attributed to me. It does me an injustice in this: I was in favor of the motion to strike out that section providing for the appropriation for the bird law. He was for the appropriation and against the motion to strike out, and he made an argument in favor of enforcing the law, directly against the position that I took.

It does me an injustice in another respect. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] said in the course of those remarks that he was not a lawyer and that he did not know very much about law. I want to assure the gentlemen of the House that I never made any such admission. [Laughter.] A number of my associates and colleagues expressed surprise, especially my associates on the Judiciary Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, that I had come to the House here and admitted that I was not a lawyer and did not know very much about law. [Laughter.] It may be true, but I am not admitting it. [Laughter.]

Therefore at this time I wanted to square myself in the RECORD for the benefit of my numerous sportsmen constituents in Illinois who desire to defeat the operation of the migratory-bird law. I am opposed not to the law, but to the rules promulgated by the bureau of the Agricultural Department which discriminates against my section of the country and prohibits the killing of migratory birds in my State while the privilege is extended both north and south, to our neighbors below Memphis and to those above Minneapolis. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 36, line 5, after the word "stored" strike out the words "for interstate or foreign commerce or in any supplies under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, section 13 provides—

That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall receive for storage therein, so far as its capacity permits, any agricultural product of the kind customarily stored therein by him which may be tendered to him in a suitable condition for warehousing, in the usual manner in the ordinary and usual course of business, without making any discrimination between persons desiring to avail themselves of warehouse facilities.

It makes no distinction between interstate and foreign commerce and intrastate commerce.

Section 15 provides—

That grain, flaxseed, or any other fungible agricultural product received for storage in a warehouse licensed under this act shall be inspected and graded by a person duly licensed to grade the same under this act.

Here only inspection is provided for grain stored for interstate commerce. I submit that if we provide for the inspection in part we should provide for the inspection of all of it; or, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] is adopted, that will restrict the storing of grain to that offered for interstate and foreign commerce. If so, then there would be no need for this amendment, as the storing of grain in licensed warehouses will then be restricted to grain offered for interstate and foreign commerce; but in the event that his amendment is defeated, I offer this amendment, so that all stored grain, including that in intrastate commerce, may be inspected by a licensed inspector. It seems to me that if it is necessary to provide for the storing and inspection of grain offered for interstate and foreign commerce we should also provide for the storing and inspection of grain in intrastate commerce. I see no reason for making the distinction, or why we should legislate in favor of one engaged in storing and shipping across the State line against one confining his operations within the State. As we know, little, if any, grain will be stored for interstate commerce. Warehouses do not receive grain in one State and move the grain into another. The farmer stores his grain in the warehouse. Later he either sells it or withdraws it for seed, for feed, or for shipment. The shipment may be to some point within the State or without. The same applies to grain stored by the miller and speculator. Certainly what is withdrawn for seed for consumption or shipment within the State is not an article in interstate commerce, but the question of constitutionality has been raised. It is contended that authority is not given by the Constitution to legislate giving the Secretary authority to enter into an agreement with the warehousemen to inspect, or for a licensed inspector to inspect grain not in interstate commerce; if so, where is the authority to legislate authorizing the Secretary to peddle free of charge hog-cholera serum and veterinary service? Hogs treated are not articles in interstate commerce, and many never become articles of interstate commerce. The same applies to numerous other activities of the department. Be that as it may, one word in explanation of the bill.

The object of the proposed bill is obvious. It hardly seems necessary to discuss it. It is simply to license responsible warehousemen to store cotton, tobacco, grains, and flaxseed in suitable warehouses, as before stated. It provides for the standardization and inspection of such farm products. The Secretary is authorized to cause examination as to the responsibility of the warehousemen, and whether the warehouse is suitable for the proper storage. Upon examination, if in his opinion, the warehouse and the warehouseman come within the provisions of this act, he shall issue a license and accept a bond for the faithful performance of the obligation. If the bond approved by him is found insufficient he may require additional bond. If not given, he may suspend or revoke the license. It will readily be seen that the object of the proposed bill is to protect the farmer or anybody who may have any of the products to offer for storage, not only against loss incurred through storage with unresponsible warehousemen, but it also provides for the establishment and promulgation of standards, and that grain offered for interstate and foreign commerce shall be graded in accordance and to conform to the standards established by the Secretary.

It would be observed that the bill is not obligatory but permissive, that it is optional with the warehouseman whether he will come in under the provisions of the bill, therefore no hardship is imposed upon anyone. If he comes in, it must be voluntarily upon his part. If he does come in, he must give bond for the faithful performance of his contract and must conduct his business in accordance with the provisions of the act which gives to the farmer or anybody who may store products, in a large degree, protection against loss or improper grading. I might add that the bill as originally drawn provided for the storage of staple and unperishable agricultural products. It is believed by many that it would give greater power to the Secretary than should be given him. That the term might be interpretated to include practically all farm products. Therefore it was deemed best to specify, and to limit the authority to cotton, tobacco, grains, and flaxseed. The department has already fixed the standards for cotton and corn. It is well along in establishing a standard for wheat. It will take years to fix a standard for the other items enumerated, which are believed to be the most important. When the standards are fixed for the products included, if then deemed advisable, Congress can authorize the standardization of additional products.

The chairman was authorized to offer amendment limiting the authority to the products referred to, and with that amendment, the bill has the approval of the Committee of Agriculture, I believe, with the exception of one of the members of the committee.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HELFIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this bill. I think it will be beneficial to the farmers of the South and of the West to have a uniform warehouse system. The producer of cotton needs a place to store his cotton so that he can take his warehouse receipt and borrow money upon it, and this bill is the greatest step, in my judgment, that has been taken toward helping the producer, the grain growers of the West and the cotton producers of the South. Cotton is our principal product. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] seems to oppose anything that will help the cotton farmer, and I want to say to him that when he does so he strikes a blow at the farmers of his own section. Whenever you western Republicans injure the cotton producer you cut down his purchasing power, and when you do that you injure the farmer of the West, because the producer of cotton in the South buys grain from the grain grower of the West and he buys stock from the stock producer of the West; and if gentlemen want to help the farmers of the West, let them help the cotton producer in getting a good price for his cotton. [Applause.] When he has plenty of money he buys freely from you and he pays you a good price. Let me illustrate. When cotton prices are good he pays you $200 and $250 for your mules, and when cotton sells at 6 cents a pound he can not pay as much as $125. So when gentlemen on that side injure the producer of cotton they are injuring the farmers of their own section. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, cotton is in greater demand to-day and is being put to more uses than ever before in the history of the world. The automobile factories of the United States last month sold 28,600 carloads of automobiles, a gain of 11,400 carloads over March of last year. If the present record continues, the Washington Post says, there will be at the end of the year 3,500,000 automobiles in the United States. The average gain of the automobile industry has been about 40 per cent a year, and vast quantities of cotton are being consumed in making automobile cushions, tops, and tires.

The cement industry is one of the greatest in our country, and hundreds of thousands of cotton sacks are used in handling cement.

The paper-making industry in the United States is a tremendous one, and it is now confronted with an exhausted supply of the usual paper-making material; and now this industry is buying inferior cotton, cotton waste, and linters to be used in making paper. So acute is this situation, Mr. Chairman, that the paper-making industry is buying all of the old cotton rags that can be obtained, and it is paying 2½ cents a pound for them. Old cotton awning is being used for this purpose and selling at 4 cents per pound, and the paper-making industry is paying from 5 to 8 cents per pound for old cotton towels and napkins. More cotton is being consumed in surgical lint, gauze, and medicated cotton than ever before. Great quantities of cotton are being consumed in the manufacture of gunpowder and explosive shells. The cotton mills and powder factories of the United States are consuming at the present rate 10,000,000 bales of cotton a year; and bear in mind that we produced only 11,000,000 bales last year. Now, then, with the rapid increase in the consumptive demand for cotton and with the small and fast-diminishing supply, what is there to prevent cotton from going to 15 cents and maybe more in June and July? [Applause.]

Let us now take into account the prospects for the cotton crop of 1916. Muriate of potash is a very necessary ingredient to the production of cotton in three-fourths of the cotton-growing States. A serious situation confronts us in the South. Potash can not be had at any price. It sold in 1913 for $39 a ton, and it is now selling for $500 a ton. The lack of acid phosphates and potash formerly used in abundance in the production of cotton means nothing else but a small cotton crop this year. In many States it will take 4 acres to produce as much cotton as was produced on 1 acre when these fertilizers were freely used. The cotton acreage of the South will be no larger than it was last year; and India, the largest cotton-producing country in the Old World, has again reduced her acreage. Last year she planted 23,000,000 acres in cotton, and this year she has reduced her cotton acreage to 17,000,000 acres. Russia has reduced her acreage again, and in both countries this was done for the purpose of producing food supplies for the allied armies.

Mr. Chairman, our failure to obtain fertilizers, which foretells a very small cotton crop, the very small cotton supply, and the increasing demand and consumption show a condition in the cotton world which at an early date will approach close unto a cotton famine. Supply, demand, consumption, and every statistical fact warrant higher prices for our cotton. Our cotton-goods trade was never better, and cotton goods of every character are bringing good prices, and the price is constantly increasing. The price of cotton goods and linters justifies 20 cents a pound for cotton. Those who now have cotton are determined to get a fair price for it, and they will hold some of the crop of 1915 and reduce their acreage this year. If a cold spell should come, as has been the case, just when the tender plant is coming up and kills it, or if we should have a long wet spell and the seed should rot in the ground, as has been the case, the South is going to be confronted with a serious problem. There will not be seed enough to replant. Cottonseed oil, meal, and linters were in such great demand and bringing such a good price last fall that the farmers sold every seed that they could possibly spare, and complaint is now being made that seed for planting purposes are not plentiful. The Farmers' Union of Texas, and, in fact, all over the South, the Union is urging reduction of cotton acreage.

Mr. Chairman, by a long and bitter experience the cotton farmer has learned that he can get more money for a 10,000,000-bale crop than he can for a 15,000,000-bale crop, and his common sense has told him that if he will produce more food supplies and less cotton that he will be better off in every way. [Applause.] The cotton mills of Italy, Russia, France, and England must have a great deal of cotton in the next three months, and there are not 2,000,000 bales of spinnable cotton in all Europe. The war is raging in all its fury, and the powder factories must be kept supplied with cotton; and if our people will hold fast to what cotton they have, refuse to sell until the price suits them, they will reap the reward of good prices that are bound to come. As I said before, supply and demand, the high price of linters and cotton goods, all justify far better prices than we are receiving to-day. But for the conspiracy among bear operators on the New York Cotton Exchange we would have received 15 cents for cotton some time ago. The daily conduct of that exchange shows clearly that there is market manipulation carried on there. I am convinced, and have been for some time, that there is concerted action among the bears to depress the price of cotton. Let me show you why I say that. Time and again we have seen the spot market in the South 12 cents and the future market in New York about 13 cents, and our farmers would often ask, "Why is it that you are paying only 12 cents for cotton here and it is bringing 13 cents in New York?" Then he was told that the difference in favor of the New York price was accounted for in freight charges from the southern market to New York. And that was true. Now, then, I ask why is it that the spot market in the South is higher than the future market in New York? And the reason for that is the law of supply and demand is not so easily suspended in the spot market as it is in the New York Cotton Exchange.

Mr. Chairman, I contend that when the contract price in New York is lower than the spot price in the South it is proof positive that a conspiracy exists on that exchange and that these prices are manipulated by bear speculators. [Applause.]

I have introduced a resolution calling for a full and complete investigation of the conduct of the New York Cotton Exchange, and I am anxious to have that investigation made as soon as possible. Let us see just what is going on and how the exchange is being conducted. If there is no conspiracy, the investigation will do no harm; and if there is a conspiracy, we are entitled to know it. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 12, after the word "thereof," insert the following: "The Secretary of Agriculture shall report to Congress before July 1, 1916, the names of all persons appointed by him to carry out the purposes of this act, the duties of such appointees, and the salaries paid to them."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I shall have time to discuss this amendment adequately. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN] made some reference to the activity of exporters in opposing this bill. I have not been very close to the exporters of this country, because I believe in American conditions and American trade, but if it helps the farmers of the country to have their grain exported to foreign countries when a great war prevails and they have a splendid market for it, I do not object, except to a certain extent, in that it keeps up the prices that the American consumer has to pay. I wish gentlemen would bear this in mind when they assume that those of us who are discussing this bill are doing it for a selfish purpose. The American farmer must depend very largely upon the eastern trade, and he must depend upon the exporter. So far as there being any impropriety in the shipment of goods abroad, I think it fair to observe that if grain goes abroad in improper condition, if it gets overheated, if it is rejected in a foreign market, the responsibility is not altogether with the exporter. We have found in numerous other instances in the great cities that the farmers sometimes send us some stuff that is not wholly pure. Eggs sometimes come to us in a rotten condition, and grain has sometimes been on the track too long and is not any good. Let me read just a line or two from the memorial of the Philadelphia Exchange which I read yesterday:

Another important factor that should be considered in connection with the proposed grain-grades act is that grain graded at western primary points frequently deteriorates in quality while in transit between the western shipping point and the eastern terminus. If the western exporter has sold such grain to the foreign buyer on western certificates of inspection, the question arises as to the attitude of the Government in case the grain arrives at the seaboard out of condition. Will it stop the shipment and compel the exporter to put the grain in good condition, or will the shipment be permitted to continue on its way across the ocean regardless of its condition?

I can not dwell at any great length upon this, but I would like the American farmer to know that sometimes the grain he sends out of the West comes into the East in bad condition, and if the individual farmer is to have his car tied up on the track while he has to go to the Secretary of Agriculture, in Washington, to find out about the inspection, there may be more of it coming into the East in bad condition than has been the case heretofore.

I have offered an amendment, however, which I shall try to discuss in the time that remains to me. Some gentlemen rail at those of us who oppose rider legislation. They rail at the thought that we should object to legislation being driven through this House by a rule. Some gentlemen complain who sit about reading the newspapers and getting their remarks into print occasionally by lecturing other Members of the House who are attending to their business here. Some gentlemen would like to pass by rule these three amendments to this bill, one proposing to start out a new bureau, expending $150,000 on experts and inspectors; another proposing to expend $125,000 to employ other experts and inspectors; and still another proposing to spend $50,000 to employ still other experts and inspectors, a total of nearly $325,000. Gentlemen from the rural districts want to pass this bill by a rule and fasten upon the Government three new systems of inquisition and inspection, which the farmer, in the long run, will have to pay for.

Let the gentlemen who like legislation by rule put that in their pipes and smoke it, and go back, when the time comes, and explain it to the poor, "downtrodden farmer," in whose behalf they vociferate so extensively in this House. Some of the loudest talkers that I have ever heard here or elsewhere are those who do not want much debate here. Their sonorous tones are not so attractive here as they are when they get back to the stump and tell the people at home what they did not do in the House of Representaives when they had a chance.

Pass this legislation by a gag rule, if you please. Carry it even over the mountains of Pennsylvania, and far beyond, and then let the people determine for this House whether they want this procedure or not. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I promised to yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], but I do not see him here now. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment, because I believe the warehouse system as controlled by the States is adequate to meet the situation. I do not believe the Government of the United States ought to enter into that realm of activity.

Under this bill every farmer that has a barn can become a warehouseman and issue certificates. He can make application to the Secretary of Agriculture to get a license to run a warehouse in which he has the oats of a 5-acre lot stored, and there will be an inspector appointed to look after his warehouse; and who is going to tell whether the receipt issued by that warehouse is worth anything or not?

That is true. But they say this bill is being passed for the purpose of making the certificate issued by the warehouseman the foundation for the issue of currency. Well, last year, you know the House tried to pass a law to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to advance several hundred million dollars, without reference to whether they had any warehousemen or not, and then it was proposed to compel the Government to accumulate a lot of money in a lot of banks in a certain number of States to be loaned by the bankers, under compulsion, at a certain rate of interest. Now it is proposed to license farmers to establish warehouses and give them authority to issue certificates, and all for nothing.

It is ridiculous, outrageous, unjustifiable, and it has not any business in the House. It is ruinous to the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. It seems the gentleman is opposed to this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I think I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In other respects the bill is all right? [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. After you have enumerated all the iniquities I have described and a hundred other, the bill is all right. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLAGHER. The gentleman thinks the whole thing ought to be eliminated?

Mr. MADDEN. There is no doubt about it. In all the great business centers and in all the smaller business centers of the country and on all the lines of communication, by rail or by water, we have warehouses to burn, and they are under State control, and they are properly managed and properly supervised, and the certificates that are issued by those warehousemen have the backing of the States behind them. There is no reason why we should now add the Secretary of Agriculture.

You are taking away every function of every State in the Union every time you get a chance, if there is a possibility, when you do that, of getting a job for somebody attached to it.

Mr. COX. These inspectors are all to be under civil service.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no. They are all to be worked into the service first, then covered by civil service afterwards.

Mr. COX. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman may get some of them.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Does the gentleman not think this amendment jeopardizes the passage of the Agricultural bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. The Agricultural bill in itself is one of the best bills in the House. Everybody in the House is in favor of encouraging agriculture and in favor of allowing liberal appropriations to maintain and develop agriculture. But you come here with a rule and you force down the throats of Members of the House all kinds of iniquitous legislation and attach it as a rider on the Agricultural appropriation bill, and the result is that a great many men of the House who are very friendly to agriculture will be forced to oppose these riders. When this bill goes over to the other side, it may be that arrangements have been made to add some clause to this warehouse bill to amend the Federal bank act, so that every bale of cotton and every bushel of corn and every bale of hay will be stored away in a warehouse, now in the barn of some farmer, and certificates issued against that and currency issued against that; and we shall have an expansion of currency that will create havoc all over the country. [Applause on the Republican side.].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] is recognized.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, the United States grain-grades act, which I have offered to-day as an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill, is, in my humble opinion, one of the most important and far-reaching measures that will come before this Congress for its consideration. A measure of such vast importance, affecting as it does the great agricultural interests of the whole country, should be approached with great care and much deliberation. No steps should be taken without first being sure of our ground and certain that good will come as a result. I beg to assure the Members of the House that great care has been taken in the preparation of this bill, and that it represents the very best thought of those who have devoted years of study and investigation to the subject. For a number of years the Department of Agriculture, by direction of Congress, has been making extensive investigations of the handling, grading, and transportation of grain, and the fixing of definite grades therefor. In January, 1914, the grades for corn were fixed and promulgated to take effect July 1, 1914; and while they were permissive and not compulsory, yet they have been adopted by the principal grain markets of the country and are now being very generally used. The work of determining the grades of wheat is nearing completion, and the grades for other grain will be fixed and promulgated from time to time. This act authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture not only to fix, establish, and promulgate grades for grain, but compels their use wherever grain is shipped in interstate or foreign commerce and sold by grade.

During the last Congress the Committee on Agriculture held extensive hearings upon the subject of uniform grades for grain and upon the question of Federal supervision of the grading of grain. As a result of those hearings, the committee prepared and unanimously reported a bill upon that subject. That bill was passed by the House, but, owing to the lateness of the session, failed of consideration in the Senate. The bill which I present here to-day is, for all practical purposes, identical with the bill which passed this body two years ago. It has been given the most careful consideration not only by the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture, of which I have the honor to be chairman, but also by the full committee, and comes before you with the unanimous report of that committee.

IMPORTANCE OF THE LEGISLATION.

Some idea of the importance of this subject is gained when I say to you that the farm value of the grain crop of the United States in 1915 amounted to three and a half billion dollars. The provisions of this act will apply only to grain which is shipped in interstate and foreign commerce. A very large part of the grain of the country is shipped in interstate commerce, and to give you some idea of the volume of the grain to which this act will apply, I submit the following statement of the grain which is handled in the important grain markets of the country:

Summary of total grain receipts of the 33 important grain markets in the United States, the receipts being expressed in the nearest million. The averages are based on a period of several years in the majority of cases.

The average quantity of grain shipped out of these various markets, which carries an outinspection certificate, is equivalent to approximately 60 per cent of the total receipts, making a combined volume of grain by inspection both in and out of these various markets of approximately 2,268,000,000 bushels.

This is not a new subject of legislation; bills similar to this one and seeking practically the same results have been before Congress for a number of years. The question of a uniform system for the grading of grain applicable to the entire country has long been discussed. Such a system has been advocated by every Secretary since the establishment of the Department of Agriculture.

STATES PIONEERS IN GRAIN-GRADES LEGISLATION.

Years ago there developed in the trade centers of the country exchanges and boards of trade, and speculation and manipulation became a great and growing evil. Gambling in futures became prevalent. Grain, the fruit of the honest toil of the farmers of my country, became the basis of exchange manipulations whereby prices were raised and lowered at will to meet the whim of the speculator and to satiate his greed for gain. Manipulation of the grading of grain early became one of the prevalent practices in many of the large grain markets. Grain purchased was inspected into the elevator at a low grade and when sold was inspected out and graded at a higher grade. Some of the States in the grain-producing sections of the country became the pioneers in combating these evils. They enacted comprehensive measures and inaugurated systems of grain inspection, which have been successfully managed and from which great good has come. These States deserve great credit for what they have accomplished; the State grain-inspection departments have stood as a great bulwark between the producer of grain on the farm and the manipulator of grain grades in the great central markets. State systems of grain inspection, however efficient and well managed they may be, will not accomplish the results desired or bring about uniformity in grain grading, so necessary for the complete perfection of a system throughout the entire country. The grain crops of the various States are not sold or consumed within the borders of the respective States in which they are grown and harvested. On the contrary, it is an established fact that from 75 to 90 per cent of the grain crop is shipped out of the State in which harvested and is sold and consumed in other States or in foreign countries.

LACK OF UNIFORMITY UNDER PRESENT METHODS.

Where we have State grain inspection regulated by law no one can say that grain inspected and graded under such a system, when honestly administered, is not truly and fairly graded; but we must bear in mind that such a system applies only to the State itself, and that when the grain leaves the borders of that State there is no authority anywhere to compel the acceptance of those grades, and it is practically as if the grain had never been graded. Let us see how the matter works out in actual everyday practice. A farmer in my State—Missouri—has raised and harvested a large crop of grain. It has been raised on the same farm, on the same kind of land, and is uniform in quality. He ships two carloads of it, one to Kansas City and the other to the St. Louis market. Missouri, having a system of State grain inspection, applied honestly and uniformly, the result is that he receives the same grade upon his grain in each of these markets. But suppose he ships his grain to markets outside of Missouri—a carload to Chicago, another to Minneapolis, and a third to some eastern market. Each of these markets is under a different system of inspection. In each of these markets there is some variation of the standards established; and as a result his grain, though of a uniform character and quality, may, and in all likelihood will, be graded differently in each of the three markets. It is an established fact that grain identical in quality, and which ought to be graded the same in every market in the country, under present methods of grading and inspection is graded differently in the different markets. Under national grain supervision, as provided in this bill, the Department of Agriculture will in no way interfere with the various State departments, but, on the contrary, will seek to cooperate with them, will unify their work by giving to each State a uniform standard, and will aid them in applying that standard equitably and uniformly, so that grain of like quality graded in one State will bear the same grade in every other State.

ONE STANDARD—UNIFORM GRADING.

There are two important things sought to be accomplished by this bill: First, the establishment of uniform standards of grades for grain, so that the same quality of wheat, or corn, or oats, or any other grain in any market in any State in the Union will be given the same grade. It is uniformly agreed that the only agency that can fix and establish a satisfactory standard for the grading of grain is the Government itself. The second object to be accomplished is to secure an honest, efficient, and uniform application of these standards in the inspection and grading of grain, and this can and will be accomplished by rigid Government supervision, as provided in this bill. There are those who would go much further than this bill goes. They would not only have the Government fix and establish the standards, but they would have the Government do all of the inspecting and the grading of the grain which goes into interstate and foreign commerce. Bills providing for the establishment of Government standards and for Government grading of grain have been introduced in preceding Congresses, and strong efforts have been made to pass those bills, but without avail. The principal objection to Government grading and inspection is the fact that it will destroy State grain inspection in the States which now have such inspection provided for by law. Again, Government inspection has been opposed because of the enormous expense attached to such a system, and again it has been opposed because even with Government inspection it would be absolutely necessary to have some kind of general Government supervision over all the various Government inspectors grading the grain at the various markets of the country, in order to insure that the grading be done uniformly and that the standards adopted be applied everywhere uniformly and honestly. It is believed that with rigid Government supervision of the grading of grain in the principal markets of the country an honest, efficient, and uniform application of the Government standards will be secured.

This bill does not seek to abolish the systems of inspection now in operation in some of the States, nor does it seek to abolish the systems of inspection under boards of trade or chambers of commerce, but it does seek to establish uniform standards for the various grains, and by Government supervision insures the uniform application of those standards in the grading of grain by the States, by boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and by other agencies.

There are those who oppose this bill on the ground that it places too much power in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, that he might be arbitrary in the establishment of the grades, and that grades established by him might be impractical and unsatisfactory to the grain trade of the country. Congress in 1913 authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to fix and promulgate grades for grain. The standards for corn have been fixed and promulgated. Let us see what course the Secretary of Agriculture pursued in arriving at a just and equitable system of grades for corn, and whether or not these grades have been satisfactory, and if he pursued a just and equitable course in the fixing of the corn grades and these grades have been satisfactory, may we not expect that he will pursue a similar course in the fixing of grades for wheat and other grains, and may we not with equal certainty predict that these grades will be acceptable and satisfactory to the grain trade?

CORN GRADES FIXED AND PROMULGATED.

On January 3, 1914, the Secretary of Agriculture fixed and promulgated standards for the grading of corn, to become effective July 1 of the same year. While these were only permissive standards, there being no authority to compel their adoption and use, they have been adopted by all of the States having State grain-inspection departments, and by the grain exchanges of all of the important grain centers of the United States except Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore on the Atlantic seaboard, where most of the opposition to this measure is concentrated. During this time the grain interests of the country have handled one of the best corn crops which we have produced for years, that of 1914, and likewise one of the poorest crops that we have had for years, that of 1915.

Prior to the fixing of these standards the Secretary of Agriculture announced in August, 1913, tentative standards which were submitted to the grain interests of the country for consideration and criticism. The data on which the standards were ultimately fixed were discussed in detail by representatives of the department at an open meeting of the Grain Dealers' National Association, held in New Orleans in the early part of October, 1913. A similar presentation was made at a special meeting in Des Moines, Iowa, called for this purpose by the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Companies; further opportunity was given to the grain interests of the country to attend a third meeting of this same character held in Washington on October 22, 1913, the day preceding the time set for hearings on the grades before the honorable Secretary of Agriculture. After a full hearing on these grades before the Secretary of Agriculture on October 23, 1913, full opportunity was given to all interests for a discussion of various factors set forth in the tentative grade rules. The arguments presented were given most careful consideration by the Department of Agriculture and the tentative grades were modified in some respect in order to meet the objections presented where there was a unanimity of opinion for such modification. There is every reason to believe that there will be the same fair and careful consideration in connection with the fixing of standards for other grains, as provided for in this bill, and that such standards when fixed will be equally fair to the producer, the dealer, and the consumer.

PRACTICABILITY OF GOVERNMENT GRADES.

The following is taken from an address of Jesse Simpson, manager of the Farmers' Elevator Co., of Danvers, Ill., before the twelfth annual convention of the Farmers' Grain Dealers' Association of Illinois, Bloomington, Ill., February 17, 1915, on the subject "New corn grades."

Now, as to the practical working of the new grades it may be a little too soon to pass final judgment as they have been in effect only a little more than seven months. However, some of the worst things prophesied regarding the working of these grades have not happened. When they went into effect last July it created scarcely a ripple in the usual course of the grain trade. Corn graded about as usual, except that we occasionally had a car of No. 5 or 6 corn which would have been no grade under the old style, but it brought nearer its actual value. The farmer was just as willing to contract his new crop of corn on a basis of No. 4 as he was in the past to sell No. 3. And the funny part of it was that just as soon as he found the new crop was of such good quality he wanted to sell No. 3. And he did it too at an advance of about 1 cent per bushel over the No. 4. Now, if I remember, one of the arguments most used against the adoption of the new grades was: How are you going to educate the farmer to the new grades? How are you going to explain to him that No. 4 corn, new grade, is about the same as No. 3 under the old? That No. 3 corn is a higher grade and he won't have any of it in the wintertime? That we had just got him educated to the moisture test, and if we changed the grade again now it would demoralize the trade for years. Results show that this was borrowed trouble. The farmer is educated. He knew when he had No. 3 corn, demanded and got the price for it. * * *

To sum up, I think the new grades have been decidedly beneficial all along the line in spite of the fact that there has been no way to enforce them or any supervision. The farmer is benefited because he gets nearer the actual value of his corn; the dealer because he has a more uniform grade, and the consumer because he gets a more uniform quality.

DEMAND FOR UNIFORM GRADES AND FEDERAL REGULATION.

The following is a list of the associations or organizations which have declared themselves in favor of a uniform system of grain inspection under standards fixed by the Federal Government, with authority to regulate the application of such standards vested in the Department of Agriculture. The majority of these associations favor a system of supervision by the Federal Government, although others are much more radical in their views and believe that the Federal Government should take over the entire system of inspecting and grading of grain.

Grain Dealers' National Association.

This association has a direct membership of approximately 1,000, about 85 per cent of which represents grain firms, the remainder being individuals.

Ohio Grain Dealers' Association.
Indiana Grain Dealers' Association.
Illinois Grain Dealers' Association.
Missouri Grain Dealers' Association.
Kansas Grain Dealers' Association.
Texas Grain Dealers' Association.
Western Grain Dealers' Association.

This association includes the regular grain dealers of the States of Iowa, Nebraska, and South Dakota.

Council of Grain Exchanges.

At the time action was taken by the Council of Grain Exchanges there were some dissenting votes, but a rising vote was not called for so there is no record of the exchanges or boards of trade opposed to the legislation, although generally conceded as being confined to those of the Atlantic seaboard as practically all of the other exchanges have taken action favoring standardization and supervision. The only grain exchanges opposing this legislation, as shown in the hearings before the committee, or in other available records, are the New York Produce Exchange, the Philadelphia Commercial Exchange, and the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce.

Millers' National Federation.

Ex officio: Central Kentucky Millers' Association; Indiana Millers' Association; Kansas City Millers' Club; Michigan State Millers' Association; Millers' Club of Minneapolis; Ohio Millers' State Association; St. Louis Millers' Club; Southeastern Millers' Association; Southern Illinois Millers' Association; Southwestern Millers' League; Southwestern Missouri Millers' Club.

American Feed Manufacturers' Association.
Corn Millers' Information Bureau.
Miami Valley Grain Dealers' Association.
Tristate Grain Dealers' Association.

This association comprises parts of Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan.

Norfolk Chamber of Commerce.
Louisville Board of Trade.
Indianapolis Board of Trade.
New Orleans Board of Trade.
Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce.
Omaha Grain Exchange.
Duluth Board of Trade.
Kansas City Board of Trade.
Boston Chamber of Commerce.
St. Louis Merchants' Exchange.
Providence Chamber of Commerce.
National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Associations.
National Association of Farmers' Cooperative Companies.
Minnesota Farmers Grain Dealers' Association.
North Dakota Farmers Grain Dealers' Association.
Iowa Farmers Grain Dealers' Association.
Nebraska Farmers' Cooperative Grain and Live Stock Shipping Association.
Kansas Farmers Grain Dealers' Association.
Ohio Farmers Grain Dealers' Association.
Indiana Farmers Grain Dealers' Association.

At the nineteenth annual meeting of the Grain Dealers' National Association, held in Peoria, Ill., October 11, 1915, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas the bill introduced in Congress by Representative Moss and known as the grain-grades act, failed of enactment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we indorse Representative Moss in his declared intention to reintroduce this measure, without material change, immediately after the Sixty-fourth Congress convenes; that we reaffirm in all respects the indorsements given this measure by this association at its Kansas City convention and that every honorable effort be put forth by the members of this association to secure its enactment into law.

Hon. ASBURY LEVER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

The grain trade is anxiously watching progress of the grain-grades act. If you can do anything to forward the interests of this bill, you will perform a great service to the grain producers, handlers, and consumers. The small opposition coming from State departments that have State inspection should bear very little weight. Each State department has inspection rules of their own, differing entirely from all others. This causes great confusion and gives room for manipulation of grades of grain that is highly detrimental to the best interests of the country. May we depend on your influence in favor of this bill?

BOSTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
March 25, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS L. RUBEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN RUBEY: I have already notified you by day letter of the vote of the grain board indorsing the Rubey grain grades act. The board of directors of the chamber, at their meeting on March 23, unanimously adopted the report of the grain board and voted to inform the New England Senators and Congressmen of the action taken. For your information, I might say that the action taken by the grain board on the Rubey Act is perhaps the most representative and decisive vote which has been taken on any legislation providing for uniform grading of grain and Government supervision of inspection.

In its report to the board of directors, the grain board stated that "there has for many years been urgent need for some such legislation," and gave their reasons for favoring the passage of the grain grades act at this time. These may be summarized as follows:

(1) At the present time each market has a different standard of quality for similar grades in name.

(2) Inspection of identical lots of grain has differed widely, based on their ownership and destination, and not on their actual quality.

(3) On account of the present unscientific method of grading, there is a wide variation in quality permissible in each of the established grades in the same market. For example, No. 1 Northern spring wheat has sold on the present crop at the same time and in the same place at a difference of from 8 cents to 16 cents per bushel, which is wholly a quality difference; and when it is considered that a fraction of a cent per bushel affects a trade in grain, the importance of such loose methods of grading is readily appreciated.

(4) Manipulation of grades with intent to defraud or deceive are not infrequently resorted to by unscrupulous dealers. For example, in the case of oats, a change in grade may be effected by the addition of moisture in the oats or their adulteration by mixing them with lower-priced grain or other foreign material. Such practices have resulted in seizures and confiscation by the Federal authorities of numerous car lots of such oats.

Further evidence of the deception and manipulation under present methods of grading and inspection is offered in the following case: Advance sales of No. 2 Hard and No. 2 Red Winter wheat were freely made to foreign buyers prior to harvest for shipment during the summer and fall of 1915. Unfavorable weather conditions resulted in badly damaging the crop, and receipts of the above-mentioned grades in the principal markets when the new crop moved were inconsiderable. Nevertheless certificates were issued grading very inferior wheat as No. 2 Hard and No. 2 Red Winter, and shipments were made to apply against these foreign sales, and buyers paid for their purchases based on the certificates, which are final as to evidence of quality on such contracts, only to find on receipt of shipments abroad that much of the grain was worthless, or of very inferior quality, as compared with their understanding of what the grain should be. These transactions have resulted in protests being lodged with our ambassadors for transmission to the Department of State.

(5) The proposed legislation has the support of the Grain Dealers' National Association, a body of 3,300 members, dealers in grain, representing practically every State in the Union; the Millers' National Federation, embracing thousands of flour millers; and many of the principal grain-trade organizations in the large grain centers of the country.

The board of directors of this chamber, appreciating the far-reaching effect which the proposed legislation would have on New England alone, which buys annually of outside sections not less than 50,000,000 bushels of oats and 100,000,000 bushels of corn, unanimously voted to adopt the report of the grain board and to urge the New England Congressmen to favor its passage.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES A. MCKIBBEN,
Secretary.

We respectfully urge you to do all that is possible to secure enactment of the Moss grain-grades bill during the present session of Congress. The proper Federal supervision of grain inspection is of the utmost importance to the milling industry and the grain trade of the United States and further to defer enactment of this important legislation will merely delay much needed relief.

MISSOURI GRAIN DEALERS' ASSOCIATION,
Mexico, Mo., December 20, 1915.

Hon. THOMAS L. RUBEY,
Representative in Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have been advised that Congressman R. W. Moss of Indiana has introduced a bill in the House of Representatives under No. H. R. 4646, which provides that the United States Department of Agriculture shall establish a uniform standard of grades on all cereals entering into interstate and export commerce, and further provides for the supervision of such inspection.

This bill is not a new one to yourself or the grain trade, as it was introduced at the last session of Congress and passed the House by a large majority, but owing to the short session was not acted upon by the Senate.

The grain and milling trade has considered and discussed this bill thoroughly and have given it practically their unanimous indorsement. In the State of Missouri it has been unanimously indorsed by the Missouri Grain Dealers' Association, the Kansas City Board of Trade, and the St. Louis Merchants' Exchange.

Being a Representative of one of the largest grain-producing States, I trust you will give this bill your earnest support and urge it to be enacted at an early date, as it is of great importance to all grain-producing States. I should be pleased to give you any information you desire in regard to the grain trade of Missouri.

Sincerely, yours,

J. A. GUNNELL, Secretary.

NEW YORK STATE MILLERS' ASSOCIATION, CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Buffalo, April 18, 1916.

To the honorable Members of Committee on Agriculture,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the many indorsements of Federal supervision as proposed by the grain-grades bills now before Congress, and especially to the recent indorsement of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, which so outlines the imperative necessity for this legislation, we desire to say that we concur in their statement:

"We are in favor of Government supervision of grain inspection for the same reason that the honest shippers of the country favored the abolition of the rebate."

We believe that the grain-grades bills now before Congress would abolish favoritism shown a few at the expense of the many, and would largely abolish grain-inspection abuses as practices in our domestic markets, and as have been so bitterly complained of in recent years by foreign purchasers of American grain. This last situation we believe may now be called an international disgrace as practiced, especially during the current crop year.

We trust this legislation may have your active support.

Very respectfully, yours,

NEW YORK STATE MILLERS' ASSN.,
W. V. HAMILTON, President.

ST. LOUIS MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE,
St. Louis, Mo., January 14, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS L. RUBEY,
Washington:

On behalf of officers and members Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis urge you to use your best efforts to secure immediate reporting of Moss grain-grades bill by committee. Moss bill of great importance to grain and milling interests.

EUGENE SMITH,
Secretary.

The executive committee of the Texas Grain Dealers' Association, in session April 22, 1916, passed a resolution instructing the secretary to take up with the Senators and Congressmen from Texas the matter of urging the passage of the Rubey bill or the grain-grades act at this session of Congress.

At the annual convention of the Western Grain Dealers' Association, held at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, April 14–15, 1916, O. K. Morrison, of South English, Iowa, read an instructive paper on country grain-trade efficiency, in which he said:

Grain should be bought by grade, the same as it is sold. Paying the same price for all kinds of oats or other grains is one of the most damaging influences against the work that is being done to have better grain raised and to have better care after it is raised. Don't be too hasty in naming the grade on the grain. You can't do it by glancing at it. That is nothing more than guesswork, and guesswork is often very expensive. It would seem that there is considerable guesswork in the terminal markets, from the frequent notices we get that the grade has been raised or lowered. It is true that many times carloads can not be properly graded on account of being too full or some other good reason, but I can see no good reason why the grain can not be properly graded when delivered in wagons to the elevators.

The membership of the Western Grain Dealers' Association includes the regular grain dealers of the States of Iowa, Nebraska, and South Dakota.

At the annual convention of the Western Grain Dealers' Association, held at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, April 14–15, 1916, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas there is pending before Congress the Rubey bill, which bill is substantially the same as that known to the trade as the Moss bill, or grain-grades act; and

Whereas this association has heretofore gone on record as favoring the Moss bill, which is designed to bring about supervision of grain inspection by the Federal Government:

Resolved, That we reaffirm our position with reference to this bill, which has been favorably reported by the House Committee on Agriculture and is now on the calendar awaiting action.

The membership of the Western Grain Dealers' Association includes the regular grain dealers of the States of Iowa, Nebraska, and South Dakota.

The National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Associations made the following recommendations to the Secretary of Agriculture concerning the inspection of grain:

We, the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Associations, in special session, Chicago, December 10, 1913, having duly considered the wishes of our constituents in several States as expressed by them in letters and in personal interview, respectfully submit the following recommendations to the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture of the United States of America: We recommend that a law be enacted by Congress of the United States providing—

First. That the inspection of grain entering into interstate commerce shall be made by the Federal Government.

Second. That the chief and all other inspectors shall be appointed under civil-service rules.

Third. That the rules of the pure food and drugs act shall not be applied to grain in its natural state.

NATIONAL COUNCIL FARMERS' COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS.
J. W. SHORTHILL, President.
H. W. DANFORTH, Vice President.
W. J. RAY, Secretary.

The National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Associations is composed of State associations of farmers' elevator companies in Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota, and Kansas.

Mr. H. W. Danforth, president of the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Associations, in his address at the third annual meeting on November 29 to December 2, 1915, of the National Conference on Marketing and Farm Credits in joint program with the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Associations, made the following statement relative to grain-standardization legislation:

The farmers' cooperative elevator companies have long demanded the standardization of grades for all grain, and Federal inspection of same. About a year ago corn grades were adopted and standardized by the United States Government, and they have worked a remarkable change in the handling of this commodity. Any manager of a farmers' elevator company can readily place a sample of corn in its right grade with the assurance that if he has done his work carefully it will correspond with the grading by the inspectors at the terminal point.

Mr. Danforth also stated that—

At the present time there are in Illinois 305 farmers' elevator companies; in Iowa, 394; Minnesota, 345; South Dakota, 435; Kansas, 242; and Nebraska, 271. The total membership in these seven States is approximately 275,000 to 300,000 farmers. Many farmers' elevator companies have been organized in Michigan, Montana, Washington, Ohio, Oklahoma, Wisconsin, Missouri, Indiana, and Texas; in all, about 347 companies.

At the time of Mr. Danforth's address the last-named group of States had not yet organized State associations, but since that date the farmers' companies of the States of Ohio and Indiana have organized very active State associations, with considerable increase in the membership of the companies.

In a report of the National Association of Farmers' Cooperative Companies, held at Sioux City, Iowa, May 7–8, 1914, the following resolutions were read and adopted:

To the officers and members of the National Managers' Association now assembled, we, your committee on resolutions, beg to submit the following for your consideration and approval:

"Resolved, That we approve of a Federal standardization of grades for grain, and favor the Government taking such steps as will bring this about.

"Resolved, That we favor Federal supervision of grades."

The National Farmers' Association, at a convention held in Kansas City, February 21–23, 1916, adopted a resolution asking for a system of inspection, weighing and grading grain, hay, cotton, and other farm products that shall be uniform and under Federal control.

Farmers' Grain Dealers Association of Illinois, in the report of the secretary, A. N. Steinhart, to their convention, which met February 16–18, 1915, says:

The new corn grades have been established, and no one has been hurt. Grade alone can not change values on the same class of grain, no matter by what number or name designated. The new grades have, however, brought a concerted effort on the part of grain growers to market a better and cleaner corn. This will tend to keep the market clear of a glut of dirty, low-grade stuff. Everybody will benefit, a great loss and waste will be eliminated, and the general price will be better. What we now need is Federal inspection to determine the grades in all cases, a method which will place men in charge of this work that need not necessarily be residents of the cities in which terminals are located; men who are free from all local influence and who are beholden only to your Uncle Samuel for their places and their action, such men as we have in the postal and revenue service. When this sort of inspection is in vogue there will be a chance that pure grain will go into the public warehouse under the same grade at which it goes out, and also that the grade will be as nearly uniform at all markets as human judgment can determine. Your association, through the national council, is working for this sort of inspection. They are going to get it for you, too.

The association adopted the following resolution:

That we favor the Federal inspection of grain that we may have uniform inspection of grain throughout the country.

The Farmers' Grain Dealers' Association of Illinois in their meeting held February, 1915, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That we favor the Federal inspection of grain that we may have uniform inspection of grain throughout the country.

Iowa Farmers' Grain Dealers' Association at their convention held at Waterloo, February, 1914, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That we recommend to the national council to take up the question of inspection of grain with our Senators and Representatives and urge them to do all within their power to secure a law providing for the Federal inspection of all grains handled in interstate commerce.

Iowa Farmers' Grain Dealers' Association at their annual meeting held at Mason City February 9 to 11, 1915, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That we are most emphatically in favor of Federal inspection of grain.

The Farmers' Grain Dealers' Association of Iowa at their 1916 convention held in Des Moines on February 15, 16, and 17 adopted the following resolution:

Be it resolved by the Farmers' Grain Dealers' Association of Iowa, representing 40,000 members as follows:

"That as the Government has established uniform grain grades, which have proven practical;

"Therefore this convention strongly indorses an efficient law for the grading of grain."

Kansas Farmers' Cooperative Grain Dealers' Association, at a meeting of the managers of the Kansas Farmers' Cooperative Grain Dealers' Association at Turan, Kans., May, 1914, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Farmers' Cooperative Grain Dealers' Association of Kansas in convention assembled hereby express themselves as urging Federal grades and inspection of grain on all interstate shipments, and that all appointments of grain inspectors be made on competitive examination under the civil service.

Kansas Farmers' Cooperative Grain Dealers' Association at their meeting held March, 1915, adopted the following resolution:

Whereas we believe that Federal inspection of grain will guarantee uniformity of grain and would protect the producer, distributer, and consumers in all markets: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we indorse Federal inspection under civil service.

Minnesota Farmers' Grain Dealers' Association at their annual meting held in Minneapolis, February, 1914, adopted the following resolution:

Whereas there is a wide difference in the results of grain inspection at different times in each year in the same markets which are unfair to the shippers of grain: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we request that the Federal Government establish uniform inspection for all grains in all markets.

South Dakota Farmers' Cooperative Association at their annual convention held in Aberdeen, December, 1914, adopted the following resolution:

That we firmly believe in the justice of our claim when we demand full Federal inspection and grading of grain and seeds at terminal markets.

South Dakota Farmers' Cooperative Association, at a meeting held in December, 1913, adopted the following resolution:

Whereas conditions surrounding the inspection of grain entering into interstate commerce are open to severe criticism because of the local influence that manifests itself, and the charges of a rigid inspection in, and an easy inspection out, that in the absence of standard grades inspection is permitted at any and all grain centers, thereby subjecting shipments to the judgment of different inspectors while in transit from the shipper and producer to the seller or consumer. That cars grading No. 1 at one point may grade No. 2 and even No. 3 before reaching its destination. This has a demoralizing effect on the grain trade, and confusing to the shipper until the shipper is unable to establish a grade on his shipment with any degree of accuracy; and

Whereas a uniform grade established for the entire country, and inspected by a board appointed by the Federal Government under the civil-service rules, would tend to reestablish confidence in the entire grain trade, and form a basis upon which to adjust differences between shipper and seller or buyer: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a law be enacted by the United States Congress providing for Federal inspection, standardization of grades, and weighing of grain entering into interstate commerce.

THE FARMERS' COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION OF NORTHWESTERN OHIO,
Malinta, Ohio, April 11, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS L. RUBEY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Farmers Grain Dealers' Association of Ohio, held in the city of Toledo, Ohio, March 13, 1916, nearly 200 delegates from 65 farmer elevator companies, representing about 15,000 farmers of this State, adopted the following resolutions:

"We, the representatives of the cooperative grain dealers' movement in Ohio, in convention assembled, partially express our sentiments in the following resolutions, to wit:

"That we urge the passage by both the House and the Senate of the United States House bill No. 10405, known as the 'United States grain-grades act,' introduced by Congressman THOMAS L. RUBEY, of Missouri." * * *

EUROPEAN COMPLAINTS OF AMERICAN INSPECTION.

For nearly a score of years the Agricultural and other Federal departments have been receiving complaints from Europe relative to the unsatisfactory quality of grain received from the United States. These complaints are not isolated cases, but are of such numbers and from such sources as to indicate clearly that the dissatisfaction and lack of confidence on the part of European receivers of American grain is quite general. The complaints are from the principal markets in England, Scotland, Denmark, Germany, Holland, Belgium, France, and Italy.

In this connection it is important to note that practically all of the grain exported from our Atlantic and Gulf ports is under a contract of "American certificate final." In this respect the United States occupies a unique position, as all other countries exporting grain to Europe are obliged to sell on a contract that in substance guarantees delivery in good condition. Under a contract of "American certificate final" the European buyer is without redress. It would appear that when forced to buy under such a contract the European importer would have just cause for complaint if the certificate of inspection called for a No. 2 corn and at time of discharge the cargo were found to consist of No. 3 or No. 4, it having been admitted by one of the large exporters in the hearings on this bill that No. 3 and sometimes No. 4 corn was bought in the West and exported as No. 2, the grade being raised at the seaboard. It is claimed by many that the price of grain in the United States is based upon the price paid in the Liverpool market, the great commercial center of the grain trade of the world. If this be true, and but few doubt it, then, indeed, the pernicious practice of shipping inferior grain to Europe and selling it as of a high grade has resulted in the loss of millions of dollars to the grain farmers of America.

In a letter from the Agricultural Department under date of March 4, 1916, in response to a request for information relative to complaints of European buyers with American grain certificates, the situation is covered in the following statement:

So far as this department has been able to make an investigation of the grain-export situation, the results show that the complaints of European grain exchanges, grain dealers' associations, and individuals have been well founded. It is a matter of much regret that our export grain has been below the quality required for a similar grade of grain for domestic commerce, and that a high percentage of the export cargoes, especially of corn, has arrived in Europe with at least a portion of the grain in a sour and heat damaged condition throughout, notwithstanding the fact that the corn was shipped under certificates of "No. 2 sail grade" or "prime sail," which is the highest grade of corn that the European buyers can purchase in the United States.

While it is true that some of this deterioration is directly traceable to improper stowage rather than to a too liberal inspection, there can be no doubt but that after repeated experiences of this nature European importers will not and do not bid as high a price for grain covered by certificates in which there is such a widespread lack of confidence as they would be willing to bid for the same grade of grain if they had due assurance of receiving grain of the quality called for by the certificates under existing published grade rules. It is likewise clearly evident that this lack of confidence in the American certificates must revert to our grain producers in that the price received by our farmers for their grain is in a large measure, under normal conditions, governed by quotations from Liverpool. In other words, the price for which our surplus grain can be disposed of affects the price of the whole.

The serious nature of the foreign complaints, as well as the situation governing certificates issued at an interior market, can be remedied only through some central Federal authority, such as is provided for in the United States grain-grades bill now under consideration or through a measure of similar character.

Excerpts from a few of the more recent complaints will serve to show the widespread dissatisfaction and the lack of confidence in Europe with American grain certificates.

One of the most recent complaints, under date of March 8, 1916, reads, in part, as follows:

The Italian embassy begs to inform the State Department that in the last few months there have arrived in Italy from the United States quite a number of shipments of wheat which were found to be in a very poor condition, largely unfit for consumption, notwithstanding the fact that they were accompanied by regular inspection certificates. * * * These occurrences have created a most unfavorable impression in Italian commercial circles, where it is felt that some American exporters of wheat have not been dealing with that degree of correctness customary in commercial transactions.

In September, 1915, the Secretary of the Liverpool Corn Trade Association, in a complaint to the Agricultural Department, stated:

My directors are of opinion that a serious mistake has been made; that the wheat has been given a wrong description, the same being entirely soft; furthermore, the condition, being warm, stiff, and mildewed, shows that it was not merchantable before shipment, even under the most superficial examination. The grading certificates are consequently valueless, and I am instructed to ask if your department could bring its influence to bear with a view to protecting buyers on this side, as, if such shipments are allowed to be made, buyers may be ultimately compelled to decline to accept * * * inspection.

In this connection it might be mentioned that as early as 1906 the dissatisfaction became so great that European buyers for a limited period refused to accept grain covered by inspection certificates from two export markets on the Atlantic seaboard. Again, in 1911, similar action was taken against another market on the Atlantic seaboard.

Under date of October 15, 1913, the Secretary of the Hull Corn Trade Association wrote:

My committee are of the opinion that the step you have taken is one that will place business upon a proper footing; and, so long as the grades are fixed, and are not altered without due and proper notice, we can trade with a certain amount of confidence. My committee hope that when the grades are finally adopted that they will apply to domestic as well as export business. Since December, 1911, there have been practically no arrivals of American maize at Hull, one of the reasons being that buyers here do not care to take the risk of condition.

THE INCORPORATED CORN TRADE ASSOCIATION OF LEITH,
Leith, May 21, 1914.

The SECRETARY UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Bureau of Plant Industry, Washington, D. C., U. S. A.

SIR: I am instructed by the executive committee of this association to express its strong support of the contention of the London Corn Trade Association as to the necessity of obtaining Government official inspection certificates in respect of quality and moisture content of maize shipped from the United States to this country.

I am further to add that my committee is of the opinion that these are the only terms upon which this business can be done in future.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

THOMAS W. ———, Hon. Sec.

While no complaints have been received from Germany during the past two years, owing to failure to receive grain from the United States as a result of war conditions, excerpts from complaints prior to the opening of hostilities will show the dissatisfaction of continental buyers.

October, 1913, Bremen wrote:

We received your letter of September 23, addressed to the president of the Bremen Grain Exchange, concerning grain standardization, especially grading of corn.

First of all, we express our extreme satisfaction that the United States Department of Agriculture takes such steps as to fix definite standards of grain to the purpose to make an end to the uncertainty now existing and to remove the want of reliance in the certificates now in use at the American shipping places. The certificates of the inspectors of the grain exchanges of the United States shipping places (New York, Baltimore, and others) are considered on our side with the greatest possible distrust, as they are giving not the slightest security for the good condition of the grain shipped.

Hamburg Association, in June, 1911, wrote:

The private certificates you mention were accepted here, because importers are left in the dark as to which certificates deserve to be called official or trustworthy, which latter would be still more important in buyer's interest. Receivers over here have had such very bad experience with official Philadelphia, Baltimore, etc., inspectors that it comes pretty much to the same by whom the certificates have been issued.

EXTRACTS FROM A DETAILED REPORT OF THE LONDON CORN TRADE ASSOCIATION, THE LIVERPOOL CORN TRADE ASSOCIATION, AND THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF BRITISH AND IRISH MILLERS, UNDER DATE OF NOVEMBER 29, 1915, RELATING TO THE DISSATISFACTION ON THE PART OF EUROPEAN GRAIN DEALERS AND MILLERS WITH AMERICAN GRAIN CERTIFICATES.

For many years European buyers of United States grain have expressed grave dissatisfaction with the conditions of trading in respect of the quality of grain exported on certificate. Matters have now reached a climax.

An ordinary buyer of goods is in a position not only to claim delivery of that which he had bought but to refuse acceptance of the article if the seller tenders him something which he had not bought, but the system of grading and selling on "certificate final" as practiced at present in the United States does not appear to proceed on these principles of elementary justice, for European buyers have to accept delivery. Furthermore, so far as this point of principle is concerned, a still more glaring case occurred a few years ago when German buyers had to accept in execution of contracts for oats a mixture consisting of 70 per cent oats and 30 per cent barley at a time when barley was worth in Germany 50 shillings per ton less than oats; for some certificating authorities in the United States had thought fit, without consulting anybody on this side of the Atlantic, to suddenly make alterations in their grading rules, permitting such admixture. The impropriety of such actions on the part of sellers would be minimized if monetary compensation were payable to the aggrieved parties, but under the prevailing system of trading such redress has been and is refused. Nor is the evil confined to the injury done. The most urgent representations from this side have hitherto failed to provide a remedy. On the contrary, when an international committee representing European receivers of grain brought their case to the notice of many American authorities issuing certificates as to quality of grain, the chairman of one replied: "He considered their first duty was to move their crop."

Prior to 1912 serious complaints were made against Canadian grading, but the Dominion grain act of 1912 and the administrative arrangements ancillary thereto, have effected very great improvements, so that all European buyers have now confidence in Canadian certificates, and though a great number prefer trading on sample or on standard, they acquiesce in the system of grading and its concomitant "certificate final," as established by Canadian law and carried out by Canadian practice. One very important fact which has greatly enhanced the reputation of Canadian grading is this. Both in the United States and Canada a large proportion of the crop is sold before it is reaped. The buyer should be in a position to rely upon the grading rules current at the time the deals are made; in other words, the grain, when it is reaped, should be graded on its intrinsic merits according to rules which should not be changed from season to season. Canadian law and practice embody this principle. When the weather has been bad during harvest in Canada, and the quality of the crop has therefore been depreciated, the statutory grades have nevertheless not been changed, and buyers have obtained grain of the quality they expected and had a right to expect. The London Corn Trade Association has received so many complaints concerning American grading that it called a conference "to consider what improvements are advisable in the present methods of working American business, to which conference delegates from all interested parts of Europe" were invited. It was held in London on November 8, 1906. There was a large attendance of delegates from many British, Irish, and continental associations. The following associations and organizations were represented:

London Corn Trade Association; Liverpool Corn Trade Association; National Association of British and Irish Millers; Hull Corn Trade Association; Bristol Channel and West of England Corn Trade Association; Incorporated Corn Trade Association, Leith; Glasgow Corn Trade Association; Belfast Merchants; Sligo Merchants; Dublin Merchants; Irish Flour Millers' Association; Chambre Syndicale des Grains, Graines, et Farines, Paris; Association Syndicale et de Conciliation des Grains et Graines de la Region du Nord, Lille; Chambre Syndicale et de Conciliation des Grains et Graines, Dunkerque; Chambre de Commerce du Havre; Chamber of Commerce, Antwerp; Chambre Arbitrale, Antwerp; Associazione del Commercio dei Cereali e Semi, Genoa; Verein der Getreidehändler der Hamburger Börse; Hamburg Merchants and Millers; Börsenvorstand der Borse zu Köln; Verein Rheinisch-Westfälischer Getreide-Importeure; Commissie voor den Graanhandel, Amsterdam; Het Comite van Graanhandelaren te Roteerdam; Nederlandsche Vereeniging van Meelfabrikanten, Rijswijk; Foreningen af Korn & Foderstof Handlers paa Kkebenhavns Bors; Foreningen af Korn-og Foderstof-Importorer I. Jylland og Fyn. Aarhus; Mannheimer Produkten Börse.

An international committee was set up consisting of 14 members, 7 nominated by the principal associations of the United Kingdom and 7 by continental associations. This international committee held several meetings, some in London, one at Antwerp. Its first efforts were directed to the establishment of uniform rules for grading of grain at all United States ports and grain centers, and to providing, under conditions designed to exclude all small and frivolous claims, machinery for arbitration in cases of misgrading, accidental or intentional. Among the resolutions carried at the meeting held on January 24, 1907, are the following:

"That this European international committee calls upon the boards of trade and commercial exchanges of the United States of America and Canada issuing certificates to draw up uniform rules for the grading of grain for export at all their various ports and grain centers. Further, that the said certificating bodies are requested to send to this committee for agreement such rules properly authenticated. When mutually agreed upon those rules are not to be altered, unless by mutual consent.

"That the certificate of any railroad, elevator, or private trading company or person shall not be recognized."

The committee then entered into communications with many American bodies issuing certificates as to quality of grain.

The Baltimore Chamber of Commerce wrote:

"Our board has already advised Europe that we courted full investigation as to our system, but as this chamber can not control the grading in other markets, we are not able to enforce uniform grading as applied to other United States markets."

The New Orleans Board of Trade wrote:

"The feasibility of establishing some system of uniformity in the grading of grain at exporting centers can not be questioned. The export grain exchanges, as well as the exporters themselves, should favor the taking of some action which would result in the protection of their interests and trade."

The New York Produce Exchange in February, 1907, wrote:

"It is known to you and all interested in the American grain business that at the last convention of the National Grain Dealers' Association, held at Chicago in December last, at which were gathered representatives from some 35 American commercial exchanges and boards of trade, also a representative from the Agricultural Department at Washington, it was unanimously resolved by the delegates there present to urge the adoption by all the American markets, both inland and seaboard, of uniform grades for grain both as to phraseology and quality requirements, and also the further adoption of methods to insure the appointment and supervision of properly qualified inspectors. To all the above the committee on grain of the New York Produce Exchange has given its hearty approval. Through the convention's subcommittee a tentative list of grades with quality requirements was submitted, and this tentative list as a basis is now before the various exchanges for their consideration."

The merits or demerits of a system of grading are not ascertained on a crop harvested under favorable conditions. Between the crops of 1908 and 1914 trade with European buyers in United States grain languished. Then came the very favorable harvest of 1914 and an exceedingly large trade in United States grain, due, among other causes, to the fine quality of the hard winter wheat. Even then there was cause for complaint as to irregularities in grading, but on the whole the buyers were satisfied.

In that state of mind they made large purchases of the 1915 crop, and it is important to note that the first arrivals of that wheat were satisfactory. Such wheat would to-day command a ready sale on our markets, for millers in the United Kingdom much desire to keep such wheats in their current mixtures, and doubtless the quality of these early arrivals induced buyers on this side to greatly increase their purchases. By the later export of grossly inferior and improperly graded wheat some United States shippers have secured an immediate advantage, for the system of grading and trading on "certificate final" appears to protect them from loss of monetary advantage on contracts then existing, but the loss of good repute is serious and deplorable. Buyers can not be fleeced with impunity. A buyer suspicious and unwilling can not be a satisfactory source of profit to the seller. For years past Canadian wheat has realized substantially higher prices in European markets than the corresponding grades of United States wheat, and the climax has now been reached in this further sense, that European buyers are restricting their present purchases of graded wheats almost exclusively to Canadian produce. It is indisputable that in normal times, when the harvests in the producing countries are favorable, the state of affairs which has led to the present complaints will militate strongly against American certificated wheat obtaining its proper intrinsic value in competition with those of other countries. It is hard to believe that even those sellers who are dominated by consideration of merely personal advantage can be satisfied with this state of affairs, and it must be in the highest degree unsatisfactory to honorable traders in the States who have to suffer for the misdeeds of the unscrupulous ones.

The want of uniformity in a system of grading must result in a lowering of the value of the whole crop, for buyers naturally base their price on the poorest quality they may receive. Separate grading by different ports tends to the lowering of the grades in the endeavor to secure trade.

The chief point we desire to emphasize is that grain should be graded on its intrinsic merits according to standards which should not vary from season to season. Uniformity of treatment should be accorded to domestic and foreign buyers.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF BRITISH AND IRISH MILLERS.

A. B. GRIPPER, Esq.,
London Corn Trade Association, 28 St. Mary Axe, E. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 12th instant, with reference to complaints of many shipments of No. 2 hard winter wheat from United Kingdom and continental buyers was considered by the council of this association at their meeting held yesterday, and the following resolution was passed:

"That the London Corn Trade Association be requested to interview the American ambassador, bringing through him to the notice of the United States Government the serious irregularities in recent deliveries of United States certificated wheat and the desirability of establishing the Federal grading of wheat."

Yours, faithfully,

ARTHUR E. HAWKER, Secretary.

Leadenhall Street, London E. C., November 11, 1915.

A. B. GRIPPER, Esq.,
Secretary London Corn Trade Association,
28 St. Mary Axe, E. C.

DEAR SIR: We send herewith a delivery sample of so-called No. 2 hard winter wheat, inspection ex the steamship Milwaukee. This was delivered to us this week under the official certificate.

We may say that the sample, on account of being out of bulk some time, has cooled off, and probably improved in other respects, but we think that the quality shown by it is sufficient to prove that the wheat is in a shocking condition. It is sour, hot, full of heated corns, as well as being very badly grown, and we think that as this delivery is not an isolated experience some steps should be taken by your association to protect receivers in the United Kingdom against a repetition of deliveries of this nature.

We can not protest too strongly with regard to this delivery, as, seeing we buy on certificate final, we naturally put ourselves in (their) hands, * * * and if they treat the buyers in this country in this way by grading wheat as No. 2 hard * * * which is of the description given it is time receivers refused to accept their certificates. * * *

Yours, truly,

JOSEPH RANK (LTD.).

ROTTERDAM.

To the SECRETARY OF THE LONDON CORN TRADE ASSOCIATION,
Exchange Chambers, 28 St. Mary Axe, London E. C.

DEAR SIRS: The Nederlandsche Vereenining van Meelfabrikantan and Het Comite van Graanhandelaren te Rotterdam received a similar letter from you dated 12th October about complaints of many shipments of No. 2 hard winter wheat, and we being the only receivers of all the wheat coming into Holland during the war for account of the Dutch Government they put the question to our hands to deal with.

We are sending you to-day different samples of No. 2 hard winter wheat, representing all the hard winter wheat we received from America up till now from the crop 1915. The samples are taken from the following steamers when discharged: Steamship Gorredijk and steamship Rotterdam. We had many complaints about the wheat ex steamers Beekbergen, Costerdijk, Westerdijk, Rijndam, Maartensdijk, Amsteldijk, and Veendijk. The complaints are not only to the bad smell but also to the mixture of other kinds of wheat, so that we can not rely upon the certificates, as we used to before the war.

Yours, faithfully,

VAN STOLK'S COMMISSIEHANDEL.

NEW NO. 2 HARD WINTER WHEAT.

160 HIGH STREET,
Hull, October 27, 1915.

The SECRETARY HULL CORN TRADE ASSOCIATION (Ltd.),
Hull.

DEAR SIR: We beg to inclose certificates for 8,000 bushels per Marengo, one sample herewith; 16,000 bushels per Mendip Range, one sample herewith; 16,000 bushels per Bassano Range, two samples herewith.

These shipments arrived in wretched condition and we understand the whole question of such shipments is being taken up by your association.

We have got into great trouble with our buyers, allowances of 4/– per qr. on the two first-named shipments and 5/– per qr. on the other being claimed. All the parcels contained a heavy percentage of sprouted as well as heated grain; the Bassano was badly heated throughout and more than half the bulk is quite useless for milling purposes.

Yours, truly,

KEIGHLEY, MAXSTED & CO.

BERGEN, October 14, 1915.

Messrs. GILL & FISHER,
Baltimore.

DEAR SIRS: As you will have seen from our different cables regarding the hard winter wheat received per steamship Fram, the receivers are "terror struck" by the quality and condition of the wheat, and we must admit they are right to feel so. The wheat in steamship Fram was heated to the extent that they were obliged to pick and carve it out with packers and spades, and it can absolutely not be used for human food as it is now, and it is a question whether it can be used after being dried and washed—even mixing only a small portion with good wheat. It is incomprehensible to us how your authorities can give certificates for such wheat for hard winter No. 2, and our buyers want samples sent to the London Corn Trade Association and have the question settled there if you should not be willing to settle same amicably. The captain of steamer Fram has told here that the wheat was warm already on loading in Baltimore. Is this possible?

Yours, faithfully,

A/S MOHR & SONS EFTF.,
JENS. F. KONOW.

Continuing, the report of the London Trade Association says:

The system of selling wheat on the basis of "certificate final" is peculiar to the Atlantic coast of North America.

In Russia a seller of grain for export sells on a sample which is sealed and remains available for use as a basis for comparison when the goods are delivered and for arbitration when the buyer claims that the delivery is inferior to the sealed selling sample.

In Argentina grain is sold on the basis of a guaranteed natural weight per bushel, and allowances are paid on a definite scale should the wheat delivered be inferior to the natural weight sold. An average of each kind of grain shipped from different districts during different months is made up in London, and the buyer is entitled to find the quality of his delivery, after taking into consideration any allowances he may have had in connection with natural weight, to be equal to that of the average of other grain shipped from the same district during the same period.

In India wheat is sold on the basis of analysis, and, after the wheat has been analyzed on arrival in this country, the buyer is paid for any admixture of dirt or foreign matter. Fair average quality samples are made up just as in the case of Argentina, and buyers are entitled to claim if they consider their deliveries are inferior to those of the average shipped.

In Australia standard samples are made up in each colony at the beginning of the season, representing the average of the wheat which they will ship. These samples are sent to London and sales are made on the basis of these samples. A buyer is entitled to claim for an allowance at arbitration if he considers his delivery is inferior to the standard sample sent by the chamber of commerce of the port or State from which his wheat was shipped.

It is noteworthy that in California and Oregon, United States of America, competent authorities make up standard samples of current grades and the buyer is entitled to claim an allowance for inferiority of quality at arbitration, just as in the case of Australia.

Although the countries above mentioned do not use the "certificate final" method of selling their wheat, it is generally agreed that the "certificate final" method, if properly carried out, is the most convenient and altogether the most simple method of all; but the inspection must be absolutely impartial and buyers must have implicit confidence in the integrity and skill of the grading authorities.

A careful study of the foregoing complaints coming, not from one but from every great European country, should convince any fair-minded man of the necessity of prompt and effective legislation by this Congress to the end that these abuses may be speedily corrected. The European market is the great world market upon which our farmers must depend for the sale of their surplus products. The passage of the pending bill will, I am satisfied, correct these abuses in our export trade, and with the grain of our country inspected and graded under Government supervision the markets of Europe will again be open to us under the most favorable conditions. Our producers will be able to meet the producers of other countries on fair and equal terms, and that is all they ask.

In our own fair land the passage of this act will be hailed with delight by the farmers who produce the grain, by every honest grain dealer and elevator man who purchases direct from the farmer at first hand, by every miller, and by every exchange and board of trade composed of men who seek to do an honorable and legitimate business in the grain trade.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has five minutes and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has three minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD].

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On page 40, in line 24, after the word "shall," insert the word "plainly." On page 41, line 1, after the word "him," where it first appears, insert the words "upon the face thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 40, by inserting after the word "shall" in line 24 the word "plainly"; and on page 41, after the word "him," in line 1, insert the words "upon the face thereof."

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to persuade the chairman of the committee [Mr. LEVER] to accept this amendment. I will tell him my reason. Not long ago I had in my office while I was a district attorney some million dollars' worth of splendid looking negotiable bills of lading issued by one of the greatest railroads in this country. I had them for a long time locked up in my safe. I was not at all nervous about them. They were perfectly regular, negotiable bills of lading upon their face, but they were not worth the paper they were written upon. It happened in this wise: The freight agent of that great railroad got very friendly with the greatest shipper in our section of the country. Whenever the great grain-shipping firm became a little low in funds they would go over to the freight agent and he would give them a few hundred thousand dollars' worth of fine, yellow bills of lading, and they took them over to our biggest bank, which advanced money upon them. They were old accomplished bills of lading negligently left lying around uncanceled. The bank lost vast sums of money loaned on the faith of these worthless papers, and there was a great scandal there in my town. The history of that affair taught me that the point where legislators should be careful is that these documents, which are the foundation of a great part of the finance of this country, should be guarded as pure gold.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANFORD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman and I may get together on this amendment. I think the gentleman's amendment probably is not stated as accurately as it might be. Let me call his attention to this suggestion: In line 24 make it read, "shall plainly cancel," and then take the words which the gentleman has sought to insert on the other page—shall plainly cancel upon the face thereof each receipt.

I have no objection to that.

Mr. SANFORD. I will take it either way.

Mr. LEVER. Suppose the gentleman withdraws his amendment and offers it in the other form.

Mr. SANFORD. I think my wording is just as good. I looked at it carefully, but I will take yours if you will accept the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I will accept it.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I should like to ask the gentleman if he got his money back on his bills of lading?

Mr. SANFORD. I am glad to tell the gentleman that I had no personal interest in all those bills of lading in my safe, and one day the bank sent up for them, and I found about half of them. The other half had been scattered. We finally got most of them together. They wanted them as tokens.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SANFORD as modified: On page 41, in line 24, after the word "shall," insert the word "plainly," and after the word "cancel," insert the words "upon the face thereof."

Mr. LEVER. I will say to my friend that I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the vote on the amendment will be taken at the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH].

[Mr. CHURCH addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this bill undertakes to do three things: First, it seeks to standardize warehouses in this country with a view to reduce as much as possible the insurance rates upon such warehouses and upon the products stored therein. There is a great divergence of insurance rates on warehouses in this country, due largely to the fact that there is no proper standardization.

It undertakes, in the second place, to standardize the methods of grading farm products with a view to give most impartial and accurate grade to all agricultural products. The system of grading in this country is likewise absolutely understandardized, with the result that agricultural products are suffering greatly because of it. We are undertaking here to have a system of grading for the same kind of product in every community in which that product is raised.

In the third place, it undertakes to standardize warehouse receipts on agricultural products so as to give them collateral value for borrowing money, for taking advantage of the Federal reserve act which they do not now possess.

There is no reason in the world why there should not grow up in this country a system of warehouses uniform in their character, uniform in their methods, with receipts uniform in all sections of the country for the same class of agricultural products. When that warehouse receipt issues on 10 bales of cotton in Lexington, S. C., it will be just as negotiable in Texas or New York as it would be if it was issued from a warehouse on 10 bales of cotton in Texas. Under the present hodgepodge system, which is no system at all, the farmer has no method of knowing the means by which he can take these products, store them, and in the end have some voice as to the price at which he is willing to part with them. That is the great fundamental purpose of this warehouse bill. It is an effort upon the part of Congress, upon the part of the Agricultural Committee, to give as far as we can greater strength, more uniformity, and greater negotiability to farm collateral paper, so men may borrow money upon easier terms, so the receipts may be standardized and interest may be cheaper and credit easier. So much for that.

I have no special objection, Mr. Chairman, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and I have no special objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD], but the other amendments I trust will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for debate has expired and the question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The next amendment is the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN) there were 30 ayes and 38 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee arose the other evening there was an amendment pending offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the Chair thinks there was a point of order pending.

Mr. LEVER. I had reserved the point of order. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if he can make a statement in five minutes?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I think so.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] at my request. Unfortunately I was sick at home at the time and could not be here. I regret very much that the gentleman from South Carolina has shown a disposition to make a point of order against this amendment, because I regard it as one of the most important to the arid and semiarid and subhumid sections of our country. This is an appropriation that has been made continuously for several years—I do not remember how long, but certainly for the last four or five years. I have not looked it up prior to that time.

This is an International Dry Farming Congress, to be held in the city of El Paso, Tex. That congress is made up or will be of delegates from all over the western arid section of our country and perhaps from foreign countries. There will be discussion of the processes of dry farming from a scientific standpoint. There will be many papers read and speeches made, no doubt, dealing with this scientific question in all of its phases, and it is very important and useful that the department, as heretofore, shall be permitted to make an exhibit of the investigations and processes that have been discovered by the Agricultural Department upon this very important question.

I doubt if $20,000, the amount asked for in this amendment, could be better expended than for this purpose. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will be as generous as he has been on occasions heretofore and not make the point of order against this item.

In this connection I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting at this place a memorandum which has been furnished me by the Agricultural Department showing how that appropriation will be expended, if made, and for what purpose it will be used.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

[Memorandum.]

APRIL 28, 1916.

The appropriation is expended under letters of authorization from the Secretary specifying how it is to be used.

Used to collect and prepare exhibits illustrating the more important work of the bureaus and independent offices of the department of interest to farmers in regions where dry farming is practiced.

To collect and prepare for display data relating to methods practiced at the dry-farming stations of the department, photographs of stations and crops, and crop samples. In order to carry out the intent of the law as fully as possible, material and data showing the work and results secured at some of the State experiment stations along dry-farming lines is selected through personal interviews, adding much to the value of the exhibit.

The principal expenses are those incurred in collecting and preparing and installing the exhibits and making the necessary display cases and fixtures for showing them.

The transportation of the exhibits and of the necessary experts who install and demonstrate them forms another large but very necessary item of expense.

Summary of expenditures by the Department of Agriculture under the appropriation "International Dry Land Congress, Tulsa, Okla., 1913–14."

Salaries (covering the employment of carpenters, cabinet-makers, model makers, additional clerical assistance, and labor of all kinds necessary in the collection and preparation of material)		$5,708.96
Travel, station, and field expenses (covering the transportation of persons collecting and preparing the exhibits and that of persons accompanying the exhibits to assist in their installation and demonstration)		4,265.00
Freight and drayage		1,919.09
Express		275.73
Equipment:
Apparatus	$55.85
Furniture, office equipment, etc	748.62
Miscellaneous	1,400.25
		2,204.72
Rent of building in which to prepare material		20.00
Lumber, hardware, and other mechanics' supplies		1,158.49
Miscellaneous supplies		2,154.25
Miscellaneous services (principally assistance to agents in the field)		1,414.07
Total expenditures		19,120.31

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] will see his way clear to allow this item to be considered upon its merits and not insist upon the point of order. We have for the past five years, I think, been appropriating for Government exhibits at the International Dry Farming Congresses. Four years ago the congress was held in western Canada. Three years ago I think it was held in the State of Washington, two years ago at Wichita, Kans., last year in Denver, and this year the congress is to be held at El Paso, Tex. This is the most important agricultural meeting in all the West, if not in the country as a whole. The Dry Farming Congress, as its name indicates, has to do with the science of farming the lands of little rain. Very great success has been made in this line of endeavor, and this congress is devoted to the teaching of the scientific methods under which profitable crops may be grown on land which has a minimum of moisture. The funds which Congress grants are used for the purpose of exhibiting the dry-grown products of the State and Federal experiment stations in the semiarid regions, in the fabrication of cases and models, clearly illustrating the work of the Department of Agriculture of all sorts and kinds having to do with the growing of crops in the semiarid regions. I said a few days ago in the discussion of this bill that our hope for the future as a cereal-growing people was largely in the semiarid lands. We have already conquered, I think, from fifty to sixty millions of acres from the semidesert and made of them profitable farming lands. There are at least one hundred if not one hundred and fifty million acres which a few years ago were believed to be valuable only for pasture purposes, which by thorough and scientific methods of farming can be made to produce profitable crops. Dry farming increases the productive value of those lands from a range value of 50 cents per acre per annum, at the outside, to a productive value of from ten to twenty dollars per acre per annum, and in doing that it is as though we added that much to the domain of the country.

This Congress is organized to carry on the work of teaching how this conquest of the desert may be accomplished. They teach scientific methods of agriculture that conserve the moisture and the fertility and enable the farmer to produce from a soil that under ordinary conditions would be of little agricultural value a crop that is profitable and certain.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. In whose hands is the expenditure of this money placed?

Mr. MONDELL. In the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. He makes the exhibit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of order?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that I must insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Experiments and demonstrations in live-stock production in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the authorities of the States concerned, or with individuals, to make such investigations and demonstrations as may be necessary in connection with the development of live-stock production in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States, including the erection of barns and other necessary buildings, and the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $60,000.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago when the question was before the committee on the paragraph in the bill making appropriation for the control and eradication of hog cholera, some criticisms were offered to that provision of the bill, and some reference was made to this disease in Dallas County, Iowa, as well as in other counties of the State.

Since that discussion I have received a communication directly on this question which is so concise that I desire to read a few paragraphs of the letter to the House. This letter was written by W. L. Van Meter, president of the Dallas County Anti Hog Cholera Association, was dated April 25, 1916, and the paragraphs I refer to are as follows:

As president of the Dallas County Anti Hog Cholera Association for the past two years, I have been closely associated with the men in charge of this work in Dallas County, and I want to inform you of the beneficial results of this work. I am informed that the cost of the work in Dallas County has been less than $20,000 annually, and I know that the benefits to the farmers of Dallas County alone have been many times greater than this amount.

The influence of the work in Dallas County has not been confined to this particular locality, but has been far-reaching. I feel it would be disastrous to the swine industry of Iowa should this work be handicapped by a lack of appropriation to support it. My judgment is that an appropriation should be made that would permit of the extension of the work over a large area in order that the territory now practically free of cholera may be further protected.

To my personal knowledge the automobiles furnished for this work have been used in a most scrupulous manner, and any criticism along this line is very unjust and unfair to the Government men at this station who have given such valuable service to the farmers of this county. They have given earnest, conscientious, and efficient service in the face of many adverse conditions, with surprising and encouraging results.

During 1912 the year before any Government assistance was given, 23.4 per cent of all hogs raised in Dallas County were lost from cholera. Since the inauguration of the campaign to demonstrate the best method for the control of cholera the losses have been rapidly reduced, until in 1915 only 1.5 per cent of all hogs raised were lost.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I have reserved the point of order on this paragraph for the purpose of asking the gentleman from South Carolina for an explanation, and in particular why it is that this appropriation of $60,000 is limited to those sections of the United States which grow cane sugar and cotton?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the history of that is something like this: About two or three years ago a recommendation came from the Secretary of Agriculture for the establishment of an experimental farm in the sugar-cane and cotton districts, with the view of developing the live-stock industry in that section. When the appropriation was brought on the floor of the House the point of order was made to some portions of it, and it went out. It was offered in a little different form, and the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. RANSDELL, now one of the Senators from Louisiana, made a very strong argument in favor of the retention of this item. It was retained in the bill. I think probably the original purpose of the undertaking has been somewhat extended, and I think it should be extended if we are going to carry it on at all. I may say this, that there is a large area in the sugar-cane and cotton districts of this country where there is a very great deal of fine, valuable forage that from year to year goes to waste.

We have made no extensive Government tests as to the value of that forage. Now, this item proposes to let the Government experiment in the use of native forage in the feeding of cattle and horses. Then they are conducting some experiments here and there in connection with the growing of hogs. They are doing that on a little farm of 500 acres which the State of Louisiana has furnished for the work. They have erected some buildings there, the exact cost of which I do not recall. In addition to that a portion of this fund is being used in what would ordinarily be known as live-stock demonstrations in cooperation with individual farmers in the State of Louisiana and in poultry work, hog and pig raising work, mule-colt work, and things of that kind. It is really a very important little item, and is on all fours with the station in North Dakota, where we are experimenting with trees and dry-land crops and things of that kind.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I am in sympathy with the purpose of this item, but I want to call the gentleman's attention to what seems to be a practical difficulty in the language. It reminds me of a situation that arose in the State of New York where they attempted to put a somewhat similar definition of law into the excise law. The language here is: "In the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States."

For instance, take the State of Missouri. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] announced this afternoon, somewhat to my surprise, that Missouri was a cotton-growing State, and demonstrated to his own satisfaction, in a very charming way, that it was. Under this language could this appropriation be expended in any part of the State of Missouri, because in part of the State of Missouri they raise cotton?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman very frankly that while there might be authority here to do it, I think the Committee on Agriculture would look very severely upon any part of this appropriation being expended there.

Mr. BENNET. Would it not be better to drop out the words "in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States" and give the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to use this $60,000 in making general investigations?

I want to call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina to the fact that there is no part of the country more interested in having live stock increased than the great cities, where the price of meat is always a very burning and a serious question to thousands of families. I am perfectly willing to go along with the gentleman and broaden this item in the way I have suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from New York that that is a very pertinent question. I suspect—although I do not recall the exact reason for this language—that the reason it was put in there was because in the estimates which carried this item first there was also an estimate for similar work to be done in the dry-land section of the country in North and South Dakota; and the location of that work was specified, just as the location of this work is specified in this language. I understand that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] is about to offer an amendment couched in somewhat similar language, locating the work, however, in a definite section of the country.

Mr. BENNET. That could be avoided, if those qualifying words were stricken out.

Mr. LEVER. That is true; but I think, if you are going to have a few of these stations, you had better have them identified, for the benefit of the Department of Agriculture and for the benefit of Congress.

Mr. BENNET. The matter is very important. I am in favor of developing the live-stock industry in the South, in that particular section of the country where, I understand, 242,000,000 acres of land adapted to agriculture could be utilized. I am willing to do anything I can to develop it. I withdraw my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LEVER. I am glad of that, because there is no section of the country that promises so much for live-stock raising on the farm as that section.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is the live-stock raising rather to be a by-product of the cane-sugar activity?

Mr. LEVER. I would say not. I would say to the gentleman from Ohio that this work here is really an additional agricultural experiment station, devoting its activities and energies to the development of the live-stock industry of that section of the country. That is frankly what this is.

Mr. FESS. There is a by-product very prominent in beet-sugar making, is there not?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. There is also a by-product in sugar cane, and they are making experiments as to the value of it for feeding cattle and stock.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving a point of order, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LEVER. Very well.

Mr. SLOAN. When was this first passed; was it not in the year 1914?

Mr. LEVER. I understand what the gentleman is driving at, and I will say to him frankly that it was right after the Underwood tariff law went into effect. That will save all discussion about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. Was it not passed originally as "first aid to the injured," following the enactment of the Underwood tariff law, as applied to the sugar-cane industry in Louisiana?

Mr. LEVER. I remember that was the gentleman's opinion at that time.

Mr. SLOAN. Was it not the opinion of the House?

Mr. LEVER. I can not testify as to the opinion of the House, but I remember the gentleman said so at the time.

Mr. SLOAN. The opinion of the chairman might be satisfactory on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair is not authorized to express opinions that are not germane to this discussion. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. Then, we will assume, from the gentleman's attitude, and his failure to answer, considered with his means of answering, that it was for that purpose. Now, since that feature of the Underwood tariff law has been repealed, does not the gentleman think, the mischief having been removed, this appropriation should be discontinued?

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman's suggestion argues that if it argues anything. But after all, in all seriousness, the main purpose of the establishment of this work was to determine whether in that section of the country, which has an area covering a large section, we could really develop a live-stock industry.

Mr. SLOAN. But it was expected to make it a successor to the sugar-cane industry, which was expected to be destroyed.

Mr. LEVER. I do not know about that. I do not think that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to prolong the discussion of the bill, especially at this late hour. However, I feel that this item should not be passed without at least referring to it, in order that the House may know for what purpose it was inserted. Exactly as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] has stated, it was for the purpose of relieving the distressed condition in the South caused by the passage of the Underwood bill. A Representative from the South, now a United States Senator, was open and frank in his statement. He came before the committee and called its attention to the distressed condition under the free-sugar provision of the Underwood bill. For that reason this item was inserted in the Agricultural appropriation bill. Now that the tariff on sugar has been restored, it does not seem to me that it is fair to continue this appropriation. As has been stated here, we appropriate money for the State experiment stations, for the cotton boll weevil, for vocational education, for the extension work, for the demonstration work, and for other purpses, and much of that money is available. Why, we have several hundred thousand dollars in this bill available for the very thing that is covered in this item; we already have duplication of work and waste of money in many paragraphs of the bill. Let us cut out at least one little item of $60,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. I should like to ask the gentleman how the cotton districts were brought in as a by-product, or what by-product of cotton raising could be used in raising live stock?

Mr. HAUGEN. I know of no other reason than just to mislead, that is all. The gentleman who brought it to our attention based his claim on the destruction of the sugar industry of the South, and some one added the word "cotton." I do not know why it was added.

My colleague, Mr. GOOD, has called attention to seven employees from the department in the vicinity of this station hiring two automobiles, driving, I believe, 20 miles into the country, and there addressing a distinguished audience, not of farmers, but each other. If the people in that vicinity do not turn out to hear seven experts from Washington, is it not fair to assume that they will not go to this farm or be benefited by the experiments and demonstrations in live-stock production carried on in the cane-sugar districts. If not, why erect barns, purchase stock, and employ more persons, especially as another station is being maintained in the State, and where evidently but little interest is taken in the work done by the department.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield to me to allow me to ask a question of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. I am very glad to be able to state to the gentleman that one of the most valuable by-products of cotton is cottonseed meal, which is fed to cattle in large quantities.

Mr. TILSON. But that had been used for years.

Mr. LEVER. They are experimenting with that right now, and there are some very great problems which have to be worked out.

Mr. TILSON. That is, some new experiments, since the passage of this bill, in the use of cotton seed?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, yes; they are experimenting now on the use of cottonseed meal for feeding live stock.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have certain barns down there, have we not?
Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And we have some live stock?
Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The situation is this, that if we withdraw the appropriation of $60,000 we lose our interest in the barns, I suppose?
Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, the thing to do is to dispose of them, sell them, get rid of them, just as any business man would do.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it worth $60,000 to hold on to our interest in the barns?
Mr. HAUGEN. Here is another illustration of the fact that once an appropriation is made there is no way of stopping it. Here is an appropriation made to meet a certain emergency existing at that time, but which does not exist to-day. As we all know, the tariff on sugar has been restored, which carries with it the restoration of the sugar industry of this country. Still we are asked to continue this appropriation.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What shall we do with our interest in the barns?
Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the paragraph.
Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment, in line 9, to strike out the words "in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States."
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: On page 77 strike out the paragraph from lines 3 to 13, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CULLOP: Page 77, lines 9 and 10, after the word "production," strike out the words "in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this paragraph. I think it ought to be amended so that this appropriation will apply to the whole country. The stock-raising industry is a diversified one and can be conducted in every State and Territory in the Union. Now, if it is important to encourage this industry in the cotton-growing districts and the sugar-cane growing districts, it is important to encourage it in every other section of the country. It is an industry which the country is very much interested to see that it be made as flourishing as possible.
Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.
Mr. HAUGEN. We now have an experiment station in every State in the Union. Does the gentleman believe it is necessary to establish another station and to duplicate the work that is being done by the station already established, which has been supported all these years? Why have two stations in a State? Is not one sufficient?
Mr. CULLOP. It is sufficient in my judgment.
Mr. HAUGEN. We have about a dozen items here which could cover this. Now we propose to add another one. We have a station in every State, and now we propose to add another one. If so, some one may suggest another one next year, and so on until we have two or more in each of the 48 States.
Mr. CULLOP. It is not compulsory under this provision that the work shall be duplicated. If there is a station in every State, as the gentleman from Iowa says, then we do not need this provision for the cotton-growing and the cane-growing districts.
Mr. HAUGEN. Therefore I say, strike it out.
Mr. CULLOP. I do not see why an exception should be made in favor of the sugar and cotton districts of the United States over the other sections of the country. I want to see no section preferred over another. If once inaugurated it would prove before long to be a dangerous policy and in the end a very harmful one.
Either the amendment I have offered ought to be adopted or the section ought to be stricken out on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa. It is just as important to grow stock in one section of the Union as it is in another. The stock-growing business ought to be encouraged, and I hope it will be, and the Department of Agriculture, as I believe, is the proper department to assist it. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, I shall vote for his amendment. I am glad that it is expanding its usefulness by entering new fields of work, investigating conditions, and assisting the farmer in his work so that it will become more profitable and bring larger returns to those engaged in this important branch of industry, but I do not want to see one section have benefits which are denied to others. All should be treated alike.
Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, there is much in this bill as it is amended that I do not understand, and yet I have had some knowledge of the growth of the agricultural appropriation bill. It is wonderful; we have adopted amendments here which might well have been considered by other committees, but we have agreed to them, and I suppose the bill will be passed with the amendments that we have adopted.
Nobody cares about being said to be against the farmers. The farmers are to be cared for. I represent an agricultural district, and I want to say to you—and I speak whereof I know, and I believe it will extend to a considerable portion of the States south of Mason and Dixon's line and north of the line—that the farmers do not need any guardian. [Applause.] And yet we have had trust busting; we have had all kinds of friendship and care extended to the farmer. I grew up in a farming country, I represented a farming country for 40 years, and if you think the farmers are a set of idiots or ignoramuses you are badly mistaken. They are amply able to take care of themselves. [Applause.]
Long before there was much work done on this Agricultural appropriation bill, and much that has been done I agree ought to be done, where sufficient knowledge is not had in the various communities, something new, I believe, it ought to be looked after, and it is well enough to look after it from the standpoint of Government appropriation. And yet long before this policy was thought of we knew how to raise cattle, we knew how to raise hogs, we knew how to grow corn, we knew how to grow wheat, we knew how to grow potatoes, and we knew how to cultivate strawberries. There were not as many lemons then as there are now; they have increased in quantity.
The truth of the matter is, in my judgment, understanding it to be true what the gentleman from Iowa has stated, that there is a score of appropriations here that may be utilized for the purpose that this appropriation is to be utilized, and for the purpose that any one of the score might be used in the service from the other 19 appropriations, assuming that there are 20 of them.
Now, query, how much of this appropriation is to be used in increasing the army of Government employees? But you do not have any monopoly I will say to you, my Democratic friends, of increasing the public service from the standpoint of public employment and employment of the numbers of people who are our respective constituents, and yet while we Republicans drifted along that way, you have seen us, you have called us, and you have multiplied it by 3 or 4 all in the name of economy. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. I see several Members over there who are signaling for time, but I hope gentlemen will not press me too hard, for I have been as patient, I think, as any little man can be. [Laughter and applause.] There must be a limit some time, and I want to get this bill into the House this afternoon. If gentlemen want to strike this item out, I shall not shed any tears over it. It is well known what it is; the gentleman from Wyoming was here when it was put in the bill. I am ready to vote. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that debate close in 10 minutes on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?
There was no objection.
Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this item illustrates a number of things. First, it illustrates the fact that an appropriation once made and work started under it, there is no possibility, apparently—although I hope this will be an exception—of stopping it, even though the purpose or the excuse under which it was originally adopted has passed away. This item was a sop to the Democratic brethren of Louisiana, whose industry was threatened by a foolish provision inserted in the Underwood tariff bill. That error has been rectified, not because the gentlemen on the other side have learned anything, but because they have been confronted by the stern necessity of securing funds with which to run the Federal Government.
It illustrates another thing; it illustrates how the evil effects of Democratic blunders go on forever, or at least for a lamentable length of time, even when the blunder has been belatedly rectified. My Democratic brethren set about to destroy a great American industry, and they legislated in a way to do it very effectively. Something had to be done. Some pretense of effort must be made in order to give the brethren of Louisiana who still desired to remain faithful an excuse to do so, and they made this appropriation.

Now, the free-sugar error has been rectified, not by any virtue on the part of our friends on the other side, but by the logic of necessity, and yet the reason or excuse for the appropriation having passed away, this waste of public money following that Democratic folly seems destined to go on indefinitely.

Unless we strike it out to-day this appropriation will stand in this bill as a monument to Democratic economic folly. They say that somewhere in eastern Russia there stands a tall grenadier on guard in an open field, and yet for a hundred years there has been nothing there to guard. He stands there as a monument of a former need or necessity of a hundred years ago, and so this will, I suppose, stand prominently as a monument to Democratic folly unless we strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FESS was recognized.

Mr. LEVER. I wonder if the gentleman from Ohio would give me two minutes of his time.

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. LEVER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a well-established principle that a diversity of industry is one of the most essential principles of prosperity in any community, and any community that is limited to one industry alone must of necessity suffer not only from the dangers of a failure now and then but from the lack of diversified life. From the very time the southern country limited its production to cotton to the exclusion of other production it became more or less dependent. That section needs most a greater variety of production from the farm. The trend in the greater variety has set in and is promising. It is one of the things that I have ever insisted upon, not as a man who knows from personal observation anything of the situation, but as I read it from reports that are made. Uniformity of production compels dependence for consumption upon other sections. For that reason I hope that there will be an increase of diversity in that section, not only in the addition of live stock, but other production of the farm, as well as a stimulation of all lines of industries. I wanted the time to simply say that it does not seem to me that that function belongs to the National Government, but that ought to be left to the people of the States. If it should receive any governmental aid, it should be the State immediately affected. We ought not to spend money from the standpoint of the General Government to diversify the industry in any section. I am not averse to an expenditure of public funds to open up arid lands or reclaim waste country, but I am averse to this proposal. I do not believe it is a good policy for the Government to enact a law destroying an industry, such as the cane-sugar industry of the South destroyed by the Underwood bill, and then, as a recompense, come in and pass an appropriation of $60,000, as herein proposed, to discover whether live stock can be substituted for what was destroyed. Live stock is a legitimate industry of the South, and should be encouraged, but it is not wise to destroy another equally legitimate industry in order to vote out of the Treasury this sum of money. I do not think this is necessary, and therefore shall vote to strike out the item.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation is but another and striking example of Democratic management of the Government. It also displays the striking inconsistency of Democratic theory. Less than two years ago the country was warned that the Republican tariff on sugar was not only unconstitutional but was a vicious tax upon the commonest article of consumption. The titular head of Democracy ordered it upon the free list. He declared that his tariff-for-revenue theory was to be tested with sugar and wool. In spite of protest, on the free list it went. The sugar producer, including the farmer who grew the cane and beets, as well as the refiner, demonstrated the certain destruction of that important industry. To those protests the only reply was that sugar was not a legitimate American product and it would be replaced by some other that was legitimate. To the South, so loyal to Democracy, no matter how treated by the party, it was promised to give Government aid to develop a substitute. Live stock was to be that substitute. However, while the Democracy was knee-deep in the National Treasury for cash to discover a substitute for Louisiana sugar it was thought well to enlarge upon the war and include with cane-sugar land cotton land; hence this item. Notice its wording:

Experiments and demonstrations in live-stock production in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the authorities of the States concerned, or with individuals, to make such investigations and demonstrations as may be necessary in connection with the development of live-stock production in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States, including the erection of barns and other necessary buildings, and the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $60,000.

Here is a clear idea of Democratic policy. In the interest of a free-trade plank an industry is destroyed. To sop the injured section money is asked for that section to find something else they can grow. It will be noticed that nothing was appropriated for the beet-sugar States to appease the injured for their loss. These States are not in the Democratic column; why, therefore, need there be any such recompense?

Another item in this legislation that must not be overlooked is the reversion of the Democratic policy on sugar by a suspension of the Underwood law on the free-sugar item—a proposition that repudiates not only the Democratic free-trade theory but which obviates the necessity of this item to find a substitute for sugar in Louisiana. Notwithstanding this complete reversal of a Democratic President and Congress, this same Congress insists upon its demand for this item when its grounds have been removed by an act of this very Congress not a week ago. True, the party leaders put their reasons to the war. We do not object. If Republican policies must be resorted to because of the war, we demand that degree of political honesty that will admit it. We fully recognize the attempt of Democracy to embrace Republican policies and at the same time attempt to becloud the public by claiming that it is temporary and emergent, due to the war.

A catalogue of recent utterances by Democratic responsibles is timely. The Republicans denounced this administration for its free-sugar plank. The Democrats passed it, and then repealed it. The Republicans demanded an antidumping clause in the Underwood bill. The Democrats laughed to scorn the mere mention and voted down the amendment. They now come and propose the wise interdiction against Europe dumping surplus goods on our shores. The only humor in this episode is the suggestion of Secretary Redfield to punish a foreign seller who dares to sell here cheaper than there. The Republicans established a Tariff Board against the most united and vociferous opposition of the Democrats. The Democrats strangled it to death by refusing to appropriate for its continuance, and now comes this administration, headed by the President, to say why they have changed their minds. The Republicans demanded a protection upon the dye industry to develop a most needed item of daily use. At first the proposal was laughed out of court. Even still we hear the threadbare statement that there is no need of such stimulus at the very moment when the leaders are exhausting their resources to find a way to protect it without calling it protection.

The Republicans have stood for an adequate defense and maintained our first and second line at least in second rank. The Democrats denounced it, and when they came in power permitted the Nation to lapse back to fourth rank. To-day the President demands what he calls "preparedness" because, as he says, "sparks are flying all around us."

The Republicans demanded a change in our currency laws, appointed a Monetary Commission, and upon its findings introduced a bill which was bitterly opposed by the Democrats. The Democrats took the recommendations of the Republican commission, the Republican bill, as a model, and by a fiction of law pretended to organize what they called "regional banks" as distinguished from a central bank, but with the powers and functions of the latter. The only features of value in this measure were borrowed from the former bill of the Republican administration.

The Republicans under Roosevelt and Taft enforced the Sherman law and promised to make it effective against illegal combinations. The Democrats attempted to fulfill Republican promises, and gave as its remedy the makeshift of the Clayton bill—a bill designed to keep a promise without embarrassing anything except legitimate business.

The Republicans, following the line of their policy on the interstate-commerce legislation, proposed an Interstate Trade Commission. The Democrats, following their conduct in opposition to a tariff commission, warned the country against the danger of commissions. This administration seized upon Republican ideas and undertook a trade commission.

This administration displays the most wonderful agility to make the turn. The platform upon which it was elected should be studied as an index of what it has not done. Note the tolls issue, the free-sugar issue, the tariff-commission issue, the antidumping issue, the civil-service issue, the national-defense issue, the economy issue. These are but suggestions.

The country will not fail to note the instability of such leadership. The Mexican episode of driving Huerta from power because he was a revolutionist and recognizing Carranza for the same reason will not be overlooked.

The climax of the folly of this administration is reached in the determination to abandon the Philippines. Here is a proposal unwise as an economic policy, discreditable as an international step, dishonorable as a policy of scuttle, and cowardly for a dignified Nation. While the Democrats have played hide and seek with their promise and performance and have attempted to embrace Republican policies under the guise of necessity occasioned by the war, this vacillation, which extends to Mexico and the world war, reveals the real character, and this last proposal toward the Philippines too truly tells the story of the future. The people of this country await the opportunity to pronounce the verdict.

This entire program is in keeping with the attitude of the majority in this Congress in their refusal to strike out this item, destroy cane sugar by the Underwood bill, spend $60,000 to find a substitute, repeal the sugar clause, but continue to appropriate money for a substitute; that is Democracy as now led.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will not prevail. We have been undertaking this work for three years now. We have well-established experiments under way on a 500-acre farm. No tangible results have come as yet, but we are expecting them at any time. This is an investigation, it is experimental research work, and we do not expect the result to come in a day or even in a year or two years, but it is a valuable piece of work, and it is the only kind of work of this description that is being done in that entire section. Louisiana has been the worst hit in all of the Southern States by the boll weevil, and it may be true as some friends insist that it was hit very hard by the free-sugar weevil. I do not know about that and I do not care, I am not concerned with that. I do know that the agriculture of that State has suffered very severely from the boll weevil. This item is intended to help those people diversify their industries. It seems to me it would be wise, since we have already expended $120,000, to continue to carry on these experiments for a few more years, for five or six I should say. They estimate it will take that length of time to determine whether or not that is a live-stock country. That is all there is to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 37, noes 46.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. All in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Fifteen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GANDY: Page 17, after line 13, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"Experiments in dairying and live-stock production in semiarid and irrigated districts of the western United States: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct investigations and experiments in problems connected with the establishment of dairying and meat-production enterprises on the semiarid and irrigated lands of the western United States, including the purchase of live stock, the erection of barns and other necessary buildings, and the employment of necessary persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $40,000."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that. Before the gentleman from South Dakota proceeds, let me say this: This item which is proposed by the gentleman is practically on all fours with the item that we have just voted upon. I wish to say—and I want the committee to know it—that I do not feel disposed to press the point of order, but I reserve it so that any gentleman who wishes to make it may make it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from South Dakota on the point of order.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, the organic act which created the Department of Agriculture provides as follows:

There shall be at the seat of Government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants.

Mr. Chairman, Volume IV, paragraph 3615, Hinds' Precedents, discloses this precedent:

A department being created for the declared purpose of investigation, an appropriation for the instrumentalities of such investigation was held to be within the rule.

There are several other precedents along that line to the effect that where an investigation is in order under the law or where there is provision of law for an investigation, the instrumentalities of that investigation are within the rule. I submit that on this question, and I will be pleased to cite the Chair to other precedents, the point of order is not well taken against this paragraph for the reason that the Department of Agriculture is authorized to conduct the investigation and to diffuse the information gained by that investigation. Therefore the instrumentalities of conducting the investigation are necessarily in order and within the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. No. I do not desire to be heard. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the argument of the gentleman from South Dakota is not sound. While the organic act gives the Agricultural Department the right to make these investigations, we can not infer from that that it would give it the right to establish stations wherever that department may be disposed to establish them in order to conduct these investigations. It may be possible to conduct them just as well from Washington or anywhere else, and the Chair can not assume it is necessary to establish these stations in order that it may carry out the requirements of the organic act. It seems to the Chair that it would be going into something new and unauthorized.

Mr. GANDY. Allow me to say this to the Chair before he concludes his ruling: That this item does not contemplate the establishment of any new stations, but contemplates some further and new work at stations already established.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Experiments.

Mr. GANDY. Yes; that is all. Further demonstrations and experiments at stations already established.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman is correct about that, then the Chair misunderstood the amendment. The amendment reads:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct investigations and experiments in problems connected with the establishment of dairying and meat production enterprises on the semiarid and irrigated lands of the western United States, including the purchase of live stock, the erection of barns and other necessary buildings, and the employment of necessary persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $40,000.

The Chair would naturally conclude from that that it provided for the establishment of a new experiment station and new paraphernalia entirely.

Mr. GANDY. I may say that the department has nine stations now in existence within the territory bounded as follows: On the east by the ninety-eighth meridian, on the west by the Rockies, on the south by the Rio Grande, and on the north by the Canadian border. The hearings and the estimates of the department disclose the fact that the department contemplates doing this work at different stations that are already established.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GANDY. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. It is not contemplated by this amendment, as I understand, to establish any permanent stations here, and it is only for the purpose of making experiments. When the experiments are ended, the work will be completed and finished. It is not a permanent matter at all.

Mr. GANDY. The Government already has stations established there.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand; but for the purposes of this appropriation it is not permanent?

Mr. GANDY. It is just to broaden the work.

Mr. FINLEY. Whenever the experiments covered by the gentleman's amendment are completed, that branch of the work will be ended?

Mr. GANDY. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. It is not to continue them indefinitely?

Mr. GANDY. Certainly not. That will be ended when the experiments are completed.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the carrying on of the work provided by the gentleman's amendment. But the questions raised by a point of order are always incidental to the merits of the question. It is important that the Chair should rule correctly with respect to parliamentary questions, without regard to the merits of the amendments proposed.

The amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] provides not only for the carrying on of the work which is within the purview of the act creating the department, but it also provides for the construction of buildings, a matter which is not authorized by law. These buildings can not be constructed without a specific authorization of law, and there is no authority, so far as I am informed, which authorizes the construction of the buildings contemplated by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota. It seems to me there can be no question but that it is not in order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will permit, while I may have my personal views as to the advisability of undertaking this work, I am satisfied that the point of order should be sustained by the Chair. The Chair will recall that in the item before, when it was first proposed on the floor of the House, it was in almost identical language with the language proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota in his amendment now, and the present occupant of the Chair, when the point was made, sustained the point of order in line with the reasoning of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], that there is no authority to erect buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was just about to complete his ruling when the gentleman from South Dakota interrupted. The Chair is absolutely sure that similar provisions have been held to be out of order by Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole. Of course, the present occupant of the chair would be inclined to follow those rulings if he had no other reason. But the Chair will call attention to the fact that on February 18, 1896, there was a proposition to appropriate money for compiling tests of dairy cows at an exposition, and it was held not to be authorized as an expenditure by the general law giving to the Secretary of Agriculture authority to acquire and diffuse information pertaining to agriculture. A point of order was made against the provision, but the proponent of that proposition invoked the same provision of the organic act which the gentleman from South Dakota has suggested to the Chair. The then Chairman of the committee, the late Hon. Sereno E. Payne, held, as I say, that the provision was not included or contemplated in the organic provision establishing the Department of Agriculture which the gentleman read. The present occupant of the chair thinks that has been the uniform ruling of the Chairmen of the different Committees of the Whole on these appropriation bills on similar questions, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

Amendment offered by Mr. GANDY: Page 77, after line 13, insert the following new paragraph:

"Experiments in dairying and live-stock production in semiarid and irrigated districts of the western United States: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct investigations and experiments in problems connected with the establishment of dairying and meat-production enterprises on the semiarid and irrigated lands of the western United States, including the purchase of live stock and the employment of necessary persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $40,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. GANDY. Will the Chair rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GANDY: Page 77, after line 13, insert the following new paragraph:

"Experiments in dairying and live-stock production in semiarid and irrigated districts of the western United States: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct investigations and experiments in problems connected with the establishment of dairying and meat-production enterprises on the semiarid and irrigated lands of the western United States, and the employment of necessary persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $40,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, certainly the amendment just read is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In what respect does it differ from the last one?

Mr. GANDY. The provision with relation to the erection of buildings and the purchase of live stock has been eliminated, and it only authorizes the conducting of live-stock investigations in the semiarid and irrigated districts of the West.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that amendment is subject to a point of order. It seems to me to be clearly within the purview of the act authorizing the creation of the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Animal Industry. It does not provide for the construction of any building, nor does it provide for the purchase of live stock. It provides a method of doing that which is authorized by law. It merely provides for the carrying on of experiments along lines upon which the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Animal Industry are clearly authorized to proceed. I think it would be a great misfortune if the Chair should rule that this amendment is not in order, particularly in view of the recent ruling of the Chair with respect to amendments offered by the chairman of the committee. It would greatly curtail and restrict not only the House but the committee in reporting legislation extending and expanding the department if the Chair were to rule that amendments merely carrying on the work of the department along lines which are clearly authorized by the act creating the department were held out of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will permit me, I will call his attention to the act of May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry:

That the Commissioner of Agriculture shall organize in his department a Bureau of Animal Industry, and shall appoint a chief thereof, who shall be a competent veterinary surgeon, and whose duty it shall be to investigate and report upon the condition of the domestic animals of the United States, their protection and use, and also inquire into and report the causes of contagious, infectious, and communicable diseases among them and the means for the prevention and cure of the same, and to collect such information on these subjects as shall be valuable to the agricultural and commercial interests of the country.

Now, I agree with my colleague on the committee. I feel that this is a rather important ruling that the Chair is called upon to make, because it may form the basis of a precedent in the future. I would remind the Chair that the language here is exceedingly broad, and certainly the language offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] is no more broad than the language which I have read. So I would call the attention of the Chair to the Chair's own former ruling on this proposition and the item above. The same objections were made to that item that have been made to the gentleman's item, and when the item was finally revised it struck out the authorization to buy animals and to erect barns, and then the Chair held it to be in order under the act creating the Bureau of Animal Industry. That is my recollection of the situation at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. To what item does the gentleman refer?

Mr. LEVER. I am referring to the item that we have just passed, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the authorities of the States concerned, or with individuals, to make investigations, and so on—the item relating to live-stock production in the cane-sugar and cotton districts.

Mr. BENNET. I withdrew the point of order to that.

Mr. LEVER. I am referring to the time when it was offered two years ago.

Mr. MADDEN. There was no point of order made to it.

Mr. LEVER. There was no point of order made to-day. I am refreshing the memory of the Chair, and I am quite sure that the point of order was made against that item when it was first offered to the Agricultural appropriation bill two years ago, and the point of order was sustained on the ground that the item provided for the erection of barns and other necessary buildings, and my recollection is that it provided also for the purchase of stock. Now, when that point of order was sustained, as the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, I offered an amendment which struck out the authorization for the erection of barns and buildings, and probably the authorization for the purchase of stock was withdrawn voluntarily, and then the Chair held it to be in order. That is my recollection.

Mr. MADDEN. My recollection is that there was no point of order made against it, and that it was put in the bill by some sort of an agreement under which no point of order should be made.

Mr. LEVER. I am just giving my recollection. The gentleman may be right.

Mr. MADDEN. I was on the floor at the time the amendment was offered to the bill, and it was done as a result of conferences on the floor and agreements entered into under which no objection was made to it; and I maintain now, Mr. Chairman, that the language of this amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] goes much further and is fundamentally different from the purposes contemplated in the law read by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. FESS. It does not follow that because the point of order was sustained as to certain items it would be sustained as to all.

Mr. MADDEN. I know, but my recollection is that there was no point of order made at that time.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if this amendment simply provides for an investigation along the lines indicated by the prior amendment, without the objectionable features relating to buildings and live stock, it is in order, and I will cite the Chair to a precedent. In the first session of the Sixty-first Congress, when Mr. James Breck Perkins, one of the ablest men we ever had in the House, presided over the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union during the consideration of the Army bill, he overruled a point of order to an amendment which added the words "other vehicles" to the methods of transporting the Army. The Chair will not find his decision in Hinds' Precedents, because it was rendered subsequent to the publication of Hinds' Precedents. Mr. Perkins's reasoning was this, that where a department of the Government is authorized to do a particular thing, the doing of that thing becomes a work in progress, and that the Congress may from time to time change the method of doing the work.

Now, as I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota, it simply proposes to insert in the bill for this coming year a new method of doing something which the Department of Agriculture has done for many years; and if my understanding of the amendment is correct, it seems to me that under the precedents which were collated at that time by Mr. Perkins the amendment is absolutely in order. I have no particular zeal for the amendment, but I have a zeal for preserving the integrity of the decisions in this House; and up until the close of the Sixty-first Congress, at least, that was the line of decisions; and if the amendment offered—of which I have not heard the words—is as has been indicated to me, it seems to me it is clearly in order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there can be no doubt about the amendment being in order. If the Department of Agriculture can not carry on investigations and experiments in connection with the live-stock industry and the dairying industry, there is very little that the department can do in connection with live stock in this country. Clearly the organic law of the department authorizes the department to do work of this character. This amendment is widely different from the amendment which has been ruled out of order, in that it provides for no purchase of animals and does not provide for the erection of buildings. Those were the features of the previous amendments that made them subject to the point of order. As a matter of fact, under various items of appropriation in the bill some work is being done similar to that contemplated by this amendment.

This is an amendment clearly designating the character of the work in connection with the live-stock industry that is to be carried on and performed, and it clearly within the purview of the work of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. DILLON. I would like a few minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I will take one minute of my five and give the gentleman four.

Mr. DILLON. That is a fair division. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, right now I want to state that the item covered by the amendment which I have just offered was regularly estimated for and recommended by the honorable Secretary of Agriculture in his estimates to this Congress for the coming fiscal year. Before discussing the item I want to express my very high regard for the members of the Committee on Agriculture and especially for the chairman of the committee, Mr. LEVER, for the committee has worked hard in an effort to bring into the House a bill which has for its aim the rendering of the greatest possible service to agricultural, horticultural, and live-stock industries of this Nation. However, no provision was made in the bill for equipping the Federal experimental farms in the semiarid West with live stock, and perhaps we may excuse the omission by the statement that the problems of the farmer and the ranchers on the high, dry prairies are scarcely known and but little understood by those who reside in the more favored sections of the country. The committee held extended hearings on the various items estimated for by the department, and from these hearings, Mr. Chairman, and my personal knowledge of conditions in the semiarid and irrigated sections of the West, I hope to impress you with the urgent necessity of adopting this amendment. The Agricultural Department estimated for $87,500 for live stock on experimental farms in the semiarid and irrigated sections of the West, and I am sincerely of the opinion that that sum was not a cent too large for the work desired to be done. I realize that if the item should pass for a less amount the plans would have to be revised and less work done, yet, in order that some live-stock work may be carried on on these high prairies where for the most part only forage feeds are raised, I have introduced the amendment carrying less than half the departmental estimate and feel sure that the House will agree to that amount.

This item was included in the estimates presented to the last Congress but then, the same as now, it was not included in the bill. Never was any estimate given more careful attention by the Bureau of Plant Industry, the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the Secretary of Agriculture, than was the item of $87,500, to provide general live stock and dairying demonstrations in connection with semiarid and irrigated experimental stations. This work will be of material assistance to the strip of country from the ninety-eighth meridian on the east to the Rockies on the west and from the Canadian border on the north to the Mexican border on the south, or considerable more than two-thirds of the territory included in the Louisiana Purchase. The department has nothing "up its sleeve," but, on the contrary, has spent much time and study on this proposition.

When this live-stock work in the semiarid West was first considered the Secretary of Agriculture appointed a committee composed of representatives of the Bureau of Plant Industry and the Bureau of Animal Industry to thoroughly investigate the proposition and the necessity for the work, and I desire to read you the report of that interbureau committee:

During recent years it has become increasingly obvious that the permanence of agriculture and the prosperity of the settlers in many sections of the Great Plains area and on most of the irrigation projects depend upon the establishment of live-stock industries. It is certain also that these industries must be established on an entirely different basis from that on which they were conducted under the old range system.

Under existing conditions, if settlers are to introduce live stock into their agriculture, they must correlate the animal industries with the production of crops on relatively small farms. Farm feeding of live stock must displace largely the use of the open range. Dairy farming must be introduced in many sections which heretofore have limited their live-stock industries to the production of beef through the extensive use of the range. It will be necessary for communities of farmers to work together in utilizing the available free range, in correlating the use of the range with the disposal of farm crops in live-stock industries, and in marketing their products.

To do these things will necessitate profound readjustments in the regions under consideration. Commercial grain production has proven unprofitable on much of the new land of the West, but, on the other hand, these lands are well suited to the production of forage. Different breeds of live stock must be introduced in many sections, as, for example, where dairy cattle are to take the place of beef cattle, and much prejudice on the part of older settlers must be overcome. In brief, the agriculture must in many respects be entirely reorganized, and one of the chief features of this reorganization will be the development of methods for the disposal of crops through the production of live stock.

In the matter of developing and demonstrating methods of crop disposal through the production of live stock in the region under consideration, the department is not well supplied either with the necessary information or the facilities for securing it.

In connection with the dairy industry, for example, there is urgent need for definite information regarding such problems as the most desirable pasture crops, pasturing methods, feeds to use to supplement alfalfa and pasture, and efficient and economical means for maintaining and improving dairy herds on the irrigated lands and in the dry-land sections. Some of these problems have already been attacked on the plant industry field stations; but with the equipment now available on these stations the investigations have been necessarily one-sided. For example, several pasture-grass mixtures are being grown on some of the irrigated field stations, but it has not been possible to determine the relative value and efficiency of these crops and the best methods of their utilization, because the necessary cows have not been available. It has been proved by the investigations of the department that the only practicable way of raising any of the small grains in the Great Plains is in rotation with forage crops, but unless the forage crops can be fed to live stock at a profit, neither the small grains nor the forage crops will yield a profit. While a number of these forage crops are being grown on the field stations, the necessary facilities for properly testing their feeding values are lacking.

It is frequently the case that low prices and high freight rates make the small grains unprofitable when sold on the local market. This is especially true when the quality of the grain has been reduced by unfavorable weather conditions, so frequent in semiarid regions. This low-priced grain could undoubtedly be fed at a profit if the farm system were organized on a live-stock basis.

A large number of settlers, both on the dry lands and on the irrigation projects, are very skeptical as to the practicability of dairying, particularly where the farm units are small and where abundant free range is not available. We believe that many of the irrigation projects are admirably suited to dairy farming and that dairying can be made profitable on the dry lands in many sections; but it is certain that before the dairy industry can be successfully established in those localities a great many problems now confronting the settlers will have to be solved, as the information now available regarding these problems is wholly inadequate.

The situation is similar to this with respect to the hog industry, the sheep industry, and the beef industry as it relates to the economic utilization of the crops produced on irrigated and dry-land farms under the present conditions. The information which has been secured during the past two years at the Scottsbluff, Huntley, and Bellefourche field stations relative to the possibilities of utilizing irrigated alfalfa as pasture for hogs and to the practice of hoggingdown corn has aroused a great deal of interest and is of considerable value to the farmers located in sections where the conditions are similar to those at the three field stations named. These hogging experiments, however, have been conducted on a very small scale, in connection with the crop-rotation experiments, and have done little more than indicate possibilities and emphasize the need for more comprehensive investigation. It has not been possible to conduct any comparative tests for the purpose of determining the most efficient and economical methods. Information on these points is urgently needed.

No work whatever has been done on our field stations with respect to sheep farming on the irrigated lands or on the dry lands. There is urgent need for information regarding desirable breeds, feeding methods, pasturing practices, and methods of correlating the small sheep-farm enterprises with the large range-sheep enterprises of the West. In connection with this last-named point, there is need for information regarding the best methods whereby a community of irrigation farmers or dry-land farmers can correlate their meat-production activities with those of the stock growers, who depend on the extensive use of the open range. It seems certain that if the matter is adequately investigated it will be possible to establish mutually profitable relations between the small sheep and beef producers and the extensive grower, but at the present time there is little, if any, activity in this direction.

In cases, therefore, where it may seem desirable to endeavor to establish meat-producing enterprises on reclamation projects or in dry-land sections, it will be necessary not only to have information with respect to the best methods to be pursued by individual farmers, but also to have definite knowledge as to the best way in which a community of farmers can deal with the question in a comprehensive manner from the community standpoint.

The need for information on the points mentioned above is particularly acute at the present time in connection with the demonstration work which has been inaugurated on the reclamation projects. In this demonstration work particular emphasis necessarily will be placed on the establishment of various live-stock industries. To make this demonstration work as effective as it should be information which is not at present available must be secured.

The more the conditions on the reclamation projects are studied the clearer appears the necessity for inaugurating as soon as possible animal-industry investigational work so that the results of this work may be made available to the demonstration organization.

The need of the farmers in many of the dry-land districts is no less acute. Repeated failures of small-grain crops where forage crops have succeeded have demonstrated that dry farming without live stock to consume the crops is a failure. This lack of knowledged of which kind of stock to buy and how to handle it profitably on a small dry-land farm has caused many farmers to give up in despair who might have stayed, built homes, and become prosperous producers of live-stock products, for which there is a constantly increasing demand.

Steadily the agricultural frontier has moved westward. With each series of moist years the people have gone farther out onto the high semiarid prairies, and, while each succeeding series of dry years has driven the settlers back a part of the way, yet not all the way, nevertheless each movement, if we may call it that, has resulted in a net expansion of the field of agriculture. It has been my observation that practically every homesteader on the public domain, having gone there during a series of moist years, has the idea that that particular locality is a farming section and will produce crops that will measure up with the old-established agricultural community from whence he came. The experience of thousands of these settlers has been a costly one to them. They may have been successful farmers in their former locations, but on the high dry prairies the problems of agriculture were so new to them and the weather conditions sometimes so adverse that failure was almost inevitable. We have come to realize as never before that the settler in the semiarid districts of the West faces a problem in the successful solution of which the Nation very generally is interested. Even in the irrigated districts of the West we now understand that it takes more than soil and water to make a success, for, first, those crops must be produced for which the climate is adapted, and, second, the settler must have an opportunity to either market or feed that which he is able to raise. The fact that the markets of large cities are, in practically every case, situated at great distances, and western freight rates being exceptionally high, makes it necessary that the products of the farm be utilized at home.

The Department of Agriculture, under an item that has been in previous appropriation bills and is included in this one, has, on a number of stations in the West, been conducting crop-raising experiments. This work has been of inestimable benefit to the people of the West, for definite data is now available as to the possibilities and limitations of grain and forage feeds in these semiarid districts. These stations have been conducted solely for production, and now, Mr. Chairman, we know that it is absolutely essential to also conduct them along the lines of the utilization of the products that have been raised.

Let me cite you a specific example. At Ardmore, in the district which I have the honor to represent in the House, there is located one of the stations conducted by the office of dry-land agriculture of the Bureau of Plant Industry. Late last fall I visited that station and was greatly pleased to see that the superintendent in charge, Mr. F. L. Kelso, had raised last year a very large amount of various forage feeds. He had some wheat, oats, and rye which gave fair yields of grain and made a considerable amount of straw. Then there was corn, sudan grass, alfalfa, sweet clover, and a variety of the sorghums, including feterita and kiolang, which have been recently introduced in this country. In all, I am of the opinion that there were from 300 to 375 tons of very excellent forage feed properly stacked on that farm. The farm has no live stock except four work horses, and there is no provision of law to either sell or give away this large quantity of forage feed. The only way that it will be disposed of will be when it is burned up late in the spring to make room for that which will be harvested next fall. Not a man on this floor will for one moment attempt to justify that condition, which is typical of conditions on other experimental farms in the West, and yet Congress is responsible for that waste of feed and for the setting of this bad example, because no funds have ever been provided to equip these stations with live stock. As a business proposition, I submit, gentlemen of the House, the addition of a proper amount of live stock on these farms will go a long way toward eventually making them self-sustaining.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GANDY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman want the House to understand that where there is a vast amount of feed raised they can not find the way to feed it—that somebody from the Agricultural Department must tell them how to dispose of it?

Mr. GANDY. There was no law by which the feed could be sold or given away.

Mr. MADDEN. Could not you get cattle to eat it?

Mr. GANDY. They had no live stock.

Mr. MADDEN. They do not have to have the agricultural stations tell them how to do that, do they?

Mr. GANDY. There was no live stock, no authority to get any.

If you will turn to the agricultural bulletin list you will find that no bulletins are available for the settler in the semiarid regions of the West that will give him definite information as to the relative feeding values of these forage feeds that are being raised in those high altitudes with scant rainfall as compared with the humid regions. Mr. F. D. Farrell, agriculturist in charge of the demonstrations on reclamation projects of the Bureau of Plant Industry, stated the issue plainly when he said at the hearings:

> It is not a matter of telling a man how to feed his cow, but it is a matter of telling him how best to feed her with the resources he has; how he can add more resources to those he already has; and how he can establish himself in live-stock industries under these new conditions.

Then along the same line Dr. William A. Taylor, the chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, said:

> The crop-production feature has been taken care of, but we do find a lack of ability to say to the farmer, "Do so-and-so in your dairy under these conditions," as they are able to do in the older sections.

The high prairie section of the West a few years ago was given over to the open-range theory of live-stock production. The public lands were simply used by stockmen and, while in the aggregate, the number of stock was large, yet in proportion to the vast acreage it was exceptionally small. The coming of the homesteader broke up the old open-range condition, and within a limited area the settler must succeed or fail. I wish it were possible for you to thoroughly understand this situation and to know and appreciate the struggle these homesteaders have made to succeed where, from the first, nature has apparently dealt harshly with those who sought to change the old conditions. Disappointments and privations have kept company with them and, although many have grown faint-hearted and given up, yet, as I said before, the agricultural frontier has been moved westward and thousands are fighting the fight with a determination to win.

That you may fully realize that the problem there is entirely different from the agricultural and live-stock problems with which Members of this House are, for the most part, familiar, I want to call your attention to the following table showing the altitude and the average rainfall at the places where are located independent Federal experimental farms, and then the altitude and the average rainfall at several places in the humid regions where Members generally are familiar with conditions:

There is now no live-stock work being carried on by the Government in the Great Plains region of the West. A few of the States are doing live-stock work at some of their demonstration farms, but, Mr. Chairman, those farms are not located where the prevailing conditions are similar to those on the high prairies. The experiment stations of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas are all located in the eastern and humid portion of the respective States, that of North Dakota being at Fargo; of South Dakota, at Brookings; of Nebraska, at Lincoln; of Kansas, at Manhattan; of Oklahoma, at Stillwater; and of Texas, near Bryan. The experiment stations of Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, and New Mexico are located in irrigated valleys along the foothills of the Rocky Mountains; that of Montana being at Bozeman; of Wyoming, at Laramie; Colorado, at Fort Collins; and of New Mexico, near Las Cruces. The Office of the Dry Land Agriculture of the Bureau of Plant Industry has nine independent stations, located at Mandan, N. Dak.; Ardmore, S. Dak.; Sheridan, Wyo.; Akron, Colo.; Dalhart and Big Spring, Tex.; Woodward and Lawton, Okla.; and Tucumcari, N. Mex. It cooperates at 10 State substations—Edgeley, Hettinger, Dickinson, and Williston, N. Dak.; Havre and Moccasin, Mont.; North Platte, Nebr.; and Hays, Colby, and Garden City, Kans. It cooperates with the Office of Western Irrigation Agriculture at Huntley, Mont.; Newell, S. Dak.; and Scottsbluff, Nebr.; and with the Office of Cereal Investigations at Archer, Wyo., and Amarillo, Tex. The Office of Western Irrigation Agriculture maintains stations and is carrying on investigations in irrigation at Huntley, Mont.; Newell, S. Dak.; and Scottsbluff, Nebr. The Office of Cereal Investigations maintains stations at Amarillo, Tex., and Archer, Wyo., and cooperates to a greater or less extent at nearly all of the State substations and departmental stations already mentioned.

The department proposes to equip several of these experimental stations for live-stock demonstration work. At Scottsbluff, Nebr., on the North Platte irrigation project, it desires to conduct investigations with hogs, sheep, and beef cattle; at Dalhart, Tex., a dry-land station, to conduct investigations with beef cattle and with hogs, supplementing the dairy work; at Ardmore, S. Dak., which is also a dry-land station, to do work with beef cattle and hogs, supplementing the dairy work; at Newell, S. Dak., with hogs, beef cattle, and sheep; and at Huntley, Mont., where the farms are extremely small, with hogs, lambs, poultry, and possibly also beef cattle. That, in a broad, general way, is the plan that the department has in mind in regard to the investigations in animal husbandry.

Mr Chairman, the hearings disclose that the honorable Secretary of Agriculture felt so keenly about the need of this work that he personally appeared before the committee, and from his remarks at the hearings I quote you the following:

> This year, as in previous years, I have been especially concerned with the meat supply of the Nation. All the members of the committee are more or less familiar with the situation. You know that within the last 15 years, while the population of the Nation increased 24,000,000, the number of beef animals decreased over 6,000,000 and the number of sheep nearly 11,000,000.
> The request that we make again this year for an appropriation of $87,500 for experiments in dairying and live-stock production in the semiarid and irrigated districts of the western United States, seems to me to deserve favorable consideration. Intensive agriculture requires near-by markets, or it means the perfection of marketing machinery. The farmers in the western sections are not in touch with large markets. A serious problem confronting them is how to market their products. To reach the market at a profit these must possess high value in proportion to their bulk. Apparently the farmers must utilize their products through live stock. Comparatively little has been done along this line. Only recently have the agricultural problems of the reclamation projects been carefully studied. The marketing problem is especially acute. I should like to see this appropriation favorably considered, so that we may attempt to furnish assistance.

For several days I have listened to the discussions of the various items in this appropriation bill, and I know that the Committee on Agriculture and the Members of the House generally have a desire that the Federal Government assist in the building up of the agricultural and live-stock industries of the Nation. This item, if adopted, will be of material assistance to the farmers and stockmen in the territory from the Rio Grande to the Canadian line and varying in width from 200 to 400 miles. The appropriation asked for in the amendment for all this great territory is $20,000 less than has been provided for similar live-stock demonstration work at one station in the cane and cotton regions of the South. It is justified by the report of the committee appointed two years ago by the honorable Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the proposition, and by the Agricultural Department estimates for this appropriation bill, as well as the one of last year. The greatest justification comes in the demand for reliable information as to the feeding values of such feeds as can be raised in the semiarid and irrigated districts of the West.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GANDY. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. We have the relative values in other States. In what respect does the value of forage feeds differ from other States?

Mr. GANDY. The forage feeds that are being raised are very largely different from that in other States.

Mr. HAUGEN. They are identically the same, are they not?

Mr. GANDY. No.

Mr. HAUGEN. You raise alfalfa?

Mr. GANDY. That is true; we raise a little, but we are raising fetereta and kiolang and soudan grass and other crops that have been brought in and developed within the past few years.

Mr. HAUGEN. They grow them in other States and relative food values is given.

Mr. GANDY. Not that I know of.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. MADDEN. I object to any extension of remarks under this rule.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE].

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I am glad, indeed, that the point of order did not lie against the amendment, because the amendment will be of great benefit to the semiarid regions of the Northwest. In my district we have one Federal experiment station, one that is coordinate with the State. I am well acquainted with the operation and with the activities of these two stations, and I know that a great waste is now manifest by reason of the fact that they have no provision of law whereby their activities can be directed to stock raising and dairying.

In the short time I have I want to read one or two telegrams from the manager of the feed station of Colorado in reply to my question as to whether or not an amendment to the Agricultural bill contemplated would be beneficial to the West.

The telegrams are as follows:

FORT COLLINS, COLO., April 27, 1916.

CHAS. B. TIMBERLAKE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

We are very much in favor of live stock for experiment stations in semiarid regions. Present practice wasteful and tends to operate stations at very low efficiency. United States Department of Agriculture can not afford to set such a bad example of wastefulness.

CHAS. A. LORY,
President Agricultural College.

AKRON, COLO., April 27, 1916.

C. B. TIMBERLAKE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We are in need of fund for live-stock experiments. Semiarid region is best adapted to diversified farming. Stock as essential as grain. Akron is central station in semiarid region and can do the largest amount of live-stock work for Great Plains, as it is representative of large area.

O. J. GRACE.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will be adopted. Whenever the farmer has gone into these semiarid belts and undertaken to raise oats, corn, and wheat he has made a failure. These countries must succeed, if at all, through the live-stock industries. A few years ago the Danish farmer found himself unable to produce much crops, and he was in an unfortunate situation until he took up the live-stock industry, and through cooperative associations the Danish farmers have made great success in the live-stock industry. Ninety-five per cent of the farmers belong to these associations, and 85 per cent of them are owning their own farms. This prosperity has been developed largely through the live-stock industry, and that country now is selling to English customers $1,000,000 worth of butter each week.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Then they do not need information from the Agricultural Department if they have learned how to do it themselves.

Mr. DILLON. I am speaking about the prosperity of the Danish farmer. The instruction from the Agricultural Department going around to these demonstration bureaus and places will give them information as to how to keep away disease, how to keep their stock, how to develop this industry; and you will never develop the semiarid regions unless you develop them through the live-stock industry. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this item was estimated for by the Secretary of Agriculture except that the appropriation was $87,000. The committee considered the matter very carefully and after careful consideration did not feel it wise at this time to inaugurate this line of work. The committee realized that there may be some merit in the proposition, but we thought that a delay would not be fatal to the work, and, therefore, did not allow the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That not to exceed $70,000 of the lump-sum appropriations herein made for the Department of Agriculture shall be available for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles and motor boats necessary in the conduct of the field work of the Department of Agriculture outside the District of Columbia: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 of this amount shall be expended for the purchase of such vehicles and boats, and that such vehicles and boats shall be used only for official service outside the District of Columbia, but this shall not prevent the continued use for official service of motor trucks in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, on the first day of each regular session of Congress, make a report to Congress showing the amount expended under the provisions of this paragraph during the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, on April 14 when we were discussing this bill in regard to the forest-products laboratory located in the city of Madison, Wis., the question was brought up in regard to the manufacture of vegetable alcohol, and I discussed that proposition and the feasibility of using the by-products of sawmills for the manufacture of alcohol. Since that time I have written to the forest-products laboratory and have received a letter from them in regard to the practicability of manufacturing alcohol from the by-products of a sawmill, and I desire now to read that letter, and I ask unanimous consent to insert with it a statement by S. W. Kressmann.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, that letter and statement are as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FOREST SERVICE,
Madison, Wis., April 18, 1916.

Hon. EDWARD E. BROWNE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BROWNE: Your letter of April 13 is received.

In view of the fact that the design of plants for the manufacture of ethyl alcohol has not been standardized, and many improvements in machinery and methods have been made since the present plant at Georgetown, S. C., was built, it is difficult to make any really accurate estimates of the cost of building a plant which would embody all of these improvements in its design. However, I believe that you will find the following esstimates reasonable and reliable. They are based largely on statements which have been made to us concerning the first and present reproduction costs of the two plants at Georgetown, S. C., and Fullerton, La., and on statements upon the present cost of producing alcohol at the former plant.

It has been pretty well established that, in a properly designed plant, at least 20 gallons of 190-proof alcohol can be produced from a ton of dry pine. A cord of pine contains about a ton of dry wood, so we may assume that for every cord of waste available at Neopit, 20 gallons of 190-proof alcohol may be produced. Assuming an average operation at this mill, without any disposal of waste for fuel or other purposes outside of the mill itself, we may figure on about one-half cord of waste for every 1,000 feet sawed. The remainder of the waste produced would be needed for fuel in the furnaces of the sawmill boilers.

Assuming, then, that for every 1,000 feet cut at Neopit, 10 gallons of 190-proof alcohol can be produced, the annual production which could be attained would be 200,000 gallons. Assuming, further, an operating period of 330 days per year, the capacity of the plant would be just about 600 gallons per day. This is considerably smaller than either the Georgetown or the Fullerton plant, and it is a question whether or not it could be operated as efficiently as a larger unit.

We estimate that a plant of a capacity from 2,500 to 3,000 gallons per day would cost about $100 per gallon capacity. If we assume that the smaller plant would cost just the same per unit of capacity, the Neopit plant would cost $60,000 erected.

We were slightly misquoted concerning the cost per gallon of producing the alcohol. We simply estimate that this cost will be from 13 cents upward, and do not claim that ethyl alcohol has ever been made from wood at this price. In fact, we are told that the best that has been done so far is about 21 cents per gallon of 190 proof spirit.

Accompanying this letter is a mimeographed copy of a very recent report on ethyl alcohol, prepared by Mr. Kressmann, of this laboratory, who has been conducting our experiments upon its production, and in this report you will find detailed estimates of the cost of production.

We are anxious to be of as much assistance as possible in this matter, and if you so desire we may be able to arrange a conference between yourself and Mr. Kressmann, in which the whole subject could be gone over in detail.

Awaiting your further commands, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

BERNARD F. WEISS, Director.

(Enclosure: Report.)

ETHYL ALCOHOL FROM WOOD.

[By F. W. Kressmann, chemist in forest products, Forest Products Laboratory, Madison, Wis.]

OUTLINE OF PROCESSES.

The processes used for the production of ethyl alcohol from wood may be grouped into two general classes: First, the hydrolysis or conversion of the wood into fermentable sugars by the use of dilute mineral acid as a catalyst; and, second, solution processes in which the wood is dissolved from concentrated acid with a subsequent hydrolysis or conversion of the diluted solution.

Processes of the second class involving the use of concentrated sulphuric acid in which the wood is actually dissolved have not received commercial attention because the amounts of acid used have been so large compared to the processes in which the acid is used merely as a catalytic agent that the large initial and recovery cost for acid have prevented commercial development.

The first process of producing ethyl alcohol from wood consists in general of digesting the sawdust, or hogged and shredded waste, with dilute sulphuric acid at a steam pressure of 60 pounds or more for a short time. This is done in rotary digesters which will thoroughly mix the acid and wood. These digesters are of steel boiler plates with an acid-proof lining. A part of the wood is converted into a mixture of sugars, some of which are fermentable. The digester material is next transferred to a diffusion battery similar to that used in the extraction of sugar from sugar beets or dyes from dyewood, and here the sugar and other water-soluble material is extracted with hot water from the digested sawdust. The acidity of the extract is then neutralized with lime or limestone, and the sludge formed by the calcium sulphate and some of the dust carried in the extract is allowed to settle out, which requires ordinarily from 15 to 20 hours. The clear solutions are then drained off and cooled to the proper temperature for fermentation. The fermentation, distillation, and rectification of the alcohol are accomplished in the usual manner very similar to the production of alcohol from molasses.

PLANT.

The essential parts of a plant necessary to produce ethyl alcohol from wood, considered in the order of their use, are the following:

1. Adequate sawdust storage.
2. Disintegrating equipment: Hogs, screens, and shredders.
3. Sawdust storage above digesters: Acid storage.
4. Digesters.
5. Diffusion battery.
6. Neutralizing and settling tanks.
7. Coolers.
8. Fermenters and yeast equipment. (This item must be under U. S. Internal-Revenue Department approval and supervision.)
9. Beer still. (This item must be under U. S. Internal-Revenue Department approval and supervision.)
10. Rectifying still. (This item must be under U. S. Internal-Revenue Department approval and supervision.)
11. Bonded warehouse. (This item must be under U. S. Internal-Revenue Department approval and supervision.)
12. Boilers and engines.
13. Laboratory and office.

SAWDUST STORAGE.

Adequate sawdust storage will vary with the location and continuity of operation, the sawmill, and the character of the logging operation. The operation of the alcohol plant and distillery must be continuous. The storage must be sufficient to permit compliance with the necessary regulations of the Internal-Revenue Department regarding the operating of distilleries. The latter are surveyed as to their output and must produce daily the amount required in this survey or else are penalized with the tax on such a quantity of alcohol as is necessary to make up the survey. In general, therefore, the alcohol plant should have at least a 15-days' supply of wood on hand, and where logging operations are such as to require frequent shutdowns, the alcohol plant should have sufficient material in storage to last twice as long as the usual shutdowns. The waste can be stored and handled easiest in the condition ready to use—that is, hogged and shredded. Protection from the rain is sufficient, and any type of open-walled but covered building would answer the purpose. Belt conveyers can be used to handle the material, and a long, open, covered shed with an inclined bottom sloping into a trough, similar to those used for the storage of sugar beets, would answer the purpose.

DISINTEGRATING EQUIPMENT.

This would consist of hogs or shippers and shredders and screens. A chip one-half an inch long with the grain will be penetrated thoroughly with acid, but the ease with which the sugar can be leached out is a problem that would require attention. However, since the residual digested sawdust or waste left after extraction is ample for power production, and all engine exhaust steam can be used for heating and distillation purposes, the extra power required to chip down a three-sixteenth or one-fourth inch chip would not be prohibitive, and the greater efficiency of extraction would probably make it very desirable. After screening and reshedding the screenings the fine stuff would go by belt to the loading bins over the digester.

SAWDUST AND ACID STORAGE.

The loading bins should be of sufficient size to act as an intermediate storage for the material as it comes from the screen on its way to the digester. They should hold four or five digesters full each, and should be placed over the digester and tapered down so that the material can flow directly into the digester similar to those in use in chemical pulp plants.

The acid would come to the plant in concentrated form so as to permit tank-car shipment and storage in steel tanks. The concentrated acid would be pumped into a lead-lined tank above the digester and diluted so that the dilute acid could flow into the digester along with the sawdust. If rotating digesters are used, no special mixing apparatus will be necessary; at least we have never found evidence of appreciable quantities of uncooked material when handled in this way.

THE DIGESTERS.

The digesters should be rotating, and may be spherical or short and cylindrical with dished ends. If the latter type is used, the diameter should be double the length of the cylindrical section, so that it may be filled as completely as possible. A number of satisfactory acid-proof linings are obtainable at present. During cooking the mass shrinks in volume and settles so that the final volume is only about two-thirds the original volume and leaves ample room for thorough mixing during cooking.

The size of the digesters will be governed by the daily capacity of the plant, the heating period, and the time of the complete cycle per digester. If the heating period is 15 minutes out of a total of 1 hour for each cook, 4 digesters, or multiples of 4, should be used, whereas if the heating period is 20 minutes out of a total of 1 hour only 3 or multiples of 3 should be used. In this way the steam load on the boilers will be as uniform as possible and the boiler capacity will be dictated largely by this load, since the rest of the load for power and distillation purposes will be generally constant. In addition, the hogging, shredding, and digester capacity of the plant should be such that it will give sufficient digested sawdust in 18 or 20 hours to run the rest of the plant 24 hours, thereby giving time for repairs and breakdowns.

The cooked sawdust can be discharged merely by rotating the digester, and falls into a bin which receives the cooked material from all the digesters and from which it goes by a mechanical conveyer to the different cells of the diffusion battery.

DIFFUSION BATTERY.

Closed cells, similar to those used for the extraction of sugar beets or dyewood chips, can be used. These should be lined so as to be acid resistent like the digesters and the top and bottom should be arranged so that charging and discharging can be readily accomplished. Cells of this type can be obtained in which the extracted material will empty itself after a release of the bottom of the cell. The temperature of the extracting water should be from 75° to 90° C., since this will give not only a greater solubility than colder water but will also sterilize it and keep the juice sterile while it is settling after neutralization.

The size of the cells and the number of cells in the battery and the amount of water per cell will be governed by the size of the plant and the size of the material that is cooked, since sawdust, for instance, will extract more readily than larger material. As our leaching experiments have shown, seven or eight extractions seemed to be necessary; this would require eight or nine cells in the battery, since one is being discharged and filled all the time. Since the sugars are readily soluble, only a short extraction period is necessary—that is, of from 50 to 75 minutes. This time, however, will be governed in part by the length of time that it takes the water to drain through each cell, which in turn depends on the size of the cell. The cells should not be too large, or the extracting water will not pass through the material easily, and the amount of water used should be such that the resulting extract is of the proper concentration for fermentation, which is from 11° to 12° Brix. The Brix. will go up another degree on neutralization.

Just as in the case of laboratory extractions or washing of precipitates, a large number of extractions or washings with small amounts of liquid will give a better extraction or more thorough washing and a more concentrated extract than fewer extractions with larger amounts of extracting water for each extraction.

NEUTRALIZATION AND SETTLING.

After extraction, the acid extract is nearly neutralized with solid or milk lime or a high-grade limestone (a magnesia stone is undesirable) and is then allowed to stand so as to settle out the sludge of calcium sulphate. This usually requires from 15 to 18 hours, so that adequate tank capacity is required here.

COOLERS.

The clear juice is then drawn off and passed through coolers to reduce its temperature to about 27° C., from which it goes into the fermenting tanks. The coolers should be of copper and their size will depend upon the temperature of the water supply available.

FERMENTATION, DISTILLATION, ETC.

A 90-hour fermentation period is permitted, so that a 4-day fermenter capacity is required. The size of the individual fermenter will be dictated largely by local conditions, such as mean temperature, and the other equipment is the standard distillery equipment in use at present in grain or molasses distilleries.

POWER REQUIREMENTS.

The steam load of the plant will be distributed about as follows:

	Per cent.
Pumps (boiler, fire, general water supply, beer, alcohol)	20
Digesters	30
Hogs and shredders	20
General power for driving conveyers, digesters, etc	15
Distillation and rectification (including all exhaust steam not used for heating boiler feed and extraction water. If large quantities of exhaust are not available, distillation and rectification may require as high as 40 per cent of the total load)	15

A large supply of pure, cool water is necessary. It should be pure for boiler and extraction use, and should be cool for use in cooling and condensing. The disposal of the beer still slops requires attention, because of the large amount of pentose carbohydrate, and also of dead yeast which is highly nitrogenous and which would lead to rapid putrefaction.

COSTS.

The production of alcohol by this process up to the present time in this country, with one exception, has not been a commercial success. The reasons for these failures have been: (1) General development of the process which includes acquisition of the necessary experience in working out a problem of this kind to large-scale operation; (2) promotional difficulties (at least one plant was built in this country by promoters ignorant of the requirements of an operation of this type); and (3) lack of technical experts in this field who have had the necessary chemical, engineering, and bacteriological skill to develop the operation.

With new developments at the Forest Products Laboratory, allowing the necessary manufacturing losses involved in extraction, in the sludge of the settled juice, and in distillation and rectification losses, which combined should not be 20 per cent of the total yields, a yield of over 20 gallons per dry ton has been obtained. Assuming this yield and a location where the supply of waste is uniform and constant for a period of 20 years and where plenty of good water may be had, and where there is a fairly close supply of sulphuric acid and lime, the cost of alcohol from wood in a properly designed and constructed plant of 2,500 or 3,000 gallons per day capacity, is estimated per gallon of 190 proof as follows:

Yeast nutrients (this item may go as high as $0.035 in some sections since the war; also rapidly advancing prices of iron, steel, and copper, particularly the latter, will require some increases in the estimate, which were figures for market conditions existing over a year ago)	$0.015 to	$0.020
Repairs and materials (exclusive of fuel and wood)	.030 to	.040
Labor	.015 to	.030
Wood and fuel	.020 to	.020
Interest at 7 per cent	.019 to	.020
Depreciation at 10 per cent	.023 to	.035
Overhead, taxes, etc	.015 to	.030
Total	.137 to	.195

In the above table wood has been valued at $0.40 per cord of 1,800 pounds of dry wood per cord. This should consist of sawdust and hogged refuse, but should not contain over 10 per cent of bark, since the yield of sugars and alcohol from bark is very low. A large quantity of bark would mean running a large volume of inert material through the alcohol plant at considerable expense without return, and in the case of most barks would add large quantities of undesirable tannin to the solution to be fermented.

A successful operation for the production of alcohol from wood in addition requires a sufficient daily supply of wood to produce about 1,500 gallons of 95 per cent alcohol or more per day. This means 75 tons of dry wood (or its equivalent in the air-dry or green condition), comparatively free from bark, or 100 tons per day of mixed sawmill waste. A plant smaller than this would increase the distillation and rectification costs to a questionable figure, because continuous operation would no longer be possible in standard types of apparatus. A plant of the above size would cost from $200,000 to $250,000, and a plant of 3,000 gallons per day would cost around $300,000.

Before the war alcohol for denaturing purposes could be obtained in quantity for $0.30 per 188 to 190 proof gallon; at present the market value is $0.50 to $0.55 per gallon for small lots, with no doubt appreciable shading for contracts in quantity. The price, however, has gone up from 33⅓ to 50 per cent, and as long as the war continues no appreciable decrease in price seems probable because of the demands for grain and molasses for other purposes and because of the enormous amounts of alcohol being used. Before the war from 10,000,000 to 11,000,000 gallons of denatured alcohol were being produced annually. This production has now increased to over 30,000,000 gallons.

Under normal operating conditions most mills, particularly the large ones, produce waste in excess of their own power requirements, and in large mills equipped with efficient power plants this excess will be from 50 to 65 per cent of the total produced. The disposal of this waste by means of a burner is therefore almost invariably necessary. The cost of burning this waste varies widely with the size and efficiency of the mill, but from figures gathered by this laboratory this expense ranges from $0.50 to $0.66 per cord, or from $0.11 to $0.22 per thousand feet on all of the lumber cut, and means that the present cost of waste disposal amounts to about $8,000,000 annually, in addition to the value of the wood so burned. All waste therefore that could be disposed of for the production of alcohol would not only net the sawmill about $0.40 per cord but would also relieve them of the charge of burning, which, as given above, ranges from $0.30 to $0.66 per cord, and which therefore practically doubles the above realization to the sawmill. In other words, an operation of this kind in conjunction with the sawmill would add from $0.22 to $0.45 per thousand to the value of all lumber cut. This applied particularly to mills cutting coniferous species to which the above alcohol yield and waste-disposal figures apply. From work going on at present it seems that the yields from some of the hardwoods will not be as great as those obtained from the coniferous species.

In conclusion, the successful production of ethyl alcohol from sawdust seems to depend upon the proper design, equipment, and management of the plant, in addition to its chemical and fermentological features. Large volumes of low-grade materials must be handled quickly and efficiently under unusual technical conditions. The perfection of the necessary acid-resisting pieces of apparatus along with the experience of the plants that have been built, together with the utilization of material whose mere removal at present is an expense, justifies a serious consideration of the future of this industry.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota that he be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Army bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a memorandum issued by the Department of State in relation to armed belligerent vessels.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the matter indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the fact that the memorandum concerning armed ships was inserted in the RECORD of this morning in the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The memorandum has already been acted upon by the committee.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, if it was inserted this morning I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from New York will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of line 6, page 78, the following as an extension of the paragraph:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to report to Congress on or before July 1, 1916, a complete list of the names and occupational assignments of all persons employed in the department as scientists, experts, specialists, or otherwise, not provided for on the statutory roll, together with the amounts paid to them per annum or for such special services as they may render; and in reporting such list the Secretary of Agriculture shall designate the subdivisions of the Department of Agriculture to which such employees are assigned, and he shall also indicate whether the appointment of such employees was by Executive order or otherwise, the date of appointment to be given in each case."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. I would rather make the point of order outright. It is subject to a point of order. I think we can finish this afternoon.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On what ground does the gentleman from South Carolina contend that it is subject to a point of order?

Mr. LEVER. On the ground that it is not germane to this paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can offer it, then, as a new paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman can do that, but he has now offered it as an amendment to this paragraph. It is new legislation, in addition to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair holds that it is out of order at the present time, I shall offer it as a new paragraph. It is near adjourning time, and I want to save time, not take up time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his amendment at this time?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will do that by unanimous consent and offer it again as a separate paragraph. I ask the privilege of introducing it as a new paragraph at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his amendment.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer it as a new paragraph. Am I recognized now?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment as a new paragraph also.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves a point of order on the amendment as a new paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not object to my stating why I offer this amendment?

Mr. LEVER. No. Let the gentleman go ahead.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have undertaken to offer an amendment substantially in this language to each one of the three amendments that were forced through the House under the rule, because it seemed to me that in the matter of lump-sum appropriations the House should be advised as to the amount of salaries paid, as to the number of offices filled, and as to the duties performed. Now I offer my amendment to the Agricultural bill itself, for reasons which I shall endeavor to explain.

All through the many pages of this Agricultural appropriation bill, consideration of which is now approaching a close, there will be found lump-sum appropriations for demonstration work, for experimental work, for field work, with nothing whatever about the number of employees engaged in that kind of work, and nothing of the method of employment or of appointment, and nothing of the salaries, such as we require with respect to other departments of the Government Why should we not occasionally have a report from the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to the people employed under these lump-sum appropriations?

Let me illustrate by referring to that feature of the Agricultural Department work which may be called the migratory bird law bureau. The department is there undertaking to enforce a law which has been declared unconstitutional by the United States courts. I find, on page 7898 of the RECORD, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] inserted from some report a statement as to the number of people employed and the purpose for which they are employed on the enforcement of the migratory-bird law, which has been declared unconstitutional. Provision is made there for no less than 220 wardens at the very strange sum of $1 per month, and some of them at $1 per annum; five game protectors, I believe, at $1 per annum each. What does this mean? There may be a reason for it. Perhaps the chairman of the committee will explain.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have asked the gentleman to explain, but I have not the time to yield to him now. Apart from these nebulous appointments of game wardens and game protectors there are at least 22 administrative officers, mostly inspectors, employed at anywhere from $1,500 per annum up to $2,500 per annum. I think $2,500 is the highest salary given here. Now, the total that was used for 1915, apparently for salaries alone, was in excess of $38,000 for enforcing a law which was not enforced. But what else was done with the money? More than $16,000 of it went into traveling expenses. Do the game wardens come in here? Do the game protectors come in here? The amount for traveling expenses is almost half the amount for salaries.

Now, what the department desires for 1917 is $56,000 for salaries, and for traveling expenses it asks for $37,000. Do the wardens come in on this? And if all this is to be done in the administration of a law which is nugatory and which has been declared unconstitutional and is not enforced, why should not Congress be informed as to the method of selecting the men who perform this alleged service?

There has been talk about "graft" in connection with other departments. I make no such insinuation here, but it seems to me that if we put 22 inspectors on the force and have 220 game wardens and protectors, with salaries and with traveling expenses, it would be well for the Secretary of Agriculture to report about them once in a while to the House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am going to withdraw the point of order and let the House vote on it, although I think it is subject to a point of order. It is my purpose presently to offer the following amendment:

The Secretary of Agriculture, for the fiscal year 1918, and annually thereafter, shall transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury for submission to Congress in the Book of Estimates detailed estimates for all executive officers, clerks, and employees below the grade of clerk, indicating the salary or compensation of each, necessary to be employed by the various bureaus, offices, and divisions of the Department of Agriculture, and shall include with such estimates a statement of all executive officers, clerks, and employees below the grade of clerk, who may have been employed during the last completed fiscal year on any lump-fund appropriation for the department and the salary or compensation of each.

We shall undertake in that amendment—and in the drawing of it I have had the cooperation of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON]—to relieve ourselves of some of the criticism which has been directed against this bill.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] undertakes to require a complete statement to be made as to the scientists and experts and others employed elsewhere than on the statutory roll. I want to call the attention of members of the committee to the fact that in the Book of Estimates now the Secretary of Agriculture is required to furnish a list of employees that are paid out of the lump fund, and that list in the Book of Estimates is always before the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. LEVER. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAPES. I would like to ask the gentleman if the various employees that are provided for under this appropriation bill and in the amendments which we have adopted or which the committee has voted for to-day—the grain-grading bill and the cotton-futures bill and the warehouse bill—are appointed according to and under the regulations of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. LEVER. They are; yes. I stated that pretty fully in the discussion of this bill.

Mr. MAPES. The experts and all?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; every one of them is appointed under the civil-service law.

Take, for instance, the general expenses of the Office of Markets and Rural Organization. We have here several pages in which the number of persons employed under lump funds is set out. I think the only additional requirement of the gentleman's amendment is to ask that the names of the persons employed be inserted. Now, we have the number and the salaries which they are drawing set forth in the Book of Estimates. I think some criticism was made of the Forestry Service because of the high cost of bookkeeping—and it is high as compared to private business, I confess—and this is true of other departments also. Yet we are requiring more reports year after year from heads of departments to be made to Congress, reports which nobody ever looks at, as a matter of fact. It seems to me it is a waste of time and waste of public money to keep on asking the departments to furnish report after report and detail after detail which very few, if any, of us ever look at.

Now, we have here a list——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say to the gentleman that my purpose in offering these amendments was as much to relieve the committee of the odium of passing improper appropriations, or being accused of it, as anything else; but I did want to ask the gentleman whether the game wardens, foresters, game protectors, specialists, and so forth, were all appointed under the civil service? I think the gentleman made rather a comprehensive answer to the question.

Mr. LEVER. I understood the gentleman's question to apply to the scientific force of the Department of Agriculture. I take it that the collaborator that the gentleman refers to, the game warden at $1 a year, would not be appointed under the civil service. I do not know about that; but I do know that the scientific force of the Department of Agriculture and the clerks of the Department of Agriculture are all appointed under the civil service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They all start that way, do they, as the gentleman understands it?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, I know they do, except occasionally when some person may be employed temporarily because there is no one eligible for the appointment on the civil-service register, as I have stated before.

Mr. BOOHER. Is it not a fact that there is a list furnished now by the Agricultural Department of all the employees and the different bureaus in which they are employed and their salaries?

Mr. LEVER. Of course. The chief clerk of the department has all that information.

Mr. BOOHER. I remember that in the Sixty-first Congress I was on the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, and there were three of those books printed, which were duplicates, and the committee reported in favor of abolishing two of them, and they were abolished.

Mr. LEVER. I am very glad the gentleman has called attention to that. Some years ago this committee itself abolished two of the three reports that we had been requiring from the Department of Agriculture, because they were absolutely worthless. Nobody read them, nobody cared anything about them, and it was simply an expense to the Government to collect and publish them.

Mr. BOOHER. There is one of those books printed now that contains the name of every employee, the bureau in which he is employed, and the salary paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent to continue for a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has fixed the time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, you know we can change that by unanimous consent.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The committee did not fix the time.

Mr. MADDEN. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire recognition?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question because of a statement that he has just made. He said the number of reports that we were requiring the Department of Agriculture to make added to the expense of the department. Now, if that be true, then a good many of the items in this bill ought to be eliminated, because nearly every item in the bill provides for an additional report on some activity of the agricultural business of the country. What does the gentleman say to that?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman misunderstood what I said. I meant to say that the continued calling upon the department to give to Congress in the minutest details reports of what it was doing from time to time, how many people it had—of course, the department keeps that anyhow—where they had been, and how long they talked at this place or that, and many other minute details, were a burden upon the department and a waste of money.

Now, the reports to which the gentleman refers are scientific facts that are gathered for the purpose of dissemination.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not the other information worth while?

Mr. LEVER. We think so; yes. If we did not, we would not vote for this bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, it is true, as the gentleman has stated, that the department does furnish a list of employees.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. And also estimates for the number of employees?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. And also for a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. HAUGEN. Which is available for the payment of salaries.

Mr. LEVER. And that lump sum is appropriated here every year.

Mr. HAUGEN. The criticism is this: The department should estimate every salary, and the committee should carry it into the law.

Mr. LEVER. Congress passed on that two years ago. The gentleman from North Carolina raised the question, and we had a vote on it. I withdrew the point of order on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, we have had a strenuous week——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I wish to offer one more amendment, which will take only a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 78, after line 6, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The Secretary of Agriculture, for the fiscal year 1918, and annually thereafter, shall transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury for submission to Congress in the Book of Estimates detailed estimates for all executive officers, clerks, and employees, below the grade of clerk, indicating the salary or compensation of each, necessary to be employed by the various bureaus, offices, and departments of the Department of Agriculture, and shall include with such estimate a statement of all executive officers, clerks, and employees below the grade of clerk who may have been employed during the last completed fiscal year on any lump-fund appropriation for the department, and the salary or compensation of each."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the warehouse bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the warehouse bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a report of the commanding general of the Philippine Islands pertaining to the Philippine Scouts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Gandy amendment to the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the variety of industries in the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARAWAY and Mr. BLACK, by unanimous consent, were given leave to extend remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the Members of the House have been very industrious during this week. It is Saturday night, and it is evident that we can not pass this bill to-night, and I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman reserve that point for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. LEVER. Let us see if we can not agree on a time to discuss the paragraph on the foot-and-mouth disease. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] have been most earnest in their talk with me, and I would like to see if we can not agree.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman see if the point of order was made and sustained to the present paragraph that we could not agree on time to debate an amendment not offered. I do not know whether one will be offered. I think there will be no difficulty as to time if it is offered.

Mr. LEVER. I would like to agree on a time when we shall vote on the bill, or on any amendment offered to the paragraph or otherwise.

Mr. KING. What does the gentleman say to eight hours?

Mr. LEVER. That would be more time than I think the gentleman can consume.

Mr. KING. But there are other gentlemen who would like some time.

Mr. LEVER. I am willing to agree on a reasonable time.

Mr. KING. Say four hours.

Mr. LEVER. That is entirely too much. Let us get down to business.

Mr. KING. There are a number of gentlemen who desire to be heard. I think in view of the fact that this is a very important question and there is going to be a convention in a week or two of all the stock raisers in the country on this particular subject, that we should have time to debate it.

Mr. LEVER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Is the gentleman going to move to strike it out, or make any substantial amendment to it? The question of talk is one thing and I am willing to give a liberal time. If there is a general proposition to strike out or increase, that is one thing.

Mr. KING. I have three amendments that I want to offer in good faith, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] can speak for himself.

Mr. MADDEN. I also have an amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have a point of order and three amendments to make.

Mr. LEVER. It will not take long on the point of order, for I know what it is. How would one hour on a side do on the paragraph relating to the foot-and-mouth disease?

Mr. KING. Well, I think an hour on a side will be all right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have an amendment to that paragraph that I want to offer.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I think I have got a line on what will be acceptable to both sides.

Mr. MANN. So far as the gentleman now knows, does he expect to proceed with this bill on Monday?

Mr. LEVER. I do not know what the program is on Monday, but I am going to try to proceed.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman made an agreement the other day about it; the gentleman stated that he would not endeavor to bring up the Agricultural bill as against the Philippine bill, if it was brought before the House.

Mr. LEVER. That is true. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph relating to the foot-and-mouth disease, and all amendments relating thereto, or new paragraphs relating thereto, be confined to two hours, one half to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph relating to foot-and-mouth disease and all amendments relating thereto conclude in two hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. Is there objection?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, Ohio was wonderfully stricken last year. Will time be given to speak for the situation over there?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I will take care of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma presented a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 10385) for printing in the RECORD under the rule, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 618).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10385) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 6, 8, 11, 12, 15, 23, 30, 31, 32, 38, 40, 43, 44, 45, 49, 69, 73, 77, 88, 91, 92, 100, 108, 117, 118, 119, 120, 123, 133, 135, 147, 149, and 157.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 9, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 33, 39, 46, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 58, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71, 76, 80, 81, 85, 86, 89, 90, 93, 94, 96, 98, 99, 101, 103, 104, 106, 107, 109, 111, 112, 114, 115, 121, 122, 125, 126, 128, 130, 131, 134, 136, 138, 139, 140, 141, 143, 144, 145, 148, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, and 155, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following:

"Provided further, That not more than $200,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools:"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following: "two permanent warehouses"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following:

"For beginning the construction by the Indian Service of a dam with a bridge superstructure and the necessary controlling works for diverting water from the Gila River for the irrigation of Indian land and Indian allotments on the Gila River Indian Reservation, Ariz., as recommended by the Board of Engineers of the United States Army in paragraph 217 of its report to the Secretary of War of February 14, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 791), $75,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, reimbursable as provided in section 2 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 522), the total cost not to exceed $200,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"For beginning the construction by the Indian Service of a diversion dam and necessary controlling works for diverting water from the Gila River at a site above Florence, Ariz., as estimated by the Board of Engineer Officers of the United States Army in paragraph 138 of its report to the Secretary of War of February 14, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 791), $75,000, to remain available until expended, the total cost not to exceed $175,000: Provided, That said dam shall be constructed as a part of a project for the irrigation from the natural flow of the Gila River of Indian lands on the Gila River Indian Reservation and private and public lands in Pinal County, Ariz.: And provided further, That the water diverted from the Gila River by said diversion dam shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior to the Indian lands of said reservation and to the private and public lands in said county in accordance with the respective rights and priorities of such lands to the beneficial use of said water as may be determined by agreement of the owners thereof with the Secretary of the Interior or by a court of competent jurisdiction: And provided further, That the construction charge for the actual cost of said diversion dam and other works and rights shall be divided equitably by the Secretary of the Interior between the Indian lands and the private and public lands in said county; and said cost as fixed for said Indian lands shall be reimbursable as provided in section 2 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 522); but the construction charge as fixed for the private and public lands in said county shall be paid by the owner or entryman in accordance with the terms of an act extending the period of payment under reclamation projects, approved August 13, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 686): And provided further, That said project shall only be undertaken if the Secretary of the Interior shall be able to make or provide for what he shall deem to be satisfactory adjustments of the rights to the water to be diverted by said diversion dam or carried in canals, and satisfactory arrangements for the inclusion of lands within said project and the purchase of property rights which he shall deem necessary to be acquired, and shall determine and declare said project to be feasible."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"For extension of the Ganado irrigation project on the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona for the irrigation of approximately 600 acres of land in addition to the area to be irrigated by said project, as authorized in section 2 of the act of August 24, 1912, $20,000; and for maintenance and operation of the project, $3,000; in all, $23,000, reimbursable and to remain available until expended."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"The work to be done with the amounts herein appropriated for the completion of the Blackfeet, Flathead, and Fort Peck projects may be done by the Reclamation Service on plans and estimates furnished by that service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 of applicable appropriations made for the Flathead, Blackfeet, and Fort Peck irrigation projects shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for official use upon the aforesaid irrigation projects: Provided further, That not to exceed $7,500 may be used for the purchase of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and that not to exceed $1,500 may be used for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to announce, at such time as in his opinion seems proper, the charge for construction of irrigation systems on the Blackfeet, Flathead, and Fort Peck Indian Reservations in Montana, which shall be made against each acre of land irrigable by the systems on each of said reservations. Such charges shall be assessed against the land irrigable by the systems on each said reservation in the proportion of the total construction cost which each acre of such land bears to the whole area of irrigable land thereunder.

"On the first day of December after the announcement by the Secretary of the Interior of the construction charge the allottee, entryman, purchaser, or owner of such irrigable land which might have been furnished water for irrigation during the whole of the preceding irrigation season, from ditches actually constructed, shall pay to the superintendent of the reservation where the land is located, for deposit to the credit of the United States as a reimbursement of the appropriations made or to be made for construction of said irrigation systems, 5 per cent of the construction charge fixed for his land, as an initial installment, and shall pay the balance of the charge in 15 annual installments, the first 5 of which shall each be 5 per cent of the construction charge and the remainder shall each be 7 per cent of the construction charge. The first of the annual installments shall become due and payable on December 1 of the fifth calendar year after the initial installment: Provided, That any allottee, entryman, purchaser, or owner may, if he so elects, pay the whole or any part of the construction charges within any shorter period: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, grant such extension of the time for payments herein required from Indian allottees or their heirs as he may determine proper and necessary, so long as such land remains in Indian title.

"That the tribal funds heretofore covered into the Treasury of the United States in partial reimbursement of appropriations made for constructing irrigation systems on said reservations shall be placed to the credit of the tribe and be available for such expenditure for the benefit of the tribe as Congress may hereafter direct.

"The cost of constructing the irrigation systems to irrigate allotted lands of the Indians on these reservations shall be reimbursed to the United States as hereinbefore provided, and no further reimbursements from the tribal funds shall be made on account of said irrigation works except that all charges against Indian allottees or their heirs herein authorized, unless otherwise paid, may be paid from the individual shares in the tribal funds, when the same is available for distribution, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

"That in addition to the construction charges every allottee, entryman, purchaser, or owner shall pay to the superintendent of the reservation a maintenance and operation charge based upon the total cost of maintenance and operation of the systems on the several reservations, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to fix such maintenance and operation charge upon such basis as shall be equitable to the owners of the irrigable land. Such charges when collected shall be available for expenditure in the maintenance and operation of the systems on the reservation where collected: Provided, That delivery of water to any tract of land may be refused on account of nonpayment of any charges herein authorized, and the same may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be collected by a suit for money owed: Provided further, That the rights of the United States heretofore acquired, to water for Indian lands referred to in the foregoing provision, namely, the Blackfeet, Fort Peck, and Flathead Reservation land, shall be continued in full force and effect until the Indian title to such land is extinguished.

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations and issue such notices as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and he is hereby authorized and directed to determine the area of land on each reservation which may be irrigated from constructed ditches and to determine what allowance, if any, shall be made for ditches constructed by individuals for the diversion and distribution of a partial or total water supply for allotted or surplus unallotted land: Provided, That if water be available prior to the announcement of the charge herein authorized, the Secretary of the Interior may furnish water to land under the systems on the said reservations, making a reasonable charge therefor, and such charges when collected may be used for construction or maintenance of the systems through which such water shall have been furnished."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 78: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following: "for the purpose of making necessary repairs on the Government bridge across the Niobrara River near Niobrara, Nebr.; also to reconstruct one span of 90 feet over the back channel of the Niobrara River at the same point, the sum of $6,500; said sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 79: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$91,100"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"For support and education of 350 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $59,550; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for water supply, $1,600; for the construction of an assembly hall and gymnasium, $25,000; in all, $92,150."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"For support and education of 220 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., and pay of superintendent, $38,540; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for new school building, $20,000; in all, $63,540."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 97: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and insert the following: "To enable the Secretary of the Interior to redeem a mortgage on the allotment selection of Starr McGillis, a Turtle Mountain Chippewa Indian, described as the northwest quarter of section 34, township 164 north, range 70 west of the fifth principal meridian, North Dakota, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"That the unexpended balance of $9,533.38 is hereby reappropriated and made available for continuing the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians formerly confined as prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., for the purchase of allotments in Oklahoma, as provided for in the act of June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 77), for the three adult heads of families who have not heretofore received allotments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following: "except that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, within 30 days after the passage of this act, to investigate claims not to exceed $1,950 growing out of contracts alleged to be in existence between John Calvin Gray, William T. Lancaster, Arthur Jennings, and Clyde Jennings, as enrolled members of the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nations, and Henry W. Blair, Kappler & Merillat, James K. Jones, Charles M. Fechheimer, and Eugene Hamilton, as attorneys, and in case such claims are found to be valid and the contracts approved in accordance with existing law, the said Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, apply any amounts that may be found due under this paragraph to the aforesaid enrolled members of the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nations to the payment of such fee, but the amounts due hereunder to other enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations shall not be held in abeyance to this claim but shall be paid promptly without reference to same; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

No. 141. This amendment is intended to provide an appropriation to pay certain members of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians enrolled under the act of March 3, 1893 (37 Stat. L., 744), the amount of payments made prior to their respective enrollments. Section 6 of the act of February 6, 1871, provided for the determination of the persons who were members of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe and their future relations to the Government. Two rolls were prepared, one containing Indians who it was thought desired to separate their relations from the tribe and become citizens, and the other those who desired to retain their tribal character and remain under the guardianship of the Government. It subsequently appeared that some of those Indians who were placed on the first roll did not desire to sever their relations with the tribe, and they were again enrolled under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893 (37 Stat. L., 744-745).

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4876) to provide for an increase in the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4760. An act to authorize the change of name of the steamer Normania to William F. Stifel.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 8067. An act to quiet the title to certain lands in possession of G. B. Dickson, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 4876. An act to provide for an increase in the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy;

S. 3769. An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907;

S. 2290. An act authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Elsie McCaulley from Glenwood Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Philadelphia, Pa.; and

S. J. Res. 63. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial fountain to Alfred Noble.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 28. An act to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Durango, in the State of Colorado, certain lands therein described for water reservoirs," approved March 1, 1907;

H. R. 177. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to accept the relinquishment of the State of Wyoming to certain lands heretofore certified to said State, and the State of Wyoming to select other lands in lieu of the lands thus relinquished;

H. R. 384. An act to amend the act of June 23, 1910, entitled "An act providing that entrymen for homesteads within the reclamation projects may assign their entries upon satisfactory proof of residence, improvement, and cultivation for five years, the same as though said entry had been made under the original homestead act";

H. R. 2235. An act for the relief of the widow and heirs at law of Patrick J. Fitzgerald, deceased;

H. R. 4746. An act granting to the city of Portland, Oreg., the right to purchase certain lands for public park purposes;

H. R. 4881. An act to reimburse the postmaster at Kegg, Pa., for money and stamps taken by burglars;

H. R. 6442. An act to provide for the exchange of the present Federal building site in Newark, Del.;

H. R. 7239. An act for the relief of Philip H. Heberer; and

H. J. Res. 79. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Labor to permit the South Carolina Naval Militia to use the Charleston immigration station and dock connected therewith.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4760. An act to authorize the change of name of the steamer Normania to William F. Stifel; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after reading the Journal on Monday the Senate bill known as the Philippine bill be taken up and considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that next Monday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and clearing up of business on the Speaker's table, the Philippine bill be taken up for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] this morning thought it ought not to be done by unanimous consent. Whether he has changed his mind or not I do not know. I do not see him present.

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope the gentleman has changed his mind, for if we take it up by unanimous consent it will save an hour discussing a rule, and I think we can finish it probably on Monday. Some Members on that side and some on this side would like to get away Tuesday in order to get to their conventions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

RECLAMATION EXTENSION.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the House bill 6057, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. What is the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is a bill to allow further time for settlers to accept the provisions of the reclamation act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 6057) to amend section 14 of the reclamation-extension act, approved August 13, 1904, be taken from the Speaker's table, the Senate amendments thereto disagreed to, and a conference asked. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Chair announced the following conferees: Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. KINKAID.

G. B. DICKSON.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8067) to quiet title in G. B. Dickson, and concur in a Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of national defense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, May 1, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 1, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee as seekers after truth in the midst of a struggle for the supremacy of the truth. Thou hast put this passion within us, and Thy sanction makes it dearer to us than life itself. No institutions shall tempt us from this path. No lure of this world, whether it is voiced by expediency or otherwise, shall rob us of that oneness of purpose that looks for the establishment of truth on earth.

Our Lord, who is the Prince of Peace, is the King of Truth. We come to pray that Thou wilt increase within us ever this passion so that we may follow after God's great plan, knowing that at the end if we are true to the revelations of Thy changeless will we shall establish order and happiness and bring blessing to our fellow men. Help us in our divine enterprise. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ASSIGNMENT OF RITTMAN PATENT.

Mr. JAMES. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Patents the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 125) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept assignment of patent for improvements in the manufacture of gasoline, and for other purposes, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept as trustee for the use and benefit of the people of the United States assignment from Walter F. Rittman of his entire right and title, or of any lesser interest, in, to, and under any letters patent of the United States which may be granted to said Rittman under applications Nos. 29019 and 29020 for patents for certain improvements in the manufacture of gasoline, benzene, toluene, etc., in so far as said applications or the letters patent issued thereunder cover and embrace the manufacture of such products from materials produced and manufactured within the United States, and the said Secretary of the Interior, or his successors, is hereby authorized to grant such licenses and take such steps as may be necessary to make such processes available to the people of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall also be authorized to accept the assignment of any right, title, or interest in or to any patent issued upon any device, improvement, process, equipment, apparatus, or other matter or thing developed by any licensee in the use of the said Rittman processes.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry this resolution into effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD as explanatory of the joint resolution a letter addressed to me from the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane; also a letter addressed to me from the Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Thomas Ewing; together with a letter from the Director of the Bureau of Mines, Mr. Manning, giving an explanation of the application of the law and inclosing copies of the assignment of the patent by Dr. Rittman and of the license issued by the department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 21, 1916.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
Chairman Committee on Patents, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with your oral request to Mr. Manning, I am sending you herewith a proposed joint resolution which this department desires to have passed, and a justification therefor. The resolution is for the purpose of vesting in the Secretary of the Interior, as trustee for the people of the United States, all rights and interest in any patents which may be secured by Dr. Walter F. Rittman under applications Nos. 22019 and 22020, for patents for certain improvements in the manufacture of gasoline, benzene, and toluene, etc.

The Rittman processes for the production of gasoline, and of benzene and toluene, have been proven commercially practicable, but in the further commercial development of these processes improvements will undoubtedly be made. It is quite possible that some of these improvements may render still more successful and economical the operation of the processes, and if any concern making use of the processes is to be allowed to patent in its own name the improvements that may be developed the result may be the establishment of a virtual monopoly in the hands of the concern securing such patents.

Dr. Rittman, prior to his resignation from the service of the Bureau of Mines on March 31 last, assigned to the Secretary of the Interior all his patent rights in these processes. If Congress is willing, through the joint resolution referred to, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept this assignment of the Rittman processes patents, the public welfare can be adequately protected through a condition imposed upon licenses of the processes, requiring that all improvements developed in their operation shall be patented in the name of the Secretary of the Interior. Unless the authority asked for in this resolution is given to the Secretary of the Interior, he can not accept the assignment of the Rittman patent rights, and these rights may revert to Dr. Rittman or to the private parties or corporations to whom he may assign them.

In view of the serious situation in regard to gasoline and the promise in the Rittman processes of an increased production, it seems to me that early congressional action along the lines of this resolution is highly desirable.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 21, 1916.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: Hon. Van. H. Manning, Director of the Bureau of Mines, has transmitted to me your request that I advise you as to my views on the proposed joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept assignment of patent for improvements in the manufacture of gasoline, and for other purposes, arising out of the question of proper handling of the Rittman patents.

I approve the resolution as submitted, and hope it may pass.

Respectfully,

THOMAS EWING, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF MINES,
Washington, April 29, 1916.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
Chairman Committee on Patents,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In connection with Senate joint resolution 125, "to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept assignment of patent for improvements in the manufacture of gasoline, and for other purposes," I am sending you herewith certain supplemental information. In order that the justification furnished you for the resolution and Secretary Lane's letter may not convey the impression that Dr. Rittman is to assign all right and title in his processes to the Secretary of the Interior, I am writing you to say that Dr. Rittman is to assign all right and title in his inventions in so far as the same may apply to oils produced in the United States, but will retain all foreign rights and the right to use his processes on oils imported into the United States. I am inclosing a substitute copy of the justification, which has been modified (p. 1, par. 2) in this particular; also copy of the assignment executed by Dr. Rittman.

As stated in the justification and in Secretary Lane's letter to you, the Rittman processes promise to be of great value to the people of the United States. For example, the gasoline process seems certain greatly to increase the gasoline yield of the oil supply of the United States. The crude oils produced in this country have a normal gasoline content of from 5 to 25 per cent with ordinary refining processes. The average gasoline yield of United States oils is somewhere in the neighborhood of 15 per cent. The Rittman cracking process will increase this yield to 45 per cent by running the residuum through the still once, and by taking the remaining products heavier than gasoline and running them back through the still until no more gasoline can be obtained the total gasoline yield can be increased to 75 per cent. The importance of thus increasing the gasoline yield of the average oil of the United States 400 per cent above the yield by ordinary refining processes can hardly be overstated.

The desire of the petroleum industry to use this gasoline process has been so great and so many applications have been received for permission to use the process without waiting for the issuance of a patent that the department has issued a number of licenses for such use pending the granting of the patent and the assignment of the patent rights to the Secretary. I inclose a license form similar to those which have been issued. The list of licensees is as follows:

1. Germania Refining Co., Oil City, Pa.
2. Pure Oil Co., Minneapolis, Minn.
3. Pittsburgh Oil Refining Co., Coraopolis, Pa.
4. Indian Refining Co., Lawrenceville, Ill.
5. Midwest Refining Co., Casper, Wyo.
6. American Oilfields Co. of California, I. W. Fuqua, Fellows, Cal.

JUSTIFICATION FOR PROPOSED JOINT RESOLUTION TO AUTHORIZE THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR TO ACCEPT ASSIGNMENT OF PATENTS FOR IMPROVEMENTS IN THE MANUFACTURE OF GASOLINE, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES.

Dr. Walter F. Rittman, an employee of the Bureau of Mines, invented processes for the production of gasoline, benzene, and toluene from crude or other oils. These processes, properly developed, seem certain to prove of immense value to the people of the United States. How shall the patents be handled in order to insure maximum benefit to the public? Shall they be held in the name of the public or in the name of some public officer acting as trustee for the public, with power to protect the public's interests?

Dr. Rittman desires that the benefit of his inventions, so far as they may be applied to oils produced in the United States, shall inure to the people of the United States, and, in general, discoveries made in the course of employment by the United States should be the property of the United States, except, perhaps, as to foreign rights.

The suggestion that the patents be held in the name of the general public is subject to a serious objection. It does not insure that improvements upon the processes shall also be the property of the public. Where a patentable process or device is of such a nature that improvements are not likely to be made upon it or apparatus need not be devised for its use, the patent may well be placed in the name of the public, and this course has been followed by the Bureau of Mines with regard to certain inventions by its employees. However, in a matter so complex as the refining of petroleum, the further development of a process or of an apparatus for its carrying on may be almost, if not quite, as important as the original invention itself. It is conceivable, for example, that if the Rittman processes were assigned to the general public some one might devise improvements upon them or upon the apparatus for their operation, and by patenting these improvements deprive the public of the major benefits which might otherwise flow from the Rittman inventions.

Thus it seems wisest to have the Rittman patents so held that some trustee for the people shall have authority to issue licenses for the use of the processes under terms which will give a maximum of protection to the public. For example, it is the plan with regard to these patents to authorize their use only upon condition that the details of the commercial working out of the processes shall be available to the Bureau of Mines for publication whenever desirable; that the bureau shall be informed of improvements in the processes or in plant or apparatus for their operation; and that all such improvements which are patentable shall be assigned to the trustee for the people in the same manner as the original processes.

The Secretary of the Interior, as the head of the department in which the processes were developed and in which the administration of the patents should be carried on, is the most logical trustee for the people. Dr. Rittman, who has resigned from the Bureau of Mines, has executed an assignment of his patents to the Secretary of the Interior, and the proposed joint resolution would authorize the Secretary to accept this assignment. It is important that the joint resolution be passed, since the assignment, by its own terms, becomes void if the Secretary of the Interior remains without legal authority to accept it. Thus, if the Secretary has not authority to accept an assignment of these patents, all rights in them will revert to Dr. Rittman, and the public will be deprived of the maximum benefits from these important inventions.

Whereas Walter F. Rittman, residing in the State, county, and city of New York, having invented certain improvements in the manufacture of gasoline, benzol, and toluene, and being desirous of obtaining full, exact, and scientific data, and data required for the adaptation of his improvement to commercial purposes, prior to carrying out his intention of dedicating to the people of the United States the enjoyment and use of said improvements, he entered the employment of the Bureau of Mines of the Department of the Interior; and

Whereas the said Walter F. Rittman has filed applications for letters patent of the United States as follows: For the manufacture of benzene, toluene, etc., filed May 18, 1915, Serial No. 29019; and for the manufacture of gasoline, filed May 18, 1915, Serial No. 29020; and is now desirous of carrying out his original intention of dedicating the improvements described in said applications to the people of the United States for their use and benefit except as hereinafter specified.

Now these presents witness, for and in consideration of the sum of $1, to him in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the said Walter F. Rittman has sold, assigned, and transferred, and does hereby sell, assign, and transfer to Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, and his successors in office, as trustee or trustees in trust for the use and benefit of the people of the United States, all his right, title, and interest in and to the invention described and claimed in said applications, Serial Nos. 29019 and 29020, and in, to, and under any letters patent of the United States which may be granted on said applications, except as hereinafter provided, to own and control said patents and to grant licenses under said patents when issued to such party or parties and upon such terms as said trustee or trustees may deem proper, save and except as to the use of the inventions aforesaid for the treatment of hydrocarbon materials imported into the United States, to prevent the use of the inventions described and claimed in said patents, or either of them, by parties other than the licensees, by bringing suit or suits for infringement against any and all unlicensed users of such inventions, and to do all acts that said trustee or trustees may deem proper in carrying out the intention of said Walter F. Rittman, to encourage the proper practice of the inventions described and claimed in said applications.

The said Walter F. Rittman expressly reserves to himself and to his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns the right to use the inventions described in said applications without liability in any manner whatsoever on his part, or on the part of his heirs, legal representatives, or assigns, for infringement of letters patent granted on said applications, and the right to prosecute said pending applications, Serial Nos. 29019 and 29020, to the issue of letters patent thereon, and the right to apply for, obtain, and control and own letters patent in countries other than the United States. And further, the said Walter F. Rittman, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall have the right to bring suit in the name of the trustee for infringement of patents granted on said applications, or either of them, against any party or parties employing the inventions described in said applications in the treatment of hydrocarbon materials imported into the United States, and the acceptance of this assignment by the said Franklin K. Lane as trustee shall confer upon the said Rittman, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, the right to use the name of the said Franklin K. Lane, and his successors in office, as trustee or trustees for such purpose.

In case the said Franklin K. Lane, or his successors in office, is not empowered to execute the trust herein provided, and the same shall lapse for lack of authority so to execute, this assignment shall become null and void, and the entire right, title, and interest in and to the inventions described in said applications, and in, to, and under any letters patent granted on said applications shall vest in the said Walter F. Rittman, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns.

In case licenses are granted under patents issued on said applications, or either of them, subject to the payment of royalties or other considerations, such royalties or considerations shall be payable to the said Walter F. Rittman or his assigns.

The Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized and requested to issue letters patent on said applications, Serial Nos. 29019 and 29020, to the said Walter F. Rittman, in his name, the title to said patents to vest immediately on issue in said Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, and his successors, in trust for the benefit of the people of the United States, subject to terms and conditions hereinbefore specified.

In testimony whereof the said Walter F. Rittman has hereunto set his hand this 29th day of March, 1916.

WALTER F. RITTMAN.

Signed in the presence of—
CLARENCE B. DUTTON,
DARWIN S. WOLCOTT.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

On this 30th day of March, 1916, before me personally appeared Walter F. Rittman, to me known and known to me to be the person described in and who executed the foregoing instrument, and he duly acknowledged to me that he executed the same.

[SEAL.] THOS. M. APPLEGARTH,
Notary Public No. 67, New York County,
New York Registered No. 7021.

My commission expires March 30, 1917.

LICENSE FOR USE OF THE RITTMAN PROCESS—NONEXCLUSIVE—WITHOUT ROYALTY.

This agreement, made and entered into in duplicate this — day of ——, A. D. 191—, between the Department of the Interior, acting in this behalf by Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, hereinafter called the first party, and ——— ———, hereinafter called the second party, witnesseth that—

Whereas Walter F. Rittman, a chemical engineer in the employ of the first party, has discovered a new and valuable process for the manufacture of ——— from heavy liquid hydrocarbons (hereinafter referred to as the process); and

Whereas the second discovery is covered by pending application for letters patent; and

Whereas the second party is desirous of employing such process in advance of the issuance of a patent:

Now, therefore, the said first and second parties do hereby agree as follows:

1. The first party, in consideration of the covenants and agreements hereinafter contained to be observed and performed by the second party, hereby licenses and empowers the second party to use the said process, subject to the conditions hereinafter named, at ——— ——— factory in ——— ——— and in no other places.

2. The second party agrees that all devices, improvements, processes, equipment, apparatus, or development, or any matter or thing which may be necessary or desirable to be used in connection with the said process, originated by the second party, or by its agents or employees, during the life of this agreement shall be promptly and fully communicated to the first party, in order that letters patent thereon may be applied for in the discretion of the first party, the cost of obtaining such letters patent, including the Patent Office fees, to be paid by the second party.

3. The second party further agrees to transfer and assign, or cause to be transferred and assigned, to the Secretary of the Interior, as trustee for the public, all the right, title, and interest of said second party or its agents or employees in and to the aforesaid devices, improvements, processes, equipment, apparatus, development, matters, or things as regards the United States, and further agrees to assign and transfer, or cause to be transferred and assigned, all right, title, and interest, as aforesaid, as regards all countries or places outside of the United States to the said Walter F. Rittman, his heirs or assigns.

4. The second party further agrees not to make public in any way any details of the process which may be communicated to it or which it may learn by reason of the employment of such process without the prior obtained consent of the first party.

5. The second party further agrees to furnish the first party, upon request, with complete working plans and specifications of plant construction, equipment, apparatus, machinery, improvements, and devices of whatsoever nature or character used in the practice of or in connection with the aforesaid process, and furnish such party with such other pertinent information and records appertaining to the same as it may from time to time request.

6. The second party lastly agrees that the process aforesaid shall be used only in the treatment of liquid hydrocarbons produced in the United States of America: Provided, That the process may be employed in the treatment of foreign-produced oils in the United States upon payment to Walter F. Rittman, his heirs, or assigns, of a reasonable royalty to be mutually agreed upon between the said Rittman, his heirs, or assigns, and the second party.

7. The first party shall be at liberty to make public, from time to time, all such information concerning the development and use of the process in the aforesaid factory of the second party as it may consider of public benefit and essential to the working of the process by the people of the United States. No publication shall be made of any information acquired regarding the business and trade secrets of the second party other than as hereinabove provided.

8. The first party agrees to grant to the second party, upon the issuance of letters patents covering the aforesaid process, a license to employ such process in the treatment of petroleum oils or other liquid hydrocarbons produced in the United States, upon the same terms and conditions as the process may be permitted to be employed by any and all other persons in the United States.

9. It is further mutually understood and agreed that the first party, in its discretion, shall have the right to terminate this agreement for the use of said process upon violation of any of the substantial terms or conditions hereof or for nonuser for a period of not exceeding six calendar months. Waiver of any specific cause of forfeiture shall not be construed to prevent forfeiture for any other or like cause occurring thereafter.

In witness whereof, on the day and year first hereinbefore written, the parties hereto have subscribed their names and affixed their seals.

[SEAL.] ——— ———,
Secretary of the Interior.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HOLLIS:

A bill (S. 5800) to provide for the use of public-school buildings in the District of Columbia as community forums, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 5801) granting an increase of pension to Delia Buel Lydecker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JAMES:

A bill (S. 5802) to amend an act approved June 8, 1906, entitled "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 5803) for the relief of Albert E. Keily; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 5804) granting an increase of pension to John Unferfate (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 5805) permitting the Riverview Ferry Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Yellowstone River, in the State of Montana; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. RANSDELL (for Mr. SHIELDS):

A bill (S. 5806) granting a pension to Thomas Smith;

A bill (S. 5807) granting a pension to William D. Davis (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5808) granting a pension to Minta Jones (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OLIVER:

A bill (S. 5809) granting an increase of pension to James D. Harris (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLAPP:

A bill (S. 5810) to regulate and control the manufacture, sale, and use of weights and measures, and to be known as the weights and measures act; to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. TAGGART:

A bill (S. 5811) granting a pension to Evalena Sharp;

A bill (S. 5812) granting an increase of pension to George R. Gibney;

A bill (S. 5813) granting an increase of pension to James Dunn;

A bill (S. 5814) granting an increase of pension to Richard M. Clark;

A bill (S. 5815) granting an increase of pension to John W. Johnston;

A bill (S. 5816) granting an increase of pension to Richard Scanland;

A bill (S. 5817) granting an increase of pension to Levi A. Walkle;

A bill (S. 5818) granting an increase of pension to Harvey Martin; and

A bill (S. 5819) granting an increase of pension to Lorenzo D. Ferguson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 5820) granting a pension to Charles H. Clay (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 5821) granting an increase of pension to Emil Schincke (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5822) granting an increase of pension to John F. Nichols (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. VARDAMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 12193), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

TABLE OF IMPORTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I beg to present a document, being a very carefully prepared table showing the increase of imports under the Underwood-Simmons tariff law in war times as compared with the imports under the Payne-Aldrich tariff law in times of peace.

It is a significant showing, and absolutely sets at rest the contention that the industrial interests of the country are as safe in the hands of the Democratic Party as the Republican Party. The truth is that had not the war in Europe occurred the imports would have been even greater than they have been during the period of the European conflict. But as it is the increase has been great enough to alarm the business interests of the country, and to serve as a warning of what will doubtless take place when the European war comes to a close. From present indications when that time arrives the Republican Party will again be in power, and a revision of the tariff that will adequately protect the interests of all classes of our people will be among the first acts of the new administration. The figures that I give are taken from official sources and are absolutely correct in every particular, and I ask unanimous consent that they be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Imports of merchandise and agricultural products from Oct. 1, 1913, to Oct. 1, 1914, the first year under the operation of the Underwood tariff law, compared with the same period in 1912–13, under the Payne tariff law.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

S. 5415. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Fox River at Geneva, Ill.; and

S. J. Res. 121. Joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a representative of the United States Government to appear at the celebration of the landing of Sir Francis Drake on the coast of California.

POTOMAC RIVER BRIDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 759.

Mr. OLIVER. What is the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 759) to provide for the removal of what is now known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and for the building of a bridge in place thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "cost," to insert "for the bridge and the necessary approaches thereto," so as make the section read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a bridge across the Potomac River at or near what is now known as the Aqueduct Bridge, replacing said bridge with a substantial structure, at a cost for the bridge and the necessary approaches thereto of not more than $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is further authorized to make such contract for the removal of the present bridge and for the sale thereof as in his discretion may be proper, and to cover the proceeds of such sale, if any, into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 21, after the word "property," to insert "necessary in the construction of said bridge," so as to read:

SEC. 4. That the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of securing proper plans and for the payment of any lands, easements, rights, or property necessary in the construction of said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce adopted an amendment to the bill which they failed to report. I now send the amendment to the desk and ask that it may be inserted in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia on behalf of the Committee on Commerce will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, page 3, line 1, after the word "herein," it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of War shall advise with the Commission of Fine Arts in regard to the location, plan, and specifications of said bridge and approaches.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 5, page 3, line 9, after the word "cables," to insert "and interurban railroads," so as to read:

That the said bridge shall be used as a highway for traffic, and for gas and water mains, power, telegraph and telephone wires or cables, and interurban railroads, upon such conditions and for such compensation as may from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 4, after the word "bridge," to insert "and the double track above described," and in line 8, after the word "railways," to insert "including the Washington & Old Dominion Railway," so as to read:

And provided further, That any electric railway shall have the right to use said new bridge and the double track above described upon terms determined by the Secretary of War, who is hereby authorized and directed to hear the interested parties and to fix the terms of joint trackage. And all electric railways, including the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, using said new bridge shall, in addition to taxes and other charges, pay monthly into the Treasury of the United States the sum of one-half of 1 cent for each passenger transported each way over said new bridge, and just and reasonable rates or charges on all freight transported thereon, and of these sums, when paid into the Treasury, one-half shall be credited to the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in section 2, page 2, line 5, after the words "as may be," I move to strike out the word "desired" and to insert in its place the word "necessary," so that it will read:

As may be necessary for the construction of said bridge and the approaches thereto.

Mr. SWANSON. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7617, commonly called the good-roads bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, it had been my intention to ask that the rural-credits bill be taken up at the close of the routine morning business this morning. Several Senators have spoken to me about wishing to discuss the paragraph which deals with exemptions from taxation, but I find that one of the Senators on the other side is ill, and therefore can not discuss that matter to-day. While I had hoped to get a vote on the bill to-day, I have agreed that Senators may discuss the section of the bill to which I refer to-morrow, and I shall not attempt to get a vote to-day. I therefore do not insist upon taking up the rural-credits bill until 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 13, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by adding after the word "require," on line 13, the following:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve only such projects as may be permanent in character, and the expenditure of funds hereby authorized shall be applied only to such improvements.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I very much hope that this amendment will not be adopted in the form in which it is submitted. This amendment, if adopted, in my judgment, would preclude the expenditure of any of the money intended to be appropriated to the building of post roads, because there can be no such thing, Mr. President, as a permanent road. There has never been a permanent road built, and there never can be. So, if the Secretary of Agriculture should literally construe the language included in the amendment, it would, in my opinion, absolutely preclude the building of any road under the provisions of this bill.

I am as anxious, Mr. President, as is the Senator from Ohio or any other Senator that this money shall be wisely and judiciously used and that we shall get value received for every dollar that is expended; I am just as anxious as is the Senator from Ohio or any other Senator that the money that we propose to appropriate for the building of post roads shall result in the building of good post roads and highways; and I should like to ask the Senator if he would not be satisfied and if he would not consent to an amendment such as this: Strike out in his amendment all after the word "may" and insert the words "call for the construction of good post roads and highways." It seems to me, Mr. President, that is as far as we can safely go.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to restate his proposed amendment? I did not catch it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It might be that an amendment reading in this way would suit the Senator:

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve only such projects as may be good in character.

My original suggestion was to strike out all after the word "may" in his amendment and to add the words "call for the construction of good post roads and highways."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether or not, inasmuch as the States and localities must pass upon these matters, they are not better judges as to what kind of a road ought to be built, and would it not be better to leave the discretion in them rather than to prescribe that authorities here in Washington, 2,000 miles away from my State and varying distances away from other States, shall prescribe the exact character of roads supposed to be suited to a particular locality?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Particularly when the States spend ten times as much on roads as the Government does.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And inasmuch, no doubt, as the States will put up fully as much as the National Government, and, I presume, much more than the National Government, it seems to me they ought to determine the character of the roads to be built, instead of prescribing absolutely here in Washington what shall be done.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Colorado. I have stated on the floor repeatedly that, in my opinion, this question should be left to the State highway commissions and the Secretary of Agriculture to work out such plans and to construct such roads as would in their judgment give value received and carry out the purpose of the act, that being to construct good post roads and highways. I made the suggestion with the hope that the Senator from Ohio might be willing to accede to it, inasmuch as I am informed by the best highway engineers in the country that to confine the Secretary of Agriculture to the construction of "permanent" roads is out of the question and impossible. I hope the Senator from Ohio will accept my suggestion. If not, then I must ask the Senate to reject the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE obtained the floor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Would it be objectionable to the chairman of the committee to insert the word "durable" in place of the word "permanent"?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the highway commissions and the engineers all agree that the word "durable" means brick or concrete, or roads of similar character.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I did not know that the word had a technical meaning, and if the Senator from Alabama is correct in his understanding of the meaning of the word it would not be prudent to insert it.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator who are the engineers to whom he has referred?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, roads of that character are only needed where commerce and travel converge around the big cities; they are not needed in the country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee who the engineers are that define "permanent" as meaning brick roads or concrete roads or macadam roads?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, Mr. President, I do not object to telling who my authority is on that subject, so far as that is concerned, because it is no secret. Mr. Logan Page, of the Good Roads Division of the Agricultural Department, states that positively.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will permit me——

Mr. POMERENE. I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. It occurs to me that there is one other word that would accomplish the purpose of the Senator and obviate the difficulty of defining the word "permanent," and that is the word "substantial"—that the road shall be substantial in character.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I will take up each of these suggestions as they have been made. I do not think that any one of them meets exactly what I had in mind when I used the word "permanent."

It was not meant, and this amendment does not say, that these roads must be permanent. The phrase is "permanent in character." The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] would substitute the words "good in character." I do not know how he is going to define a "good road" any more than I can define specifically a road "permanent in character"; and I have not attempted to define it. That phrase would be better, however, than the language of the bill as it was presented without any amendment.

My friend the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] suggests the word "durable." That is better than the word "good," in my judgment; but it is not as good as the word "permanent."

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just a moment. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] suggests the word "substantial." I think that is better than the word "durable," and I would much prefer it to having no provision of this character in the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment until I have answered the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], I will yield to him.

I do not think the Senator from Colorado fairly states this proposition. It is not a question of somebody here in Washington determining what shall be done. The bill itself provides that the projects, the plans, the specifications, the material, shall be first suggested by the State highway commission or by the governor. Afterwards, the projects, plans, specifications, and material shall be submitted to the Agricultural Department here; and, if approved by the Agricultural Department, then this expenditure can be made.

Let me suggest further while on this point, that it is said that the States, of their own volition, are expending for roads vastly more money through their own administrative authorities than is provided to be contributed by the Federal Government. That is true unquestionably.

Now let us see what the situation here is with regard to Colorado. Under the provisions of this bill Colorado would get out of the $5,000,000 appropriation $86,800. By the terms of this bill, before that State would be permitted to receive this amount of money, it must appropriate at least a like sum, namely, $86,800, out of its own treasury; in other words, it would require a total expenditure of twice $86,800 to be invested in the construction of permanent roads. I dare say that in the State of Colorado to-day there is more money expended for permanent roads which would meet the requirements of the language of my amendment, than can be built in any one year for twice $86,800. Assuming that to be so, then Colorado is in a position where she can get this Federal aid, and I want her to have it; but I do not want this money to be frittered away, as much of it will be, in my judgment, if there is no limitation whatsoever placed upon the road upon which this money may be expended.

Now, looking at it from the standpoint of the State, it is just as broad as it is long, because if this Federal money is put in what we might all agree was a permanent roadway, then she can divert her funds to making these temporary roadways, if I may use that term, and the State will lose nothing by it. My belief is that if we are going to take this money and expend it in each of the several States in mere temporary road building, a mere grading up of the earth and the clay into the center of the highway, it may be, and making a gutter along each side, we will have nothing at the end of the year to show for the expenditure of the Federal funds. This proposition is so enormous, so tremendous, with 2,300,000 miles of highway in the country, that if we are going to attempt in any degree to make these temporary highways in the way that I have indicated, it is going to discourage rather than to encourage permanent road building.

With all due respect to the commissioner of highways, when he attempts to make the statement that the word "permanent" includes only a brick road, a macadam road, or a concrete road, I am in a position where I have either to question his intelligence or to question my own.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The reference which I made as to prescribing here the kind of road that should be built in the States applies not to what the Secretary of Agriculture might do, but to the very thing that the Senator is prescribing in this amendment. When a State, as is the case in my State, has a highway commission, composed in my State of three members, a board of engineers, all of them of the highest degree of skill that can be had, and when those men are willing to put up the money—and they will put up not only half, but two-thirds to three-fourths of the amount—it seems to me that we ought to leave it to them.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator from Colorado a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. What kind of roadways does the Senator anticipate the State of Colorado will build under this appropriation, if it is made?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think the chances are that most of them will be roads with a rock surface—not a rock surface entirely, but disintegrated granite. That is something that is very good in our State, and that is what we build mostly.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not the Senator believe that a road of that character would meet the requirements of the language of my amendment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know whether it will or not, because at times it washes—there is no doubt about that—and yet it is quite a durable road.

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly; and there might be an earthquake out there that would disturb any kind of a road that might be built.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no. The heavy storms will, to a certain extent, damage them; but unquestionably, when you compare the cost of that with the cost of a concrete road or a road that is built of brick, the latter is so much greater that, if it were insisted upon, you could not have any construction at all to speak of. You would not have a hundred miles of road a year constructed under this bill if that were the case.

Not only that, but so far as my State is concerned, we have a tax which raises $600,000 every year. That goes to the construction of roads. That is a State tax, and they require counties to put up and they require individuals to put up.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask to what class of roads that applies?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It applies generally to what are called the State roads.

Mr. POMERENE. But to what character of improvements?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Generally surfacing them with disintegrated granite or small rock. We have in the State of Colorado a great quantity of disintegrated granite. It is not exactly pulverized, but nearly so. It is a surface that wears splendidly, and it is the character of road that is most used and most built. I do not know whether that would come under this language or not.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think there can be no question but that the construction which will be placed upon this language by the Agricultural Department will be practically final. It would have to be a gross abuse of discretion before any court would attempt to interfere in what was purely an administrative function. A mere difference of opinion as between man and man would not be regarded as sufficient justification for the court to disturb an administrative act.

The language here is that the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve only such projects as may be permanent in character. He is the judge—not a court, not any other official; and my belief is that there would be less abuse of the spirit of congressional action here by aiding the department in determining the character of roads which may be built under these appropriations than by leaving the matter wholly to his discretion; and my thought is this, too: If there be no limitation placed upon this appropriation, and the discretion of the department be abused, as I believe it will be, by attempting to make these temporary repairs, there will be a revulsion of feeling against legislation of this character that will, later on, defeat Federal aid, which I would very much regret.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. SWANSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield, and to whom?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Ohio wants to keep the record straight. I did not say, as he seems to think I said, that permanent roads were made out of brick or concrete. I said there was no such thing as a permanent road, and none could be built. I said that durable roads, under the definition of the engineers, were built out of brick, cement, and such material—durable roads, not permanent roads.

Mr. POMERENE. But, Mr. President, I think we must give a reasonable construction to all language, and I think Senators generally understand what we mean when we speak of a road that is permanent in character. We mean something in contradistinction to a road that is only temporary in character.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was just going to ask the Senator if the words "permanent" and "durable," as stated by the chairman of the committee, have a technical meaning in road building? For instance, if a durable road is a road built of such material as brick, concrete, and material of that character, the enactment of a law, with the use of those words, would leave no discretion to the Secretary of Agriculture in construing them. He would be compelled to give them the technical meaning, which is usual in treating the subject of road building. There is no room for question on that point.

I can not agree with the Senator from Ohio that there is any danger of the Secretary of Agriculture and the authorities of the State permitting an improper or worthless road to be constructed; but if the Senator wants to throw around it more safeguards than the bill already provides, I think the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] would meet all requirements by employing the word "substantial." It is not so strong a term as "durable," and it does not go so far as the word "permanent." It means a substantial, lasting construction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, I will read three or four definitions of the word "substantial" in a very few words.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have nothing further to say, except to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that I do not think any probable or possible abuse would occur under the terms of the bill at all, but certainly not if his amendment should be adopted and the word "substantial" should be substituted for "permanent."

Now I yield the floor to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Among the definitions of the word "substantial" are these:

> Having an essential value; genuine; sound; sterling. Having firm or good material; strong; stout; solid; real; or true in the main or for the most part. Vital; important. That which has real practical value.

It seems to me that that is a word which covers the case very completely, without using a word that is very difficult of definition, unless we go to the extreme of good-road building.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator for giving us the benefit of that definition; but I have been furnished with a definition of the word "permanent" as contained in the Century Dictionary, and I want to read it:

> Lasting or intended to last indefinitely; fixed or enduring in character, condition, state, position, occupation, use, or the like; remaining or intended to remain unchanged or unremoved; not temporary or subject to change; abiding; as a permanent building; permanent colors, permanent employment; permanent possession.

And according to the able engineer who has been quoted here as authority by the chairman of this committee, there could be no permanent building, because a building does not last forever.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Under the definition "lasting indefinitely, not subject to change," would not the Senator hold that an asphalt road, which we know wears out in five or six years, would not be a permanent road?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I could not agree with the Senator upon that definition at all. It is permanent in character, just as much as this building is permanent in character, just as much as any house is permanent in character.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is not this building a building of indefinite permanency, that might last for many, many years, and we do not know when it would wear out, while we know that an asphalt road will give out in 10 years? I have never seen one last more than 5 or 6 years.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that any character of road we may build is not going to be permanent, according to the engineer, Mr. Page; but if an asphalt pavement is temporary in character, how much less permanent in character and substantiality is a mere road which is graded up to the center with nothing but the ordinary earth in that vicinity!

I take it that any Secretary of Agriculture who may be in office is going to be a reasonable man and take notice of all of the facts connected with a given proposition. I take it that he is going to have in mind the kind of material that there may be in the several States or localities where this material could be used in economical road building. All those things will be borne in mind. But if you are going to have a road simply temporary in character, what is going to be the situation? You are going to have some gentleman constantly waiting upon the Department of Agriculture and upon the highway commissions to press this proposition, that proposition, or the other proposition. There is going to be, in my judgment, more laxness in the methods of road building, and there will be more extravagance in the expenditure of the money. It is that which I want to prevent.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], I think, have each given pretty good suggestions. I would myself prefer the word "permanent"; but if that is not going to be accepted, I certainly do hope that one or the other of the suggested amendments will be accepted. I do not know of any road commissioner, State or National, who should be given carte blanche to say to what jobs he shall devote the public funds.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move an amendment to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio to strike out the word "permanent" and insert "substantial."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I could not hear the Senator from New Hampshire. What does he propose to strike out?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Secretary will state it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] it is proposed to strike out the word "permanent" and in lieu thereof to insert the word "substantial."

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] will not be adopted. It would simply tend to bring about the expenditure of all this money around the large cities, where they will have macadam and permanent roads. One of the purposes of this bill is to aid the rural communities, where there are not sufficient funds to have permanent roads of the character that the Senator from Ohio wants constructed.

There is no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], but the Senator said that this bill permits waste of Federal money. Those of us who were on the subcommittee reporting this bill to the full committee considered this matter. There is no chance of the Federal money being thrown away under this bill. If it is a sand-clay road, or a gravel road, or even if it is a dirt road, it has to be, under this bill, put in good condition. After it is put in good condition then the Federal Government pays its half or third. Then the State must agree to keep the road substantially in the same condition that it was in when the Federal Government paid its money. Consequently, whatever the character of that road, for all time to come that road must be kept in that condition, so the money can not be wasted or lost. If it is not kept in that condition the State then fails to receive any money in the future.

We considered all that phase of the question, and no bill has been introduced here that provides more safely and completely against the waste of money by the Federal Government than this.

I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]; but if you put in the word "permanent," that word has been construed generally by State highway commissions not to include sand-clay roads or gravel roads. It is usually construed as a macadam or brick road, or a permanent road of that kind or character.

It seems to me there is no danger of having any trifling roads under this bill. You can not repair roads under the bill. You can rebuild them; you can construct them; but the temporary repairs that the Senator imagines will occur could not be made under the provisions of this bill. Consequently, I can not see why it would not be better to let the bill stand as it is; but I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, which would permit sand-clay roads, gravel roads, and roads of that character to be built under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS rose.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator from Kansas wish to interrupt me?

Mr. CURTIS. I was going to suggest that the substitution of the words "modern in construction" for "permanent in character" might answer the objection.

Mr. SWANSON. The State highway departments would differ as to what is a permanent road. If you want to spend this money to build roads around large cities, simply building a macadam road, and giving the rural district no benefit of it, put in the word "permanent." That is what it means. It means that the rural sections would have to pay half the expense ultimately in the construction of roads costing $15,000 or $20,000 a mile. I do not think that is right. I think that will destroy one great purpose of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Surely the Senator from Virginia does not mean to say that if this amendment is adopted permanent roads would only include those that would cost $15,000 or $20,000 a mile.

Mr. SWANSON. I mean this: If the department should construe this language to mean that only macadam, brick, or rock roads are included in permanent roads, a sand and clay road could not be built, a gravel road could not be built, and the effect would be that this money would be spent entirely around large cities. To the word "substantial" I do not believe the chairman of the committee will object, but I would prefer the language of the bill.

As I said before, there can be no waste of Federal money under the bill. Take the imagined case the Senator from Ohio put. They could put the dirt road in a good condition and pay $200 a mile to do it under the provisions of the bill. They could drag it and drain it and make a dirt road. What is the result? Under the provisions of the bill the State will have to agree for all time to come that that road shall be kept in substantially the condition that it was when it was completed, and if that is not done no money under the provisions of the bill shall accrue to the State. If you could get all the dirt roads kept for all time in that condition, it would be a great deal gained. The bill has been drawn carefully to prevent any waste of Federal money. I do not see how any waste of Federal money can accrue if the bill is honestly and fairly executed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has said that we would never have a Secretary of Agriculture who would construe the word "permanent" to mean a brick or a macadam road, and that therefore there is no danger in putting in this amendment. If such a condition as he describes is bound to exist, why can you not trust the Secretary of Agriculture to determine under the general provisions of the bill? Why prescribe a limit on what he can do by the indefinite provision which is proposed here by the Senator from Ohio? The amendment reads as follows:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve only such projects as may be permanent in character, and the expenditure of funds hereby authorized shall be applied only to such improvements.

Now, why is it necessary to curtail his power? If it means nothing, if the Secretary is going to have the leeway of determining what is permanent and what is not permanent in the kind of road to be used, what is the use of making that provision? Section 6 prescribes as follows:

SEC. 6. That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its State highway department, submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction of any rural post road or roads therein. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve a project, the State highway department shall furnish to him such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require.

Mr. President, it takes the approval of the Secretary. Why limit him and curb him by a distinct provision with respect to this particular matter?

The Senator thinks there will be a great waste of money. I deny that, Mr. President. I do not believe there will be. I do not believe it, because I believe that the expenditures which have been made in the last 8 or 10 years in various States of the Union have demonstrated that the State highway departments are as anxious for good roads as any Federal officer possibly can be. I know that in our State we are very careful. We are making splendid roads, and we are spending a great deal of money upon them. We spent $2,600,000 last year for this purpose. Here is a provision that is going to be availed of, I believe, by the States, so that the National Government will not have to put up more than one-fourth. It says not exceeding one-half. I am satisfied that will be the case, inasmuch as experience has shown in my State that the individuals and the counties are willing to put up the majority of the money in any case. You will find that they will do it with relation to the Federal fund and in order to make it build as much road as possible. Here is a proposition to curb and restrict by a direct command the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to the character of roads, when, as a matter of fact, they will be putting up twice or three times as much money as the Federal Government.

I am opposed to any restriction. I am opposed to any limitation. I believe we can rely upon the general good character of the Secretary of Agriculture when the proposition comes up. If it is very bad he will condemn it; if it is not very bad he will find that the highway department of the State is going to be the one that will determine what is for the best interest of the community in which the road will be built.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, in determining this particular question it seems to me that it turns upon this proposition: Has the word "permanent" in the road-building art a fixed meaning? If the word "permanent" in this art has come by usage to mean a macadam road or a brick road, then in all probability if this word was before the court they would construe it according to its meaning in the art. This is a very familiar rule of construction in dealing with customs cases. We take the meaning of a word as used in the trades.

Further, if it is doubtful whether the word "permanent" has a fixed meaning or has not a fixed meaning, then it would be well not to use that word, for fear that a court or the Secretary of Agriculture would construe it in its limited, technical sense.

I do not know, myself, whether the word "permanent" in the road-building art has come to have a fixed meaning such as has been indicated. If it has, then that word ought not to be left in the statute unless we desire that it shall be construed to be limited to roads of a certain class.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I do not understand the amendment. There are no permanent roads. No permanent roads have ever been built. There must be repairs to all roads. What makes a good road in one country makes an inferior one in another. In California by rolling and draining and covering dirt roads with oil and keeping it in repair they have good roads, suitable for ordinary traffic, but they will not stand heavy traffic without cutting. There is no road except one made of basaltic Belgian blocks that will last 15 years without repairs or rebuilding. The life of an asphaltum road is from 10 to 12 years. If you do not travel at all on such a road it rots out in most countries and loses its binding quality of holding the road material together in that length of time. Any bitumen will make a good road when faced with a rock surface, or "metal," as it is called. Its life, however, is but about 12 years under ordinary weather and traffic if well laid, and it is too expensive.

The so-called crushed rock or macadam road wears away rapidly and has to be resurfaced often. If you keep after it all the time, a well-made clay road, well rolled and well drained, will keep up for many years with the light traffic of the country such as farmers driving over it with their produce if kept in repair.

There is no road which is permanent and there is no particular road that is suited for all and differing localities. The term that they must construct a permanent road means that they shall do something which nobody has approached yet except the Romans. The Romans built a road that had a fairly permanent foundation, and in France and all through Europe they are resurfacing the old Roman roads and using them to-day. They stand upon a foundation that you can call permanent for a road, but it is constructed at a heavy first cost. It must be properly drained; it must have large culverts; draining is the secret of such a road if it is in a watered country. Water destroys a road. Attrition also destroys its surface. The surface should be of hard stone or metal, as it is called, well laid, and the day will come in this country when they will use steel for "tracking" the vehicles, and when we do that we will have a road that will last for years, but not until we do so. Nothing is "permanent" but the Almighty; not even the mountains, for they are being leveled by attrition.

The bill should be so drawn that it will meet differing conditions in keeping up the roads of different sections and compelling repairs to be made, building roads suitable to the traffic in the community in which the road is constructed. You can not go farther than that.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the proposed amendment of the Senator from Ohio will not prevail, for this reason: The words "permanent in character" might be so construed by the Secretary of Agriculture as to preclude my own State especially, and I may say I speak with some special knowledge, and I think other States as well somewhat similarly situated, from sharing in the benefits of the bill. In South Dakota we could not build roads with crushed rock or stone as a basis with concrete or asphalt upon the top of that. We could not think of doing a thing of that kind. We could not build a macadamized road of any length in South Dakota because of the tremendous expense it would be to us. We could not build a brick road, if a brick road is to be construed as a permanent road under the language of this amendment.

With this Government aid, however, we might be able to do this. We could construct with care and with some attention to scientific construction a good dirt road and we could surface that road, perhaps, with gravel or in certain sections of the State of South Dakota, and it is true likewise in North Dakota, we could surface such a road so constructed with lignite, which may be obtained in large quantities in certain parts of the State.

Mr. President, I appreciate what was said by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] in regard to the meaning that may be given by usage or custom to the word "permanent." Perhaps the term has been used too long in connection with macadamized roads or with rock-built roads or with brick roads to mean in the mind of the Secretary of Agriculture anything else than roads of that kind, and he would say, "Your proposed dirt road, constructed in a State where you have not this material or where it was too costly for you to procure it, does not come within the meaning of the term 'permanent in character' as used in the bill."

Mr. President, we can not build roads that cost so much in their construction as they do in certain parts of the United States, but we shall construct under the bill more miles of reasonably good, substantial roads, and the provisions of the bill will be of great benefit to us because it will enable us to do that. Here is our great State, much of it—that portion west of the Missouri River sparsely settled, but in which good roads are needed nevertheless—in which the settlers are new and who feel too much the burden of constructing such roads as could be constructed with the aid of the Government under the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we all appreciate the difficulties that certain sections of the country have in the construction of so-called good roads. I have listened to the Senator's explanation of what may be expected in South Dakota. The Senator says they can construct good, substantial roads. I have offered an amendment to strike out "permanent in character" and insert "substantial in character." Would the Senator object to that? Could not his State meet that requirement?

Mr. STERLING. I will say in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire that I think it probably could if there be a reasonable construction put upon the word "substantial" by the Secretary of Agriculture; but I can hardly see the necessity of even that word under the safeguards provided in the bill. Is it likely that the State highway commission will present to the Secretary of Agriculture an unreasonable project in regard to the building of a road in any particular State? I do not believe it will.

Then, again, Mr. President, after the care and attention that the highway commission will give to the subject in presenting any project to the Secretary of Agriculture, there will be the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture himself through his inspection and study of the proposed project.

It seems to me that there is every possible safeguard thrown around the bill against any wasteful expenditure of Government appropriations. I hope the bill will stand as it is written without this amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from South Dakota a question. Does the Senator believe that the word "permanent" would exclude the kind of road that he describes in his State?

Mr. STERLING. I was just indicating, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, my theory in that regard. I say that roads built of brick, of macadam, or of concrete, with ground rock as the basis, and so forth, would probably be deemed as being permanent roads—they have always been so considered—and the Secretary of Agriculture might say, in view of this, that no other road is a permanent road under the meaning of this amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, technically, as has already been said, there never has been a road built that is permanent, if you are going to use that technical definition of it. I would not want to cut out the kind of roads the Senator has described. At the same time, it seems to me that this word "permanent" would not do that. If it would cut out that kind of a road because it would not last long enough, then for the same identical reason it seems to me it would cut out a brick road, because that will not last forever. The word ought to be in the bill, it seems to me, in order to distinguish the road from a temporary affair, from a makeshift. It ought to be a real road.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Ohio has frequently used the word "temporary." I do not know what he means by "temporary," unless he means a road that would have to be built under conditions as they exist in my own State and in many other States. That is what I think he must mean by a temporary road; and his idea of a permanent road is a road constructed of other material than dirt.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I think it is perfectly easy to state what is meant by temporary. In all parts of the country a large part of the roads are of that character. They are roads which are repaired in the spring, and after the winter is past they are repaired again in the spring.

As I understand the object of the bill as it now is, it is to allow the Government money to be spent on repairs of precisely that character. I do not want to do anything to stop the easy flow of the appropriation to needy places, but I do not think we ought to spend the Government money on temporary repairs of that kind.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts labors under a misapprehension in that regard. The work of which he speaks is not road construction.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. STERLING. That is maintenance of the road. The road having once been built, although it be a dirt road, graded up, and graded up scientifically, as it should be done, the matter of keeping it maintained or in repair thereafter will rest with the State authorities, the local authorities. It is the construction of roads, miles and miles in length, in the first place, that makes the hardship in my State and in many other States similarly situated. Then, with a road like that, comes the somewhat burdensome task, too, of afterwards keeping it in repair by the local authorities, and the local authorities are required, under the provisions of the bill, to keep it in repair.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there may be some doubt about the proposition that the Federal Government should engage in aid of constructing State roads; there may be some ground for debate on the question as to how much aid the Government should furnish the State; there may be some question as to whether now is the time to furnish such aid; those are debatable questions; but, I submit, Mr. President, that the provision for good roads, as contained in this bill, is not or cannot be one for serious debate.

The bill provides for good roads for all of the States in the Union to the extent of the Federal aid provided therein. It recognizes the fact that in some places it is, perhaps, better to use cement, concrete, or brick, and that in other places that is impracticable and can not be done. We safeguard the Government appropriation with every means that is reasonable or that could be required in safely investing the Federal funds. Each State has to contribute the peoples' money of that State for building every rod of road that is aided by the Federal Government, and in most of the States the construction of good roads has come to be almost an exact science. The State officials are not going to waste their peoples' money in the construction of dirt roads that are only temporary in character. If they did so, they could never draw another dollar of Federal money in the construction of roads thereafter.

Mr. LODGE. Let me ask the Senator there, why not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator from Massachusetts will wait, I will tell him. I was just coming to the discussion of that point. The bill provides that the roads and the plan for their construction shall be first presented to the Secretary of Agriculture by the State, and that he shall approve them; that they shall be roads which shall be maintained in the condition in which they were built for at least 10 years, according to an amendment that has been introduced, but without the amendment they must be maintained in good condition for all time or else no further money can be drawn from the Federal Treasury. That is the provision of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I know that that is the provision of the bill; but what protection have you as to the original character of the roads, which is the standard?

Mr. TOWNSEND. We have the protection, first, of the common sense and patriotism of the various officials of the States, who will not spend money out of the Federal Treasury for building bad roads. The States are interested not alone in the first year's appropriation, but are even more interested in subsequent years.

Mr. LODGE. I am not troubled about the officials of the States.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We have the further protection that the Secretary of Agriculture, knowing that this is a bill passed for the purpose of constructing good roads, will not spend a dollar or allow a dollar to be spent for bad roads.

Mr. LODGE. Not even on the eve of an election?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think so. I have no fear of that.

Mr. President, I think we have surrounded this bill with every safeguard that could be reasonably required. I realize, of course, that Senators who represent States which have stone roads, and a large number of them, which have built their roads to a great extent, and are to be commended for having done so, that these Senators understand good roads to mean such as those States have built, and do not understand that equally satisfactory roads can be built of other material in other States. These States are to be commended on what they have done. They have had the money and they have used it for good purposes. But they should not set up their standard for the rest of the States to follow, for it might not be possible to follow it in other States.

I can see no possible objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire. I think that what his amendment provides is the intention of the bill. I do not think any other kind of roads should be constructed. I also claim that the roads will be properly constructed if that amendment does not obtain. The States are as greatly and as intelligently interested in good roads as the Congress. The roads must be built as nearly permanent as possible, considering the material and the conditions of the country of the locality where the roads are to be constructed. That is to be the standard; that is to be the guide. The committee which framed this bill has tried to safeguard the Federal appropriation against misappropriation, and I believe this bill does it in a proper and practicable manner.

This bill, it seems to me, is very much better than the bill that came over to us from the other House. It certainly means more to me along the line of permanent good roads than does that bill; and I am, therefore, very anxious that it should be passed. I do not want any provision inserted in the bill which will make it impossible to spend money in States where the material is such that, under the possible standardized definition of permanent roads, they can not build roads at all. In other words, I want it applicable to every State in the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if we take the definition of the word "permanent," as given us by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], there could be practically no roads built except those built of Belgian blocks and brick. The Senator read from the dictionary the definition "lasting, or intended to last indefinitely; not subject to change"; that is to say, a character of road which, when built, lasts so indefinitely into the future that you have not any conception of the period of time when it will wear out. That is the meaning of the word "permanent," as defined by the dictionary.

I do not understand that the term has so gone into road building as to give it a definite status; I do not understand that the term has been extended clearly and unmistakably to macadam roads and to asphalt roads. I know in my section how long a macadam roads lasts; I know how long an asphalt road lasts. In my section the only two roads that we have built that have not a recognized definite limitation of their life are the heavy granite blocks, Belgian blocks we call them, and brick. None of us desire any such limitation. The bill would be objectionable if it were so. Those are not the kind of roads of which we are thinking or that we want.

There are some parts of the southeastern section with which I am especially familiar where the best road is made from macadam. There is another part of that section where the best road is not made from macadam, but where a splendid road is built by taking clay and a peculiar phosphate gravel, which binds and makes a beautiful road. Well drained and reasonably cared for, such a road can be used for automobiles and gives splendid service. It would not stand very heavy wagon hauling continuously, such as the heavy hauling in our streets, but for the hauling to which those sections are subjected, it makes a perfect road.

There are sections in which I have seen a road built from a peculiar top soil and a clay base. I have seen such a road connected with a macadam road and subjected to the same wear, and I have seen it outlast the macadam road. So, Mr. President, we can not for a moment think, it seems to me, of using the word "permanent."

What is the plan of this bill? It is that the representatives of the States interested in the development of good roads shall prepare a list of roads and the plans for their improvement. They are interested, deeply interested, in what they are doing, and the State authorities are to put up at least half the money. Surely we can feel that they would not be engaged in wasting the money of their own people. Then the Secretary of Agriculture by his officers goes over the project, and it must meet his approval before the project is accepted.

I think that the bill, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has said, is very much the best proposition that has been submitted to us, and that it is properly safeguarded. I think it would be a serious injury to the bill and a handicap to the purposes we have if such language as that suggested by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio were adopted. It would eliminate from the benefits of the legislation one-half of the State in which I live, for in half of the State we make no macadam roads, and yet we have beautiful roads. We build them with clay and the prosphate gravel to which I have referred, and they bind together. Nobody has yet analyzed that particular gravel and explained why it does so well. Our State chemist has not been able to give a definite description of the material contained in the gravel to enable him to account for its binding force and its resistance to autos and its substantial value. Still the great value exists.

The conditions vary all over the country, and I think the bill is in just about as good shape, so far as its language is concerned, as we can make it, and it would almost destroy its value in many sections if the language proposed by the Senator from Ohio were used.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should regret very much to see the word "permanent" incorporated in the bill. To my mind it is a misnomer; there is in reality no such thing as a permanent roadway. A brick road would be considered in ordinary parlance a permanent road; yet it is a fact that I have seen bricks of the finest character brought from Akron, Ohio, laid in New Jersey on a prepared base, worn into ruts, so that they had to be removed and other brick pavements laid down. Within the short span of my own life I have seen so-called permanent roadways ground into ruts. What I want, and what I believe we all want, is good roads, and I believe that insistence upon the incorporation in the bill of the language proposed by the Senator from Ohio will make it practically impossible to have good roads as a result of this proposed legislation.

In my own State we have constructed many macadam roads; we have constructed many brick roads; and we have constructed many of what are called Amesite roads, which consist of ground rock, with asphaltum, laid in different layers and firmly rolled. By that process there is obtained a fine, splendid, and reasonably permanent surface; but so far as actual permanency is concerned, it is a physical impossibility to attain it. There are miles of road in the State of New Jersey, particularly in the southern portion of the State, where the climate is very much milder than it is in the northern portion, where the frost does not disintegrate and tear up the road. That is one of the great destroyers of roads—the disintegration and tearing up of the road by frost—and in the southern part of the State that difficulty is reduced to a minimum. So that it would be really a waste of money in the great stretches, running through Atlantic and Cumberland Counties along the sea, to lay brick roads or to lay Telford pavements or to lay macadam. It would be necessary to carry the cracked stone across from the spurs of the Blue Ridge Mountains, which traverse the State in its more northerly and westerly portions, and all this would involve an expense and an extravagance, if not, indeed, a waste of the public money. When a reasonably fine road can be made in that section of the State by using the native clay foundation, with the shore pebbles, which are close at hand and which bind quite well, provided the road is shaped up and well drained. As the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] has said, the drainage factor is very important. It is necessary to shape up the road well, so that there may be good drainage, so that there may be a "dry footing," as the engineers say. When the road is thus shaped and drained, it is rolled with heavy steam rollers until there is a compact and firm foundation upon which is put the dressing of 4 or 6 or 8 inches, as the case may be, of clay and then gravel. By this process a superb road is obtained. Then, if possible—and, of course, in practically all sections it is quite possible—the roads should be oiled.

I have laid across a section of my farm, three-quarters of a mile in length, a Telford paving road, consisting of big rocks, then topped with finer grades of stone, which is gradually worked in, and then a layer of crushed stone put on. I have seen the surface of that road disintegrate in time, and in most sections such a road will disintegrate under heavy wear and great travel, so that it has to be taken up and resurfaced. If, however, such a road can be covered with heavy oil the road will be saved from disintegration, the water will be kept out of it, and it will last almost forever. The oiling twice a year of a macadamized road with heavy oil will keep the road in fairly good condition.

Under the provisions of the bill as it now is, in my State—and I believe the conditions in my State are no different from the conditions in parts of New York State and parts of Pennsylvania and other States which I have seen, such as Georgia and South Carolina—you will have roads of infinitely good quality and roads which will be lasting, but without the thought of permanency. To burden the measure by adding the word "permanent" will make it a practical impossibility for the bill to have any effect in the suburbs and in the outskirts of the cities and populous centers, and will practically shut out good roads for all time. I think the word "substantial" would be a reasonably safe term.

Mr. BANKHEAD obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I will only take a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will only take a moment.

Mr. POMERENE. I thought I possibly might shorten the discussion somewhat, but I will not insist.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I have not said a word on the good-roads bill, much as I am interested in it; but I can say one thing as to permanency, and that is, if any roads proposed to be constructed under this bill will last as long as the debate on it seems destined to last there will be no use splitting hairs as to what the word "permanent" means. We seem to take up one word and discuss it here for days at a time, when we all know that the character of roads in one section of the country, although they are the best that can be made for that particular section, may not be at all appropriate in another section.

Take Oregon, with its enormous rainfall, and the State of the honored Senator [Mr. WALSH] who now occupies the chair, and the condition in the two States are just as different as though one were at the North Pole and the other in a torrid region. So it is simply a question of good roads for the various localities. However, I arose to resent particularly the assumption that Congress is honest and the people dishonest, and so anxious are the people to throw away the public money that they will throw away $10 of their own to $1 of the Government in order to accomplish this beneficent purpose; that the State that spends $10 will throw it away in order to get the beautiful opportunity of throwing away $1 of public money with it.

The safest way to leave it is with the communities that have to use it. That is not only the safest place but that is the most sensible place to leave it. To tell me that the Secretary of Agriculture, 2,000 miles from my home and more, will know more about it than the engineers and the people who are attempting to construct this road strikes me as simply ridiculous.

I have nothing more to say. I shall say nothing more on the bill, for I am afraid that I myself have already added too much to a tireless and endless debate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment, do I understand that the Senator from Alabama would be willing to accept my amendment with the word "permanent" changed to "substantial"?

Mr. BANKHEAD. After consulting with different members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, while we feel that the amendment is entirely unnecessary, at the same time, to satisfy the Senator from Ohio and to help the bill along toward a vote, we will accept that amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to be perfectly frank about this. I am not satisfied with that amendment at all, but I should very much prefer it to the bill as it was originally drawn. I recognize that these are largely matters of compromise, and I am not questioning the good faith of anyone else. I would much prefer to have the amendment as I originally presented it, but I also feel that in the present mood of the Senate perhaps they would not accept the amendment with the word "permanent" in it. Therefore, if the chairman and the members of the committee are willing to accept the amendment with the word "substantial" substituted for the word "permanent," I am willing to let the matter rest there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Ohio modifies his amendment to the amendment of the committee by substituting the word "substantial" for the word "permanent."

Mr. TOWNSEND. He accepts the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment to the amendment as thus modified.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be stated as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 13, after the word "require," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve only such projects as may be substantial in character, and the expenditure of funds hereby authorized shall be applied only to such improvements.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I understand now that the situation really is this: The Senator from Ohio accepts the amendment to his amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire substituting the word "substantial" for the word "permanent."

Mr. POMERENE. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio adopts the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, and it thus becomes his own amendment, and he has a right, without any action of the Senate, thus to modify his amendment. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it is to be laid aside at 2 o'clock and the rural-credits bill taken up?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the necessity of the case, I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood it was.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I was wondering, in view of the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire that he was not going to press for any vote to-day, but would do so to-morrow, why we could not go on with the good-roads bill this afternoon.

Mr. HOLLIS. Because there are so many amendments to be presented to the rural-credits bill that I wanted very much to get it in shape for voting to-morrow. That is the reason.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. After the amendment adopted at the close of section 1, I move to insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1, and following the amendment already agreed to at that place, it is proposed to insert:

Nor shall any road constructed under this act be connected directly with any toll road.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that. What does the Senator mean by "toll road," though? We already have a provision in the bill that none of these roads shall charge tolls.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I understand that; but there are toll roads out here in some of the States, and you might build a road directly connected with that, leading off somewhere. I do not want to have that done. I do not want to have any road constructed with Government funds that is directly connected with a toll road.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It seems to me that is a very unusual and unnatural amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES. It may be true that it is very unusual; but it is very unusual that there should be these toll roads in some of the States. In many of the States there are no toll roads at all, and they ought to be done away with.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. JONES. And we ought not to use the Government money in the construction of a road connecting directly with a toll road in any State in the country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator mean crossing a toll road? What does he mean by "connected with a toll road"?

Mr. JONES. I mean going out from it directly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator mean an extension?

Mr. JONES. Yes; a feeder, or an extension of it. That is what I mean. Of course, if it runs across it, I do not mean that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Suppose one of these roads that carries the rural mails goes out from a little town that has a toll road running through it?

Mr. JONES. It would not connect with the toll road, would it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no connection.

Mr. JONES. If there is not any connection, this amendment would not apply.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What does the Senator mean by "connected"?

Mr. JONES. Going out from it or being an extension of it—a branch or feeder or something of that sort. That is what I mean by "connected directly with it."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Suppose there is a toll road already in existence, and it goes on to a main road, and the investment has been made, and the people who constructed it are trying to get a return there, is it possible that you would not build the main road at all, under this act, in order to prevent a connection with the toll road?

Mr. JONES. If the main road is already there, it does not need to be constructed under this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but it may be that it is not improved; it is not constructed as it should be.

Mr. JONES. I would not construct such a road with Government money. The State can construct it if it wants to; but I would not construct, with the money of the United States, a road making connections with or an extension of a toll road.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think the object is good, to do away with toll roads; but to say that we will not build a road because there happens to be a cross road coming in there which already collects toll, and which probably has its investment there solely and purely by virtue of the fact that it does collect tolls, it seems to me would not be fair.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think it will be very difficult to find, in any State of the Union, desirable road building to the extent of the amount of money that the National Government will provide under this bill, without connecting the roads so constructed in any way with toll roads? This is only a drop in the bucket.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But it may be an important road. It may be one of the best roads there are. We have very few toll roads in the State of Colorado, and yet we have some up in the mountains where road building costs a very large amount of money. The county probably would not put up the money, and individuals undertook it, and it was a great benefit to the people who used it, and they were willing to pay the toll. Of course we would like to have those toll roads taken over by the public in some way; but to say that simply because a toll road is collecting money, where the investment is already made, a road connecting with it shall not be built by the Government, seems to me to be going pretty far.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think that where road construction must be carried on under the circumstances and difficulties he has just suggested we are going to go into that territory under this bill for the construction of roads?

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the toll road may be the difficult part of the country to go through, while the other may be the road that could be constructed at very reasonable expense.

Mr. JONES. The sole purpose of this amendment is to prevent the use of Federal money in the construction of roads that will connect with or be extensions of these toll roads. I am not in favor of connecting with these roads, or extending them, with the Government money. If the Senator is in favor of doing that, of course he will vote against the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; if you are going to build a road, under this bill, for the very purpose of having a new toll road constructed beyond it, I think probably that would be bad, although I believe in State control of these matters. I believe the State authorities are the persons who will best solve the individual problems, and for that reason I believe it is best to leave the matter to them. As the Senator knows, there is a provision in the bill that all roads constructed under its provisions shall be free from tolls of all kinds.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, that is good; and probably if the road we construct is to be a part of the main road, a feeder to it, as it were, there might be a limitation of that kind; but to say they can not connect with a toll road when they have made their investment is going to deprive that part of the State of any benefit under this act.

Mr. JONES. Why, Mr. President, the amount provided in this bill is a mere drop in the bucket. So far as the money is concerned that will be invested in the building of roads, the amount of road that is built under this bill will be a mere drop in the bucket. I have here a statement showing that in 1914 the amount of money spent in the different States for road building was over $249,000,000. If there are roads needed that may go out from a toll road, or connect with a toll road, the States can take care of that without any trouble at all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They would not get any of the Government money, however.

Mr. JONES. Why, certainly not; but they could do it without Government money. We are not providing this Government money for the building of all roads that are needed anywhere and everywhere in the States. As I said before, what will be done under this bill will be a mere drop in the bucket; and, as has been said many times in this debate, the States and counties and townships will do most of the road building.

There are over 2,000,000 miles of road in the different States now. We are not going either to reconstruct them or to construct anything like that amount of road. There are toll roads in the different States. I do not say they are not a good thing, for they probably are; but it certainly is very desirable that these roads should be gotten rid of as soon as possible. At any rate, in my judgment, the National Government ought not to use its money in the construction of these roads to connect with or be extensions of toll roads.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE of Maryland in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. I was just going to ask the Senator if it might not be that a road within a State for which there was the greatest demand and the greatest necessity would connect with a toll road?

Mr. JONES. Why, you can imagine all sorts of extreme things.

Mr. STERLING. In such a case, under the Senator's amendment, the Government would be precluded from aiding in building that necessary road, for which there was such great demand, simply because it connected with a toll road.

Mr. JONES. Well, it would not do any very great harm to get rid of that toll road. Furthermore, the State might use part of the money that it is going to expend on independent roads to put the necessary road in there.

Take the State of Washington, for instance. We are going to appropriate lots of money for the building of roads that will not get one dollar of this Federal money. If a situation should develop such as the Senator has suggested, we would use our money in the building of that necessary road, and we would put this other road where it was desirable and necessary. Nobody will assume that we are going to use this money in the building of unnecessary or undesirable roads; and we certainly will be able to find necessary and desirable roads that have no toll roads connected with them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I feel very much in sympathy with the object and purpose of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I do not want to aid in any possible way the perpetuation of toll roads. They seem to me to be a relic of barbarism, and they ought to be dispensed with as rapidly as possible.

I fear, however, that if the Senator's amendment were added to this bill we would be punishing great sections of the country that really have no control over or authorship of these toll roads. I should like some method—I do not know just what to suggest—whereby we could get around it without penalizing the communities that happen to be so unfortunate as to have these toll roads. They have been entirely abolished in our State, and I presume in most other States. I did not suppose there were half a dozen toll roads left in the United States.

I am in sympathy with the object of the Senator's amendment, and yet I do not want to interfere with or penalize the communities that are unfortunate enough to have these roads, and prevent them from securing the great blessings and benefits that will accrue from the passage of this road bill.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. LANE. I do not understand the viewpoint of the Senator from New Jersey. It would not be penalizing them. On the other hand, it would be the prevention of paying them a premium and giving them an inducement to continue these toll roads. If we bring a good road to them we add to their business, and the tendency would be to make these toll roads permanent. If you do not render them that aid, they themselves must help to keep up their approaches; and the sooner they quit doing that the sooner the people will take over the toll roads.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But the Senator can imagine a situation where there was a toll road, and the State authorities might deem it wise to tap that toll road.

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The amendment of the Senator from Washington would make it impossible to tap that road, so that the community would be deprived of the advantages and blessings of this great good-roads movement.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will permit me, last summer I was over a road, the mountainous part of which was in a remote region and had been a toll road, and the lower part of the road, the approach to it, was through a boggy country where it was very expensive to maintain roads. The county had maintained that part of it for years at an enormous expense, while the easily kept up portion of the road had been in the hands of a private owner who made the larger profit, the expense of keeping up the approaches being borne by the counties.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I wish the Senator from Washington might devise some way whereby I could vote for his amendment, for I am in sympathy with the idea, but I fear that in its operation it would be a detriment to the great communities that may be afflicted with the toll-road system.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him what reason exists that would prevent the State from putting in such a road as the Senator refers to?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Does the Senator mean appropriating enough to buy up the toll road?

Mr. JONES. No. If a road were needed in connection with this toll road, what would prevent the State from putting one in?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. There would be no objection. It would cost a little more money perhaps and necessitate a little larger appropriation, but still, on general principles, I am so much opposed to that old relic of barbarism in the United States that I think I shall vote for the amendment. I do not care for toll roads.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I think the objection to this amendment is the indefiniteness of the meaning of the word "connected." It does not seem to me that we ought to embarrass the Secretary of Agriculture with the insertion of any amendment of this character. This bill may contemplate the building of national roads several hundred miles in length. At the end of 100 miles such a road might connect with a toll road. There is nothing which would so embarrass a court or the Secretary of Agriculture as the insertion of an indefinite word like this in this bill.

In the body of the bill there is an expression of the policy of Congress against toll roads. To my mind it should be left there, and I would not overload the bill with an indefinite and ambiguous expression which would very much embarrass any governmental department which had charge of the enforcement of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2986.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know there are a number of Senators who expect to offer amendments who are not in the Chamber; and in order that they reach here in time, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	Nelson	Smoot
Bankhead	Gronna	Norris	Stone
Borah	Harding	Oliver	Sutherland
Brady	Hollis	Overman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Husting	Page	Taggart
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Pittman	Tillman
Clapp	Jones	Poindexter	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Kenyon	Ransdell	Vardaman
Colt	La Follette	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Curtis	Lane	Shafroth	Walsh
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Warren
du Pont	Lodge	Sherman	Williams
Fall	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Ga.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber on account of illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VARDAMAN in the chair). Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4856) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments and request a conference with the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask that the unfinished business be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD in connection with the consideration of the rural-credits bill a memorandum which I have had prepared in regard to the savings-bank features of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

GOVERNMENT SAVINGS-BANK FEATURES OF THE HOLLIS BILL.

The capital stock of each Federal land bank shall be divided into shares of $5, and may be subscribed for and held by any individual, firm, or corporation, or by the Government of any State or of the United States. (Sec. 5, par. 2.)

The Federal farm-loan board is authorized to prescribe the times and conditions of the payment of subscriptions to capital stock. (Sec. 5, par. 1.)

Each farm-loan association and the Government of the United States shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock held by it * * * and no other shareholder shall be permitted to vote. (Sec. 5, par. 2.)

Any shares except those held by national farm-loan associations, may be transferred or hypothecated. (Sec. 5.)

All stock of a Federal land bank held by the United States is subject to withdrawal. (Sec. 5, p. 16, line 17.)

Stock held by national farm-loan associations may be withdrawn, but only at discretion of the Federal land bank's directors. (Sec. 7, p. 23, line 17.)

Withdrawal may be allowed to other shareholders of a Federal land bank. This results from a fair interpretation of the powers of the Federal farm-loan board (secs. 3 and 20) and of the Federal land banks. (Secs. 4 and 5.)

Any number of shares may be held by the same shareholder of a Federal land bank. (Sec. 5, par. 2.)

Every Federal land bank may accept deposits of current funds from any holder of one of its shares. If the shareholder be not a national farm-loan association, the deposits may be payable upon demand. (Sec. 14, par. 1.)

Interest at any rate may be allowed by a Federal land bank, except interest shall not be paid on deposits from national farm-loan associations. (Sec. 13, p. 36, line 8.) The reason for this exception is that the Federal land bank is to act as bailee of the associations.

Shares issued by the national farm-loan associations shall be withdrawable and only $5 apiece. Any number may be issued to the same member. (Sec. 8, p. 24.)

Every national farm-loan association may accept deposits of current funds in any amount from either members or outsiders. Nothing prevents the Federal farm-loan board from authorizing or directing national farm-loan associations to pay interest. If an association wishes, it may issue 4 per cent certificates against the deposits. (Sec. 11, p. 28, line 24.)

All deposits, whether representing certificates or not, must be forthwith transmitted by the associations to their Federal land bank. (Sec. 11, p. 29, line 4.)

National farm-loan associations must invest in the stock of their Federal land bank all the proceeds of obligatory shares of borrowers. (Sec. 7, p. 23, line 9.) But such investment may be withdrawn only at the discretion of such land bank's directors. (Id., line 17.)

All receipts from loans must be transmitted by an association to its Federal land bank. (Sec. 25, p. 62, line 1.) As a stockholder, the association may also deposit all other funds in such bank. The Federal farm-loan board may direct this. (Sec. 20, g and h; also sec. 3, line 5.)

The Federal land banks may use any of their funds for buying "qualified" mortgages from joint-stock banks or from other agents authorized by the Federal farm-loan board. (Sec. 14, p. 37, line 6.) Consequently the free or cheap money supplied by the Secretary of the Treasury, the proceeds of the sale of bonds issued through public functionaries, and all other funds of the Federal land banks may be used for financing institutions conducted solely for gain.

Farm mortgages are not required as a security for farm-loan bonds. The registrar may accept United States bonds as collateral. (Sec. 21, p. 51, line 19.)

Farm mortgages are not an obligatory investment for any funds of the Federal land banks. Amortization or other payments on loans may be used for purchasing bonds of the United States Government or converted into money. (Sec. 25, p. 62, d, e.)

The terms "equipment" and "improvement" are to be defined by the Federal farm-loan board. (Sec. 12, p. 31, line 15.) Consequently it would be possible for loans to be made for any short or long term purpose, and the board may define the term "first mortgage." (Sec. 2.)

All current funds may be deposited at interest and subject to check in member banks of the Federal reserve system. (Sec. 13, p. 36, line 4.)

Federal land banks may devote all their funds, resources, and business to buying and selling United States bonds. (Id., line 15.)

Federal land banks may borrow money, give security, and pay interest thereon, and use this power for dealing in bonds of the United States Government. (Id., line 11.)

Joint-stock land banks may use all resources in dealing in bonds of the United States Government. (Sec. 18, p. 45, line 11.)

The issuance of certificates, convertible into bonds of the Federal land banks, and the redemption in cash of such bonds upon cancellation of the certificates permit the current funds and credit of national farm-loan associations to be used in buying United States bonds. (Sec. 11, pp. 28 and 29.)

The effect of these clauses, fairly construed, is to give general powers to the Federal land banks to accept savings and ordinary deposits from any source, public or private, without regard to amount. Another effect also is to permit the Federal land banks to abandon farm mortgaging, and devote all their credit, resources, and activities in finding money for any undertaking upon which the United States Government might decide to embark.

The proposed system would be a Government system. The clauses from which this results are:

The system shall be established and directed by the Secretary of the Treasury and four other appointees of the President and Senate of the United States. Secs. 3, 4, and 20.)

This Federal farm-loan board shall select the first directors of all Federal land banks. (Sec. 4, p. 8, line 23.) Two-fifths of the board of each Federal land bank shall always consist of representatives of the United States. (Id., p. 12, line 1.)

The three-fifths of each such board shall be elected by national farm-loan associations, if any are formed. (Id., p. 11, line 23.) But such associations can be formed only by a Federal land bank and with the consent of the Federal farm-loan board. (Sec. 7, p. 22, line 14.)

Such national farm-loan associations can not exercise any of their functions except under regulations prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board (secs. 2, 3, and 20), nor make any loans except those approved by Federal appraisers and by their Federal land bank. (Sec. 19, pp. 47–49.)

The Federal land banks shall be depositaries and financial agents of the United States Government. (Sec. 6.) Their bonds and collateral shall be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States. (Sec. 29.)

Total tax exemption is to be accorded to the bonds and mortgages of both Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks and in every other respect to the Federal land banks and national farm-loan associations. (Id.)

In view of these clauses, the Federal land banks would be Government banks for savings and deposits, while their entire resources may be used in financing Government projects instead of in farm mortgaging.

The total tax exemptions, together with the free or cheap money supplied in cash by the Secretary of the Treasury or through the issue of 5-per cent bonds or any other kind of credit instrument would place building and loan associations, mutual savings banks, life insurance companies, and every other kind of existing lending, savings, or thrift association and all other moneyed corporations at a disadvantage with the new institutions to be formed, unless the States also should enact laws exempting all money and credits from taxation.

Mr. LODGE. I also present a resolution adopted by the American Federation of Labor in convention at San Francisco, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolution on rural credits adopted by the American Federation of Labor in convention at San Francisco.

We believe that national conditions vary so widely with the several sections of the country that it would be unfair, if not actually dangerous, to undertake to prescribe one system or plan for the guidance and control of all.

We would, therefore, recommend that the matter of rural credits, aside from the enactment of a general law to govern the fundamentals, be left to the determination of the different sections or States for the carrying out of the matter in detail, until such time as experience shall have determined what, if any, is the better course to pursue to insure the rights and properly safeguard the interests of all.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I believe the pending amendment is one offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], but he is absent from the Senate at this moment. He will be in a little later. I ask that that amendment may be temporarily passed over.

There have been several committee amendments passed over for one reason and another. One of them is the provision as to exemption from taxation. I shall ask to have that disposed of to-morrow when the senior Senator from Iowa will be present to discuss it.

I should like at this time to have the Senate deal with the postal-savings amendment, which is found on page 67. It has not been read, so the Secretary may read it now, and I ask for action upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VARDAMAN in the chair). The amendment will be read:

The SECRETARY. On page 67, after line 18, the Committee on Banking and Currency proposes to insert:

Section 9 of the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to establish postal-savings depositaries for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes" (36 U. S. Stat. L., 814), shall be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding a new paragraph at the close of said section, to read as follows:

"Federal farm-loan bonds authorized by the Federal farm-loan board and issued by any Federal land bank may be purchased by the trustees, in lieu of United States bonds or other securities, for the purpose of investing postal-savings deposits under the provisions of this section. Whenever funds shall be withdrawn from postal-savings depositaries for investment, the trustees are hereby authorized to purchase Federal farm-loan bonds in the open market or from any Federal land bank authorized to issue the same: Provided, That in no case shall such farm-loan bonds be purchased at more than par nor shall more than 30 per cent of the postal-savings deposits be invested at any one time in farm-loan bonds as herein provided."

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I will state for the information of the Senate the position that is taken on the two sides of this question. No suggestion has been more strongly urged from various parts of the country than the one that the postal-savings fund should form a very natural source from which to obtain farm loans for farmers, and that would be a very natural thing to do. The objections to it are these: In the first place, the Post Office Department is strongly opposed to it. It says that the postal savings are made in nearly all cases, at least in the larger amounts in the larger cities, so that they are not funds that come from the farming communities and therefore they ought not to be invested in farming communities. The Post Office Department says, further, that these postal savings are on deposit on demand, so that they are likely to be called for at any time, and that the average period for which a savings deposit is made in postal-savings banks is something like three years—I think the department makes the statement that they are all withdrawn once in three years—so that they ought not to be invested in long-term loans or bonds.

The other side of it is this, that although each individual deposit may be withdrawn from the postal-savings department in three years, the aggregate of the postal savings steadily and constantly increases, so that there has never been a time when they have actually diminished, and when a crisis or panic comes for any reason the postal savings instead of decreasing, as they do in some banks, actually increase. The tendency is for foreigners or men who are rather ignorant in financial matters to take their savings out of State institutions and put them in the hands of the Government in a time of panic, so that really the aggregate of postal savings is not diminished, and if the savings were invested in bonds they would not be called upon for quick realization.

The chief reason why I wanted this clause in the act is a constitutional one. I have felt that if the constitutionality of the act were attacked and there were nothing else on which to base it, it might be based on this section, because this would be an instrumentality for carrying out the postal system, offering through the postal-savings banks an instrumentality of the Government for a safe form of investment.

I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this section is not obligatory at all; it is merely permissive. The trustees of the postal-savings fund are allowed to invest not more than 30 per cent of the postal-savings deposits in farm-loan bonds. On the whole I am inclined to think the section ought to be retained on the ground that it may be vital to the constitutionality of the act, and it certainly can do no harm.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at the time Congress established the Postal Savings Bank System and entered into that line of business—for I call it a business—every precaution was taken to preserve the money so deposited against any possible loss. I suppose no Senator will doubt the statement that where long-time loans are made the money so loaned should not be upon call. The greatest difficulty that banks have experienced in the past, and some of the greatest losses that the banks have sustained, and many of the greatest failures of the banks of the country come by lending money for long periods upon real estate. The loans were amply secured and perfectly good, providing the bank making such loans had not been called upon for unforeseen demands requiring ready money, but it is well understood in banking circles that real estate loans can not be called like other loans made upon securities that can be sold readily in all parts of the country and in all money markets. Of late, when a real estate loan is made by a bank it is usually made by savings banks and trust companies, such banks having little demand made upon them by their depositors, and their deposits generally are increasing every year rather than decreasing.

Mr. President, conditions could arise in this country where the Government of the United States would be called upon for the postal savings funds deposited in the different parts of the country, and I doubt the wisdom of extending the power to the postal savings bank to use the postal funds to purchase long-time mortgage loans on real estate. Yet I recognize that what the Senator from New Hampshire says there is some ground for. We are in hopes that the postal savings fund will increase year by year, but if the bill as it passed the Senate increasing the amount of deposits allowed by one individual becomes a law, it is very doubtful in my mind whether that will be the case; and if it is the case, then there is the greater danger from the withdrawal of postal funds than there is under the law to-day.

If we allow an individual to deposit $2,000, as the bill provided as it passed the Senate, it seems to me that the individual who would have that amount of money on deposit would simply put it there temporarily and for safety, and the first good chance he had for investment he would withdraw his deposit and invest the money at a higher rate of interest. That is natural. We need expect nothing else. If the postal fund is built up with that kind of deposits and the demands made upon the Government of $2,000 at a time from all parts of the country, I am fearful that there might or could arise conditions that would bring trouble to the Government.

There are many securities that can be purchased by the postal savings fund. There is no necessity at all for extending the list so as to allow the fund to be invested in mortgage bonds. If there was any lack of ability upon the part of the officials of our Government to invest the postal savings fund in first-class securities, where there can be no loss, and in securities that the Congress of the United States specifically provided for when the system was created, then I can see plainly why this amendment should be adopted and become a part of the bill.

But, Mr. President, I myself think this is going too far. I do not believe the acceptance of the amendment is going to assist the bill as far as any question of constitutionality is concerned. I do not believe that the constitutionality of the bill is going to rest upon this amendment. If I did, I would be fearful indeed of the whole bill failing.

Mr. President, we are entering here upon a new endeavor on the part of our Government to extend aid to the farmers of the country. Let us confine ourselves in this bill to that end, and that only. This amendment is not going to help or increase any advantage that may come to the farmer. This amendment is not going to make the mortgage on the farmer's land sell any more readily or at any greater price, and it should not be so.

I believe the postal-savings fund should be invested in such security as can be realized upon at the very shortest possible notice. In creating the Postal Savings System I think Congress went just as far as it ought to go in providing what class of securities should be invested in. If Senators were present, and if we would go into this question thoroughly and the Senators were interested enough to look up the question carefully and to know really what it meant, I believe the Senate would not vote for this amendment. I believe that the bill would be better without it.

In saying that I do not want in any way to cast doubt upon the act or upon the good that it would bring to the farmers of the country if it is passed in a proper form, but I do not want to interfere with the funds of the people that are deposited in the postal savings banks and bring about any sort of condition that would in any way make it impossible for the depositors of postal-savings funds to get their money when they made application for it.

This amendment is contrary to good banking principles. Mr. President, a commercial bank that has large deposits doing an active commercial business must keep on hand a greater percentage of its deposits than a savings bank with the same amount of deposits; and every State law recognizes this principle. Our national laws recognize it. Scarcely any commercial bank loans for longer than 90 days. It is true that some loans are made for six months, but taking the most of the loans the limit is 90 days. There will be no loans under this bill unless the loan is made for years, not months. If it was otherwise, the measure would not benefit the farmers of the country.

So, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to this amendment, because I believe there is no good in it and a great deal of harm can come from it.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has announced some very sound banking principles, and with nearly all of them I heartily concur. I wish to call his attention, first, to the fact that the trustees of the postal-savings fund are not permitted to invest any of the funds in mortgages on real estate. There would not be anything unusual about that. The Senator has himself directed attention to the fact that the savings banks are the proper institutions to make loans on real estate. Nearly every savings bank in the country loans more than 30 per cent of its funds on mortgages, and we provide that not more than 30 per cent of this fund can be invested, not in mortgage loans but in farm-loan bonds.

It is the very purpose of this bill to make the security of the farms mobile, to get them in a shape where they will pass current, where they will be quickly salable on the market. Therefore we authorize the trustees of the postal savings bank to invest in long-term mortgages and in a bond which is quickly salable on the market.

No matter what happens to these farm-loan bonds, no depositor in a postal savings bank is going to suffer. He is not obliged to have recourse to the security. The Government pays him. Of course if the Government makes a bad investment the Government will lose it, but it is not the idea of the Government to be permitted to make a bad investment; it is the idea of the Government to be permitted to make an absolutely safe investment, and one much more profitable. At present postal-bank funds are deposited in the local banks, bearing 2 per cent interest. Under this bill the deposit will carry 4 per cent, and the Government can afford to run a little risk for the sake of getting that additional income. They would very soon, out of the increased income they would get on this investment, have a reserve fund there that would make them absolutely safe.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire what per cent of savings deposits in his State are permitted under the laws of the State to be invested in farm mortgages?

Mr. HOLLIS. There is no limit; that is left to the judgment of the bank. They are authorized to invest their funds in certain securities, among them being farm mortgages, and it is left to them to say what the percentage shall be.

Mr. NORRIS. What has been the practice?

Mr. HOLLIS. The practice is to loan about 30 per cent, I think. I have a statement here of one of the largest savings banks in New Hampshire, with which I was connected as trustee for 15 years. Their statement shows that, out of total assets of $14,493,000, they have loaned on New Hampshire real estate

$1,800,000, which would be about 12 per cent. Their loans on other real estate have been $2,981,000, which would be about 15 per cent. The total amount they have loaned on real estate mortgages is $4,800,000 out of $14,493,000. So it appears to be about that ratio which is considered a perfectly safe amount to have invested in real estate loans. If I thought that a man who deposited in a postal savings bank would run the slightest risk of losing his funds, I would not advocate this measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, I hope, does not think that I made the statement that the depositor would lose his funds?

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator from Utah expressed grave concern for the poor man who deposited his money in postal-savings banks and could not get it. There is not any such man as that.

Mr. SMOOT. No. I think, if the Senator will pardon me, I said I never wanted to see the time come when a depositor could not get his money upon demand; but if this provision were put into the law, it might bring about a condition where he could not do so. I am fully aware that the depositor ultimately will not lose his money. I hope the Senator does not think that I entertained such an idea for a moment. It is only a question of compelling the depositor to wait for a longer period for what he expected, and had a right to expect, he could get upon a certain day. That is all I wanted to call the Senator's attention to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from New Hampshire will pardon me, I do not think the Senator from Utah now quite means what he says, because the depositor would not look to the use the Government might make of the deposits, but would look directly to the Government for the deposits.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I am aware of that, Mr. President; but if the Government, as to the particular fund, has put all of the money into mortgage bonds and has not the money to pay the depositor from that particular fund, then the depositor could not get his money on demand.

Mr. CLAPP. Not at all, Mr. President, unless the Government has put itself in such a position, without reference to this particular fund, that it has not money on hand, and can not get it promptly enough from any source to pay the depositor. The Government would never take the position that it should not pay the postal-bank depositors, simply because the money from that particular fund was not promptly available.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no law, Mr. President, under which the Government of the United States or any official of the Government of the United States can take money from one fund to reimburse another fund, and so money could not be taken from another fund to pay the depositors in the postal-savings banks. If they have not the money, they can not pay it until Congress acts or securities are sold. I know, of course, that the depositors would ultimately get their money. The only question is as to whether they will get it under the provisions of the law according to the arrangements made when they made the deposit.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, according to that theory, no matter what the Government does with the money received from the postal-savings deposits, the depositor must wait until the Government realizes from those deposits. It may have placed the money in banks supposedly perfectly good and ultimately absolutely solvent, and yet it might not be able to immediately respond to a demand for the money. It would be a strange position for the Government to assume, after taking a man's money, as the recipient of a deposit, to say to that man, "Well, we can not pay you until we have traced this fund through its devious course, and get this particular fund back." If that is the law—I do not so understand it—then the postal-savings law should be amended at once. This Government receiving the deposit of a washerwoman ought not to be obliged to say to that woman "We put your money with so and so, and when we get your money back we will return you your deposit." It has been some years since we passed that law, and I am not sufficiently familiar with its terms to either challenge or to accede to the statement of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to cut the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] off from what he was going to say.

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. SMOOT. I was simply going to say to the Senator from Minnesota that under ordinary circumstances the Government of the United States always keeps postal-savings funds enough on hand to meet all demands made upon it, precisely the same as does a successful bank.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course.

Mr. SMOOT. But as to the fund that is invested in bonds provided for in this bill, it would take time to convert them; and if the demand were made upon the postal-savings funds for deposits invested in these bonds, it would be impossible for the Government to meet the demand, not being convertible into ready cash at once.

This bill extends the right of investing the money in mortgage bonds. That was not provided for in the act creating the Postal Savings System. If 30 per cent of all of the money of the savings banks should be invested in this class of bonds, unless there was a ready market for those bonds, or if it should happen that a failure resulted, the money could not be secured if the demand were made upon the Government for payment. It may never happen; and I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire and to the Senator from Minnesota that I hope a condition in this country never will arise where such an occurrence could happen; but I want to say it might happen; and this is only extending, as I say, the authority of investing the postal-savings funds in another class of securities.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; but, Mr. President, I do not think the Senator is yet correct. It would require an absolute provision of law to permit the recipient of a deposit or of funds in its possession from any source, unless they were trust funds, to say to the depositor, "We will not pay you until we realize out of this particular fund." Unless there is some such provision in the law it would be the declared duty of the Government, as it would be the duty of the recipient of any deposit, to make good the deposit without reference to what the recipient had done with the proceeds of that particular deposit.

I do not now recall the language of the law. If the Senator from Utah, with his care, says there is any such express provision in the law, I will yield to his recollection.

Mr. SMOOT. I assure the Senator that that is the only way that postal-fund deposits can be paid—by the money belonging to that fund that the Government has on hand, or the money that the Government receives from the sale of the securities that it has purchased with money belonging to the fund.

Mr. CLAPP. Then it must be because of the provisions of the law itself.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly it is.

Mr. CLAPP. And if that be true, it is misleading to the people of this country, because they believe that when they put a dollar into a postal-savings bank the United States is there to respond to a call for it.

Mr. SMOOT. And it is.

Mr. CLAPP. Not if the United States can say to the individual, "You must wait until we realize out of the proceeds of that deposit."

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question but that the United States will have to do that.

Mr. CLAPP. Then, the sooner that law is amended the better.

Mr. SMOOT. This provision of the bill, if it becomes a law, only takes another step and grants to the postal officials the right to purchase additional securities, a right that was not provided for in the original act; or, in other words, if this amendment is adopted, then the postal-savings department can invest in these land-mortgage bonds.

Mr. CLAPP. Undoubtedly; but authorizing a representative of the Government to invest in a particular security the surplus funds of the Government would not relieve the Government from its ordinary liability to respond to a claim upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a Government fund; it is the postal-savings fund, and that fund belongs to the people who deposit the money. The Government only acts, as it were, like a banker. The Government handles the funds which Congress has authorized it to do.

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator from Utah mean to say that we have passed a law under which the Government may take the money of a depositor in a postal-savings bank, turn that money over to a national bank, and that bank finally and irretrievably becoming insolvent, the Government does not still owe those depositors?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. CLAPP. That is the whole thing.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator from Minnesota is mistaken as to what I have said.

Mr. CLAPP. It is either one alternative or the other; it has got to be.

Mr. SMOOT. No; what I said was that the savings-deposit fund is not the Government's money; that it is the money of the people who deposit the fund with the Government, but that Congress had passed a law authorizing that particular fund to be invested in certain securities.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly. As I said before, if that is the extent of the provision upon which the Senator from Utah hinges his argument then his argument falls, because merely authorizing a Government official to place funds in a certain position would not relieve the Government from its responsibility to pay over the fund.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator from Minnesota does not think that I for one moment intimated that the Government would be relieved of the responsibility of paying such depositors. It is impossible for the Government to be relieved of that responsibility.

Mr. CLAPP. That is what I have been contending for, that no matter what becomes of the deposits or the investment the Government is still liable.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of that, but that is not what this amendment provides.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield further to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, having settled that it is a question between the Government and the depositor, I want to suggest that the only question left is as to the wisdom of the Government, which bears the relation of being the recipient of the deposit, and is ultimately liable for it, investing any of that money in these bonds. It strikes me that, outside of a Government bond, it would be difficult to get a better security than these bonds; and, so far as the Government being embarrassed by a demand on the part of the depositors in the postal savings banks is concerned, if there ever comes a time when this country is embarrassed and there should be a financial panic the one place to which the citizen of this country will go with his funds, the one place from which he will not withdraw his funds, the one place where he will want his funds kept, will be with the Government of the United States through the Postal Savings System. It seems to me it relieves the situation of that contingency. The banks in a community in which postal savings funds may have been deposited might be embarrassed, and the people in that community might want their money; but the one recipient of deposits that never will be called upon in the time of the greatest panic and stringency is the Government itself.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his very clear——

Mr. CLAPP. I want to thank the Senator for his patience in permitting the interruption.

Mr. HOLLIS. I want to thank the Senator for his very clear presentation of the subject. What the Senator says is borne out by the experience of the State savings banks. The State savings banks opposed increasing the amount that any individual might deposit in a postal savings bank, for the very reason, as they said, that "when the time comes when there is a panic the people want to draw their money out of our institutions and put it in the Government savings bank, and that will cripple us. Therefore limit the deposits to $500."

Now, I wish to apply the principles of sound banking to this proposition. There is no doubt that when the Government undertook to accept postal savings it went into the savings-bank business. No banker can do business if he keeps all of his deposits on hand all the time. The commercial banks have ordinarily to keep 15 per cent of their deposits in cash on hand. A savings bank has not the need to keep as much on hand as the commercial bank, and 30 per cent is a very reasonable amount to allow them to invest, even if it were permanently invested; and the Government of the United States can run that risk better than can any financial institution, because they have greater resources back of them; and, therefore, it seems to me entirely reasonable that, in accordance with sound banking principles, this investment should be permitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Now, Mr. President, I should like to direct attention to page 33. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] on Saturday last wanted inserted, in line 15, on page 33, if I recall aright, the words "liens, judgments," so that it would read "taxes, liens, judgments, or assessments."

Mr. CLAPP. On what line is that?

Mr. HOLLIS. Line 15, page 33. I offer that amendment, and hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 15, after the word "taxes," it is proposed to insert "liens, judgments," so that it will read "taxes, liens, judgments, or assessments."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. In line 17, I move the same amendment, after the word "taxes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 17, after the word "taxes," it is proposed to insert "liens, judgments."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, on page 35, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] questioned the accuracy of the language to express the thought; and, in order to make that entirely clear, I suggest this amendment: On page 35, line 22, after the word "security," insert "where default has occurred and" and then strike out "(c)," so that it will read:

Parcels of land mortgaged to it as security where default has occurred, and parcels of land acquired in satisfaction of debts or purchased at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it. But no such bank shall hold title and possession of any real estate—

Here insert "mortgaged," so as to read—mortgaged, purchased, or acquired to secure any debt due to it, for a longer period than five years.

I think that will require all land taken in satisfaction of debt to be sold within five years, and that it will cover the point the Senator from Montana raised. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana whether, in his judgment, that will be satisfactory?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I shall not make any objection to the proposed amendment; but I am very sure that the Senator will agree with me, if he reflects on the matter, that that is an unwise provision, and gives every bank an opportunity to speculate in the land upon which it holds mortgages. It is a most unwise power, it seems to me, to repose in the bank. I see no reason whatever for subdivision (b), because under subdivision (c) the bank is entitled to acquire land in "satisfaction of debts or purchased at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it."

You will observe the provision says:

Parcels of land acquired in satisfaction of debt or purchased at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages—

And so on.

Now, in addition to all that, in addition to land acquired in satisfaction of debts, or land purchased or acquired under judgments, executions, decrees, and that kind of thing, there is still the power given the land bank to purchase land upon which it holds a mortgage. Of course, if the mortgagor wants to sell to the bank and the bank wants to buy, it is a very easy thing to allow the interest to lapse, and then the bank may purchase and stimulate speculation in land with the moneys of the bank.

Mr. HOLLIS. Let me suggest this to the Senator: Assume a case where the owner of the land wants to get rid of it to the bank, all he has to do is to default on an interest payment, and the bank at once may foreclose. All we do here is to say that in such a case as that, when there is default, the bank may acquire the property without foreclosure proceedings, as a great many mortgages permit.

Mr. WALSH. We do say that, I will say to the Senator, by the provisions of subdivision (c), because there it is provided that the bank may acquire parcels of land in satisfaction of debts.

Mr. HOLLIS. But, I ask the Senator, what possible case should be covered, in his judgment, that subdivision (c) does not cover?

Mr. WALSH. There is not any; that is the point I make.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then subdivision (b) does not do any harm, and satisfies those who think that the provision in subdivision (b) is necessary to cover the situation existing in their States, where title passes to the mortgagee, subject to having the conditions of the mortgage fulfilled.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest to the Senator that if that is the case, and if that is the case intended to be covered, some appropriate language ought to be used, and to that I will not object at all.

Mr. HOLLIS. Why is not this language appropriate?—

Parcels of land mortgaged to it as security where default has occurred.

The bank would certainly have a right to foreclose where default has occurred, and why should it not be allowed to acquire in some other way than by foreclosure if it is allowed to take peaceable possession?

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that I think very clearly under subdivision (c) the land mortgaged may be acquired in satisfaction of the debt; that is, the mortgagor may say to the land bank "I will give you a deed to the land and you give me back my note and mortgage." They acquire the land then in satisfaction of the debt; but under the provisions of subdivision (b) they are entitled to buy the land upon any terms that they agree upon, and the bank may not only satisfy the mortgage and discharge the obligation, but may likewise agree to pay $1,000, $2,000, or $10,000 for the property. The language of subdivision (b), it seems to me, is not appropriate at all to the case that the Senator from New Hampshire has in mind.

I appreciate the situation. The title passes under some statutes by the mere occasion of the default; but it does not seem to me that you need to make any provision in this bill at all for that kind of a case, because the land may be acquired in satisfaction of the debt under the provisions of subdivision (b) without any other steps whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE of Maryland in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I believe the Senator from Montana is correct in the position which he has taken. I can not see why subsection (b) should be in the bill at all. It certainly will allow officials of the bank, if they so desire, to speculate in real estate, and there may be other abuses that might arise under the provisions of the subsection. I believe that subsection (c) gives all the authority, all the right, and all the power that the bank ought to have in acquiring real estate.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, it would be a very unreasonable man who would not agree with the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Utah when they agree; and I am going to set a good example to the Senate by trying to make it unanimous.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that line 22 be stricken out, and that the letter "(c)" in line 23 be changed to "(b)."

It is fair for me to say that the exact situation which the Senator from Montana has presented had not occurred to me, that the bank might pay more than the mortgage debt, and I do not think that would be desirable.

Mr. WALSH. I was going to say that if the Senator felt that the apprehensions of those gentlemen who insisted upon the language going in to meet the condition of which the Senator has spoken might operate in any way to retard or defeat the bill, I would suggest language such as this:

Parcels of land falling to it upon default in the mortgage thereon held by the bank.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I think it would answer every purpose to strike out line 22. I am convinced of that, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that that be done, and I withdraw the amendment which I first offered changing the language in line 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire is withdrawn. The Secretary will state the amendment now offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 22, it is proposed to strike out:

(b) Parcels of land mortgaged to it as security where default has occurred.

And change the letter in parentheses in line 23 from "(c)" to "(b)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. On page 32, the Secretary informs me that the word "shortly" has not been eliminated from the bill, as was intended by an amendment made last week. The intention was that paragraph 8 as amended should read:

No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time, or who does not in his application state his intention to become within six months, engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged.

I ask which word was not stricken out the other day? Was it the word "promise" or the word "shortly"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The word "shortly" was not stricken out, the Chair is informed.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then, I ask that the word "shortly" be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the word "shortly," so as to read:

In his application stated his intention to become engaged in the cultivation, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the sentence now be read as it stands.

The Secretary read as follows:

No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time, or who does not in his application state his intention to become, engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged.

Mr. HOLLIS. The words "within six months" should follow the word "become." That was amended the other day. After the word "become" insert the words "within six months."

Mr. SMOOT. That was agreed to the other day.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; but if there is any doubt about it, I will make that motion now in order to be sure.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any doubt about it.

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not think there is. I have it so marked in my copy of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, line 16, after the word "become," insert the words "within six months."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the only other amendments passed over and not acted upon are one relating to exemption from taxation, which I am willing to have go over until to-morrow, and one on page 3, as to the constitution of the Federal board. I should like to have that one disposed of this afternoon.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the second paragraph on page 59, lines 6, 7, 8, and 9, which provide:

Every Federal land bank shall by appropriate action of its board of directors, duly recorded in its minutes, obligate itself to become liable on farm-loan bonds as provided in this section.

Mr. President, does not the Senator think that the language preceding that in the section is sufficient in itself? They are made liable under the law, and might it not lead to some complication to provide in the bill that they shall obligate themselves in their minutes? Suppose, for example, that they did not so obligate themselves; might not a question then arise as to whether or not they were under any obligation under the law?

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the provision to which the Senator directs attention was adopted on the earnest recommendation of men who were accustomed to investment bonds. They said it was usual, in a statute of this kind, not only to provide by statute that the company guaranteeing shall be liable, but that they shall be required to state that in writing, and to take appropriate action on it, so that they will have voluntarily agreed to it. Certainly it can do no harm, and it might get around the point that these bond men suggested. I do not see how it could do any harm, and it might be of value in certain sorts of proceedings to have a contract as well as to have the law so provide.

Mr. STERLING. I appreciate the suggestion made by the Senator as a reason for this language; but it simply occurred to me that liability under the terms of the law was sufficient, without trying to have them obligate themselves by statements in the minutes of the board.

Mr. HOLLIS. I should like to amplify that a little. As the Senator knows, the capital of each of these 12 land banks is distinct from that of all the other banks. Some one might raise the question that we have not the right to impose by law on 11 other institutions the requirement that they shall be primarily liable with the twelfth institution. I think, under the first part of this section, they would not be allowed to interpose that defense; but if it is drawn to their attention—if they do, when they start out in business, put that in their minutes—they never could be heard to say that they did not understand it that way; and I feel myself that it strengthens the section. I do not feel that the results of the section would be necessarily defeated if it were not here, but I should like to have it remain.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from South Dakota, in addition to what has been suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, that by the language immediately following it is provided that certain things shall be recited in the bonds, namely, that they are issued under the authority of the Federal farm-loan act, that they have the approval of the Federal farm-loan board, that they are not taxable by national, State, or municipal authority, and so on.

None of those things need be put in the bond, and it does not really help anybody to have them there; but they help to draw attention to the fact and thus make the bonds more salable.

I apprehend that the provision to which the Senator has directed our attention is inserted in the bill, not because it adds any strength at all to it or increases the liability or makes it more certain, but simply for the purpose of making the bonds more salable.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I ask now that the amendment passed over, beginning on page 2, be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment proposes to strike out lines 9 to 21, both inclusive, on page 2, and in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 3. That there shall be established at the seat of government in the Department of the Treasury a bureau charged with the execution of this act and of all acts amendatory thereof, to be known as the Federal farm-loan bureau, under the general supervision of a Federal farm-loan board.

Said Federal farm-loan board shall consist of five members, including the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be a member ex officio, and four members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the four members to be appointed by the President, not more than two shall be appointed from one political party, and all four of said members shall be citizens of the United States and shall devote their entire time to the business of the Federal farm-loan board; they shall receive an annual salary of $10,000, payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is almost useless to take up the time of the Senate in discussing a proposition with so very few Senators present; but I am going to offer an amendment on page 3, line 3, to strike out the last word in the line, "five," and to insert "three"; and I will follow that with other amendments, to make not only the paragraph just read conform to the first amendment but also the following paragraph.

In order that the Senators who are present may know just how it would read if amended, I will now read the two paragraphs as they will ultimately be if the amendments are adopted:

Said Federal farm loan board shall consist of three members, including the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be a member ex officio, and two members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the two members to be appointed by the President not more than one shall be appointed from one political party, and the two of said members shall be citizens of the United States and shall devote their entire time to the business of the Federal farm loan board; they shall receive an annual salary of $7,500, payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses.

One of the members to be appointed by the President shall be designated by him to serve for four years, one for six years, and thereafter each member so appointed shall serve for the term of six years, unless sooner removed for cause by the President. One of the members shall be designated by the President as the farm loan commissioner, who shall be the chairman and the active executive officer of said board. Each member of the Federal farm loan board shall within 15 days after notice of his appointment take and subscribe to the oath of office.

If the amendment that I have just offered, reducing the number of members of the board from five to three, should be adopted, I shall then offer all of the other amendments en bloc, with the exception of the one as to the annual salary, and then both paragraphs would conform to the first amendment that I have offered.

Mr. President, I suppose this question has been carefully considered by the members of the committee; I take it for granted that it has been, but as I study the bill it seems to me that if enacted into law there is going to be too much expense attached to the operation and enforcement of the same. It is top-heavy. I believe the board should consist of three good men—two besides the Secretary of the Treasury—and, with the Secretary, they can attend to all of the business that there will be for years to come. I have no doubt, either, that you can get men to serve as members of the board for $7,500 per annum.

The other day I called attention to the fact that some of the best servants the Government has, the commissioners of many of the great departments of the Government, are getting only $5,000 per annum. Some of the men serving in those positions, I am quite sure, could make each year two or three times the amount they are receiving. They consider the position one of honor. They consider that they are doing special service for their country; and I believe that a member of the proposed board will be willing to so serve, and if he fills the position with credit to himself and credit to the Government he, too, will be given great credit by the people.

I believe the time has come when we ought at least to avoid paying unnecessary salaries to Government officials. Under my proposed amendment members of the board will receive the salary that a Senator of the United States receives. I do not think any person acting as a member of the proposed board should receive any more salary than a Senator of the United States. I do not think he will be of a higher type or class of man. Furthermore, I find that it is very easy to increase salaries, but it is next to impossible to decrease them. Whenever a salary is established by law or a position is created in an appropriation bill, it is scarcely ever eliminated. The amount paid is never decreased. The members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations are always fighting to keep salaries reasonable. There is not one department of the Government—and I say this advisedly—whose representatives do not appear before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate begging for an increased number of employees and increased salaries for a percentage of the employees already in the service.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that most of these requests for increases are based upon the fact that in some particular case of legislation, like that pending, we go far above the average salary, and then, quite naturally, these other people come before the Senator's committee and insist on the increase, not so much because of the necessity of the increase, but more as a matter of justice?

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from Minnesota I am going to say something that I would not have said if he had not asked the question.

Mr. CLAPP. Then, I am glad I asked the question.

Mr. SMOOT. I am going to state that not only what the Senator has intimated is true, but an increase can not be made in the salary of any employee of this Government in any department without every employee occupying a similar position in every other department immediately becoming dissatisfied, and Members of Congress are asked to see that the injustice is corrected and that his salary is increased accordingly, basing his demand upon the fact that that one particular salary was increased by the committee the preceding year.

Again, it too often happens that some Member of Congress, through constant importuning, becomes interested in the increase of salary of some particular friend, and he pleads with the committees of the House or the Senate for the increase asked for, and in some cases insists that it be made; and if the committee yields and the increase is made it opens the door for every other person with similar duties in every department of the Government service to make a similar demand.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further——

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I think a great many of the employees of the Government are working at salaries far less than they are entitled to receive; and I think in some cases it is hard, perhaps, for Congress, in the tribunal of a just conscience, to avoid the criticism that it is contributing at least to temptation in the meager salaries that are paid to those holding many of the subordinate positions. If we would try to equalize those salaries and give more heed to them and give less increases to these officers that we are creating, we would not only be fairer and more just, but I believe we would escape what sometimes almost seems like responsibility for temptation on account of the very meager salaries which we do pay in many instances.

Mr. SMOOT. There is altogether too much truth in what the Senator has just stated. I agree with him that many of the salaries that are paid the employees of the Government are ridiculously low; and it seems that every year increases the difference between the employees getting a low compensation and the employees that get the exceedingly high salaries. The difference is becoming greater and greater as the years go by.

I do not know how it is with other Senators, but I am constantly importuned—not so much by people from my own State, although I have had a few requests from them—for positions in the Government service. I never hesitate to write to a person in my State making application for a position in the Government service that if he simply wants employment it would be better for him to remain where he is and enter one of the many fields of labor opened to the energetic men of the West.

I find in the service of the United States to-day bright men direct from college and entering into the service because they feel that they want to get a little money ahead before they undertake to launch out into their life profession, and my observation leads me to believe that every year they remain in the Government service they become less inclined to rely on their own resources and ability to make a living. To the young men that I bring to Washington to work in my office I always say, "Just as soon as you secure your college education I want you to leave Washington. I want you to begin at once the practice of your chosen profession, and the earlier you begin the better it will be for you. Never mind the starvation period; meet it like a man."

I have no doubt there are many men in the departments who have been working for 10, 15, or some 30 years at an annual salary just large enough to comfortably provide for themselves and family and who if they had at first entered upon the practice of their profession would have been a hundred times better off than they are to-day.

So, Mr. President, I think that whenever we are considering the creation of another bureau, or creating more positions in the Government service, we ought to take these things into consideration; and I believe that now is just as good a time as we shall ever have to begin to consider what is best for the interest of the Government.

In offering these amendments I do not want it understood that I am doing so in hostility to the bill. If I thought that three members of the board were not sufficient, or that having only three would jeopardize in any way the successful carrying out of the provisions of this bill, if it becomes a law, I would not offer the amendments. I believe, however, that three members are sufficient, and I know that an annual salary of $7,500 is ample.

As I say, Mr. President, if the first amendment is agreed to I will then offer en bloc all of the balance of the amendments, so as to make the two paragraphs conform to the amendment under consideration, and I will ask for one vote upon them all.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not sure that I understood the Senator. Does he mean three members, including the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. SMOOT. Including the Secretary of the Treasury, making the membership of the board three instead of five. I do not know whether or not the Senator was in the Chamber when I stated just how this provision of the bill would read if the amendments that I shall offer were agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Possibly I was here, but my attention was otherwise engaged.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not, however, take the time to read it again; but if this amendment is agreed to, then, as I say, I will offer all the other amendments en bloc and read the paragraphs as they will be.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I intend to vote for the amendment suggested by the Senator from Utah, but I would a great deal rather vote for an amendment to place this measure and its operation in the hands of a bureau in the department.

I agree with the Senator from Utah that the difficulty with this bill is that it is topheavy. There are too many people already employed under it. I think in its operation it will be found, if it should become a law as it is now written, that there is so much red tape that very few farmers will take advantage of it.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, it is a pretty poor plan to allow an important bill to be amended by its enemies. This bill has been prepared by men who are friends of the measure. They are very anxious to see it succeed. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is quite frankly opposed to the measure. He has given his reasons, and they are reasons that are apparently satisfactory to him. He has made a very eloquent argument here for keeping good men out of the employment of the Government, and that is his purpose under his amendment. He says that he advises bright young men not to work for the Government, but to go out and practice their professions. Evidently he does not want the Government to have the services of first-class men. He wants it to be served by the broken-down and unsuccessful men, who have to be supported at Government expense in some way, and therefore he proposes to bring them in here and give them small salaries.

I do not want the administration of this bill to be put in the hands of incompetent and broken-down and discouraged men. I want the salaries to be high enough so that they will be attractive. I want enough men, so that the work will be well performed.

I agree with the Senator's economy program, but I do not agree that the economy should start with this farmers' measure. It is a matter that will involve billions of money, a matter that requires the very best talent the Government can command. Now, we have any quantity of commissions and boards that do not do any work, but that get high pay. There is the International Boundary Commission, whose members receive $10,000 a year, and have practically nothing to do. Those men do not spend a month in the year on their jobs.

The Senator says he would not pay these men more than Senators are paid—$7,500 a year. The Senator knows that if the Senate had that to handle the salaries of the Senators would be higher than $7,500. It is because if they are increased the salaries of the Members of the House will have to be increased, and it will involve a very large expense.

But there is another difference. The men who serve on the farm-loan board are not allowed to do any other work. They have to devote all their time to it. Senators are free a large part of the time. They used to be freer than they are now; but any Senator can carry on his law business in conjunction with his duties here, or he can carry on his banking business, or whatever other business he has; and most Senators do have some other income besides their salaries.

The functions of the farm-loan board will be tremendously important, and there should be enough men so that diverse elements may be represented. In the first place, there should be on the farm-loan board one actual farmer who understands farm needs. Then there should be a man who has studied rural credits—I should think one of the men who went abroad with the United States and American commissions and who studied this whole question in Europe. Then there should be at least two men—one from the vicinity of New York and the other from the vicinity of Chicago—in whom financial men have confidence, so that the bonds can be floated. The success of this whole system depends upon the ability of the farm-loan board to get these bonds marketed at a low rate; and two men who might be selected out of the departments, as has been suggested, to be on this farm-loan board with the Secretary of the Treasury, are not the sort of men we need. We must have the salary high enough to attract at least two first-class financial men in whom the moneyed institutions of the country have confidence.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. Does not the Senator believe that a bond issued by the Secretary of the Treasury or a bureau officer of his department would not meet with favor?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; I do not, because if the Secretary of the Treasury does his duty he has to fight the financial interests all the time. It is fight, fight, fight with the Treasury Department unless the Treasury Department is subservient to the financial interests.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator will admit, will he not, that bonds issued by the Government have no trouble in finding a market?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do, but that is because the bonds have already a settled market. Everyone knows what the bond is. The trouble with floating farm-loan bonds is that the people are not used to them; they must have them explained to them; and the only way to float them in the first instance is to get heavy financiers interested and float a large block of them and distribute them to commercial men. There will not be any trouble after the people get used to them; then they can be sold.

We have established two systems comparable to this since I have been in the Senate. The first was a Federal Reserve Board. No one suggested that those gentlemen should serve for the salary of a United States Senator. No one suggested that they should have less than $12,000 a year, and they receive that amount. There are five of them besides the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury. The Federal Trade Commission consists of five men at $10,000 each, and that sum was given to them without any criticism. But when it comes to the farming measure, the farm-loan act of the country, for the purpose of helping the farmers, where the very best financial talent is needed on the board, then is the time to economize and to give the farmers a peanut. I do not believe the farming interests of the country will approve of this. They do not want to pay large salaries, but they do want to pay salaries that are commensurate with other boards that have to handle similar matters.

I wish to draw attention to the fact that a joint committee, made up of the members of the Banking and Currency Committees of the two Houses and the Agricultural Committees of the two Houses, reported in favor of five members at a salary of $12,000 a year. That would carry $60,000 a year. The Senate Banking and Currency Committee cut that down to four members at an annual salary of $10,000 a year; that is, it cut it down one-third. I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah will not be adopted.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I had nothing to do with the law creating the Federal reserve bank except to submit to it. I felt then that it was in many respects a mistake, and I believe the time will come when we will find that those fears were well grounded. I did think the salary of the members of the board was too high.

I was a member of the conference on the Trade Commission bill and I think those salaries were too high. I tried to get them reduced, but I failed to do so. I fear it will be equally futile in this instance.

In this particular instance the principal work that requires a coordination of mentalities fairly in an equation will be the division of the country into the districts. The real work will be done by subordinates entirely with that exception. All the work of looking after the securities, passing upon titles, verifying accounts, keeping accounts, will not be done by these commissioners, but it will be done by subordinates.

It does seem to me that it is absolutely unnecessary to have five commissioners, and I do not believe because we have made salaries too high in the past that that should be any reason for making them too high now. Nor do I exactly believe in the justice of the Senator's suggestion that while we permitted these other institutions to become top-heavy in numbers sometimes and with excessive salaries, it is any reflection upon or any spirit of hostility to the farmers if we seek to keep this matter down to a reasonable limit.

The farmers are vitally interested in this bill. They are interested in the reception of the measure; they are interested in the working of the measure; and the more complete the commission, the more we can make it in harmony with the spirit of the country as to its reception—the more we will serve the farmers. I do not believe the farmer will feel that he is particularly the subject of extraordinary solicitude because we put unnecessary salaries in the bill. I believe $7,500 is an ample salary for anyone who may be selected as a member of this board. If I could have my way I would make it about $6,000 a year, and I would take the difference, small as it is, as the basis of an equitable distribution of salaries for those who are employed by the Government.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, when this amendment came up the other day I asked that it might go over, and I also offered an amendment striking out the word "five" and inserting "one," but the bill is framed, of course, with the idea of having the whole number, and an amendment of that character, if it should be adopted, would require practically the entire overhauling of the bill. So I see there is no chance at all to get an amendment of that sort agreed to, not only because of the opposition to having a chief of bureau control this matter but also because of the fact that it would require almost a rearrangement of the entire bill. So I withdraw that amendment. I shall not press it.

I shall support the amendment, however, of the Senator from Utah. I am going to support that amendment not as an enemy of the bill. I think I shall vote for the bill when it comes to its final passage. I shall probably vote for some amendments to it. I do not think that the bill will meet with the sentiment of the country that it is intended to meet. So far as I have heard from the farmers of my State they are strongly against the bill. They do not believe that it will serve them very well. They express themselves as being in favor of another bill that has been introduced in Congress, but they have been advised by different Members of Congress that there is no chance for the passage of that measure, and so they have suggested some very important amendments to this bill, expressly stating that they do not give up their opposition to the measure but being impressed with the fact that there is no chance for the passage of the other measure they want this bill amended in certain lines.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator to what bill he refers?

Mr. JONES. They call it the Morgan bill. I think it is a bill introduced by Representative MORGAN, of Oklahoma, in the House of Representatives.

As I said, Mr. President, I am not favoring the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] as an enemy of the bill. I shall probably vote for the bill in the hope that some good will come from it, and that probably with the experience we will gain in a short while we will make whatever amendments experience may show to be necessary in order to make it accomplish what all of us would like to have it accomplish.

Right here I want to say that I do not think too much credit can be given to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], who has had charge of this measure. I have been myself very greatly impressed with the splendid manner in which he has handled the measure and the breadth of the information that he has evidently acquired in studying this question. It seems to me that no man has demonstrated more his industry and breadth of knowledge, with reference to this subject, than the Senator from New Hampshire, and that he is entitled to very great credit for not only the preparation of the measure but the splendid way in which he has handled it here on the floor of the Senate, and he is entitled to that credit, no matter what we may think as to what the ultimate effect of the measure may be. I am in hopes that much more good will come from it than I really look for, but I believe that some good will come from it.

As I said a while ago, experience will show what we need and we can amend it in the necessary particulars. I am glad that it has been treated in an entirely nonpartisan way. Of course, the Senator from New Hampshire, being in the majority, naturally is in charge of it, but it has been treated, I think, not only in the committee but upon the floor of the Senate absolutely free from partisanship, and I am glad of it.

I remember when the parcel-post measure was pending in the Senate that all sorts of predictions were made and all sorts of prophecies uttered as to the inefficiency of that measure. There were predictions that it would not accomplish what those who pressed it hoped that it would accomplish. All sorts of legal and technical objections were presented to it. Now, no one seems to be inclined in any way to repeal that measure and very few changes even are suggested to it. I am in hopes that we will have about the same result from the operation of this bill, that those of us even on this side who have seen so many objections to it and who fear that it will accomplish so little will be agreeably disappointed in its operation, and that as those prophecies were shown to be false so the prophecies made with reference to this measure will also be shown to be false.

Now, with reference to this particular amendment, I think that a board of three good men is amply sufficient. I believe that the salaries are higher than they ought to be. Like the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], I thought that the salaries of the members of the Federal Reserve Board and of the Federal Trade Commission were too high. I do not remember now whether an amendment was offered on the floor of the Senate to diminish those salaries; but whether that was done or not, I do know that I thought they were too high.

Just what the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] suggested a moment ago occurs here. Whenever we pass a proposition of this kind it becomes a precedent for another. So while the salaries of the members of the other boards are high and while those of us who are opposed to these high salaries here were opposed to it then, the action of Congress in fixing those salaries is now urged as a precedent for these salaries. However, I can see much force in the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire with reference to the character of the men and the training that may be required of them to take charge of this measure. I think his judgment in that respect is better than my own. Yet I am still unconvinced of the necessity of having a board of five and paying them this large salary. As the Senator from Minnesota stated, I do not think that the farmers would feel offended in the least.

The farmers, I think, in my section do not expect very much from this measure. They do not think that it will accomplish what they hoped to have accomplished, and they are not worried about the salaries that these men get. I do not think that they are especially objecting even to the high salaries paid here. So far as I am concerned, I am not basing my opposition upon any suggestions that have come to me from the farmers of my State with reference to these salaries. I am simply basing my opposition on my idea that this large board is not necessary, and that these salaries are too high for the duties these men will have to perform.

As the Senator from Minnesota suggested, there are no important judicial functions to be performed by the members of this board. After the organizations are perfected their duties and responsibilities will be largely perfunctory. The real substantial work will be done by the local organizations. What these men here in Washington City will have to do will be largely of a supervisory character.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote for the smaller board with the smaller salary.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not think there can be very much difference of opinion among Senators when it comes to a question of economy. We would all like to be as economical in the administration of public affairs as possible, but economy should not control efficiency. This is a new system which is being adopted, and I am sure that both the friends and the opponents of the bill, if it be adopted, will be extremely anxious to make it a success. That we want above everything.

There are very few people outside of some specialists in this country who have given a vast deal of attention to the working of this system. This great country is to be divided into districts and these various banks are to be organized. Various national farm-loan associations, scattered throughout 48 different States, are to be organized to accommodate the farmers of this country. Necessarily up to the time they will be put upon a permanent working basis there is going to be a tremendous amount of detail work to be done. Under the amendment of the Senator from Utah this work would be substantially confined to the two members of the board, the Secretary of the Treasury being only an ex officio member, and we know how much he is engrossed with the affairs of his own office.

While I am very much delighted with the bill, I recognize the fact that it is pioneer legislation in this country. The general farm-loan systems have proven a very great success in nearly all the countries of Europe and in some of the South American countries. I marvel sometimes that we have not had heretofore something similar to this system in this country, but here it is pioneer legislation.

No doubt after the board has had an opportunity to thoroughly investigate the subject suggested amendments will be offered which may improve the measure. If it can be improved, we all hope it will be improved. I would much prefer to have the combined judgment of four capable, efficient men—and I do not think anyone else will be named on this board—for the first few years. If our experience during those few years demonstrates that it is not necessary to have four members, and that two members can do the work as thoroughly, as efficiently, and as progressively as four, we can change the law then; but I believe it would be very much better to leave the bill as it has been framed by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word. I wish, in the first place, to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I am not antagonistic to legislation of this kind, and I frankly say that if section 29 of the bill were eliminated I would be glad to vote for it. So what I have said was never said in any spirit of antagonism to the principle of the bill, although, of course, I myself believe that it could be drawn so that it would not be so expensive in its operation.

The two members of the board, other than the Secretary of the Treasury, will not be called upon to do the work of districting the country nor will they plan the working details of the legislation. There will be hundreds of employees under the bill. I do not believe that the two members who will be appointed, if my amendment is agreed to making the board to consist of but three, will work out even the details of the organization. The men who will be appointed will no doubt be business men who have had a great deal of business experience, and particularly administrative experience. The man who will work out the detail workings of the bill is already more than likely an employee of the Government, and no doubt has been interested in the framing of it, just the same as we find public men interested in the detail work of almost every important piece of legislation presented to Congress.

So, Mr. President, I do not think it will make any difference whatever as to the working of the bill whether there be three or whether there be five members of the board. The only difference will be that there will be less expense to the Government, less offices to maintain, less employees all around, if the board is limited to three; and I think that ought to be taken into consideration.

Of course I believe it would be an improvement if the amendment were adopted. If I were responsible for the successful working of it, I would very much prefer to have two first-class business men at its head who had had experience in the administration of business, and, with their labor given to this work, an organization formed under their supervision, if you please, would be more likely to make a success of the measure than if we began to pick a man from this part of the country and a man from another part of the country or a man who has been interested in this class of work and a man interested in another class of work. This is a banking proposition, a business proposition.

It seems to me, Mr. President, with the Secretary of the Treasury—and I admit that he will have very little to do with the detail working of the measure—and such men as I have named, if the bill can possibly be made a success it will be brought about through the appointment of such men as I have named, and two of such are enough.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. May we have the yeas and nays?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to take this opportunity to state that my colleague [Mr. WEEKS] is unavoidably absent from the city. He has a pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. HARDWICK] and to state that he is paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio. He being absent, I transfer the pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to inquire if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to ask if the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the affirmative). I have voted. I now observe the absence of the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], with whom I have a pair. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. FALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], but I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on official business. As to how he would vote on this question, I do not know.

Mr. FALL. In the absence of my pair, I desire to make a transfer to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], with whom I am paired, having returned to the Chamber and voted, I withdraw the exchange of pairs.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]; and

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—22.

So Mr. SMOOT's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the committee: On page 3, line 12, I move to strike out "$10,000" and to insert "$7,500," so that it will read:

They shall receive an annual salary of $7,500, payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses.

Upon that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to the transfer of my pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). Announcing the same transfer of pairs that I announced on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to my pair and transfer as before and vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before relative to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan], who is absent, is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. Announcing my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when the name of Mr. WEEKS was called). I desire to make the same announcement in regard to my colleague [Mr. WEEKS] that I made on the former roll call. He is unavoidably absent. He stands paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the same announcement which I made a moment ago as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the affirmative). The senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] having entered the Chamber and voted, I shall have to withdraw the transfer which I made and also withdraw my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I now learn that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], with whom I have a pair, has not voted. For that reason I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. WALSH. Having a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 25, as follows:

So Mr. SMOOT's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. On page 3, line 7, after the word "Senate," in the committee amendment, I move to strike out "of the four members to be appointed by the President not more than two shall be appointed from one political party."

Mr. President, if that amendment is adopted, it will necessitate another formal amendment to make the other language conform to the amendment.

I confess that I have but little hope of seeing the amendment adopted. I confess also that those who favor this kind of a provision in the law are moved by the very highest motives and the best of faith; but if I believed that such a provision would work out in the way that those who favor it believe it will work out, instead of being opposed to the language I would favor it.

I am moved to offer the amendment, even though it is apparent that it can not be adopted, from the fact that in the discussion on the amendment in regard to the salaries which has just been adopted, Senators reminded the Senate of other cases and other bills which have been pending, which provided for large salaries, where no Senator made a motion to strike them out; the salaries, for instance, of the members of the Federal Reserve Board, which were fixed at $12,000 per annum, as I now remember, and also the salaries of the Federal Trade Commission, which were fixed at $10,000 per annum. Particularly with reference to the salaries of the members of the Trade Commission, I felt at the time that those salaries ought to have been cut down. I offered no amendment, or, if I did, I have forgotten now that I did so, because I knew that it would be defeated, and there were so many other amendments in which I was deeply interested, most of which were defeated, that it became quite apparent that it was useless to offer such an amendment.

I want to offer this amendment now, so that if at any time in the future, under different conditions, the same amendment should be offered or supported by me, I shall be able to show in my own defense that I stood for this amendment, and believed in it at a time when the party opposing the one to which I give allegiance was in power and would name all of the officials provided for in the proposed law.

The object of the language is to create a board that is nonpartisan. If that language brought about that object, I would be the last one to move that it be stricken out, and would be one of the first to support keeping it in. As a matter of fact, it never brings about anything of the kind.

I remember that early in the present administration, a question came up in the Senate in regard to the Civil Service Commission, complaint having been made that the law was not being properly enforced, when the charge was made that under the preceding administration the law had not been enforced. To the statement that the law provided that the members of the Civil Service Commission must belong to different political parties and that not more than two could be taken from one party, the answer came—and I am not sure but that it was perfectly well founded—that the man who was appointed to represent the Democrats by a Republican President did not represent the Democrats; that he was a bolter from the Democratic Party; and that he was appointed as a reward for his support of Palmer and Buckner. I am not sure but that that was right, and, without criticizing the man who was appointed, because, so far as I know, he performed his duties absolutely without regard to party and in the best of faith, at the same time naturally he could not be above suspicion on the part of members of the Democratic Party, for the reason that just before he was appointed he took part in a political campaign, where his energies and his efforts, no matter what he might believe in, could have had but one effect, and that was to assist in bringing about the defeat of the Democratic Party. Such charges are frequently made, and we know that oftentimes they are true; that the man appointed to represent one party in reality supported another party. So we do not have nonpartisan boards; but, if the officials are appointed in good faith, instead of having nonpartisan boards, we have bipartisan boards, which are worse than partisan boards. If the man appointed a member of a board is a Democrat, he feels as though he was appointed because of being a Democrat and that in his official position he represents the Democratic Party; and, on the other hand, the man who is appointed because he is a Republican, feels the same in relation to the Republican Party. So you have, evening it up with both parties represented, an absolutely partisan board.

If the same men were appointed and the law did not provide that they must be appointed from a party, they would feel a different obligation; the party obligation would disappear, and they would come nearer being nonpartisan than though they were appointed to represent a political party.

So far as I am concerned, if this bill becomes a law, and the President wants to do so, I would not criticize him if he should appoint all the members of the Federal farm-loan board from one political party. If they are good men, if they will perform their duties properly, without regard to politics, the President can appoint all Democrats, if he so desires, or he can appoint all Republicans, all Progressive, or all Socialists, or divide them up as he pleases; but I am opposed to saying to the President, "You must appoint so many Republicans and so many Democrats, in order that when they are assembled together they will constitute a nonpartisan board." That is inconsistent, and in practice it has never worked out well.

The board provided for in this bill ought to be nonpartisan; there is no doubt about that. Every board ought to be. I can not conceive of any board that ought to be partisan; but just as soon as we say to the appointing power, "You must divide this board up between the political parties," you make a partisan board of it; and if the President in good faith appoints as members of the board men who belong to the opposite party to which he owes allegiance, he immediately casts suspicion, in some quarters at least, as to those men, because in times past Presidents and other appointing powers have taken advantage of a provision of this kind to appoint men of the opposite party, who at least are not politically in good standing, although it may be that the very best men who could be selected in the country would be men who were not politically in good standing.

I am not saying that such men might not be absolutely the best. Take, as an illustration, the Trade Commission or the Federal Reserve Board. Criticism was made of some of the appointees on the Federal Trade Commission because they did not fairly represent the party from which, under the law, they should be chosen. Criticism was made of the President as to at least one of those appointees, because it was said "This man does not fairly represent the party from which, as the law provides, he should be taken." I am not saying that that criticism was wrong, but I do believe that in that particular case—and it is likely to happen in any case—the man who did not fairly represent the party was the best man that could be selected for the particular office. If, however, you leave this kind of a provision in the law, the President, if he wants to escape criticism in making the appointments, must select partisans, men who are such partisans that nobody will doubt that they will have uppermost on all occasions the welfare of their party. He will be criticized if he does not do that, and perhaps that is the spirit of the law, but I think we ought to avoid it in this instance, particularly in view of the character of work to be performed by the farm-loan board.

Under the bill before us the members of the board will have no more to do with party, if they do their duty, than the flowers that bloom in the springtime. Therefore we ought to make it possible for the President to appoint, without criticism, the best men possible, irrespective of party. I do not believe that this language ought to go into a law of any kind.

I believe, first, that it is recognized by the Senate and the House of Representatives that the work of this board will be nonpartisan. If we start with that as a fact, then we ought to say nothing about the political qualifications of the men who will compose the board, as to what political party they shall give allegiance, or from what political party they shall be selected.

If the work of the board is nonpartisan, as the work of all such bodies ought to be, then why should it not be possible to appoint a man who perhaps gives allegiance to no political party, but who may have made a life study of this subject? Under this bill if you appoint such a man he will have to be charged against some political party, but no political party will be willing to take him, and he will be unwilling to be classified as a member of a political party. Some of the best students along the lines of the work that will have to be done, for instance, by the Federal Trade Commission do not care anything about political parties; they have never taken any part in political contests, and yet they may have spent years of their lives in careful and calm study of the questions over which that board will have control. I can easily see that in the particular case before us the same thing might be possible, but the President is practically by this provision of the bill precluded from appointing such a man. It will be no answer, so far as he is concerned, to say that if you strike out that provision the President will appoint all the members of the board from one party. If the President wants to do that, he can practically do it. He can get enough Republicans who supported the Democratic candidates in the last election and reward them with this kind of an office.

So you will not accomplish anything if you want to prevent that being done. It can not be prevented if the President wants to do it. On the other hand, if the President wants to act in good faith, and appoint the best men he can select for the positions, he will not consider politics. If you leave in this provision, you compel him to consider politics. Therefore it seems to me it ought to be eliminated.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. FALL. Does not the Senator think that this entire Government is at the present time a Government by party, except where it may have become in recent years a Government by one individual? Is not the Government itself a party Government?

Mr. NORRIS. A great deal so; yes.

Mr. FALL. Then, where the legislative department creates a board or a commission, does not the Senator think it would be well enough to provide that both parties shall be represented upon that board or commission, and then if the President wants to violate the law leave it to him to violate it?

Mr. NORRIS. No. In answer to the question I will say that I do not think the Legislature ought to do that. The fact that we have political parties in this country is no sufficient reason, in my judgment, why the members of a board of this kind should be selected because of their party qualifications any more than we would select a judge on account of his political qualifications.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator.

Why should we not say when two judges are to be appointed, whom everybody concedes ought to be nonpartisan, that not more than one of them shall belong to any one political party, and thus put upon the bench a representative of a party?

It is true that we have parties, and to a great extent the country is governed by parties; but every day we are trying, State legislatures are trying, and municipal governments are trying, to get away from the evil of partisanship. There is no official duty for this board to perform—there can be none—that in any way is partisan. If you want to make it nonpartisan, then do not provide by law that one of the qualifications of a member shall be that he is a partisan.

I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, the Senator is anxious to have this board made nonpartisan. Does the Senator believe that appointing all the members of the board from one political party tends to make the board nonpartisan? Or would it not be more apt to be nonpartisan if both or all parties were represented on the board?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I have gone over that to some extent. I will say, in answer to the Senator from Wyoming, that when you appoint members of a board of this kind under a law that says there shall be so many members of one party—that is practically what we say—and so many members of another party on the board, you thereby, by the law, make it a partisan board.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I suppose it would be almost impossible, notwithstanding the view of the Senator, formerly expressed, to appoint any member upon this board or any like board who is not a partisan in the sense that he is a member of some political party; that is, that he votes, or has voted, with some particular political party. He need not be a partisan in the sense of being an active party worker or organizer; but I imagine that any man who was sufficiently well qualified, or qualified at all, to sit upon this board, would be a man who would have some views upon political questions, and would have expressed by his vote his notion as to which views were best. In that sense he would be a partisan; but I do not understand that that is what the Senator means.

Mr. NORRIS. In what sense?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not suppose the Senator meant to imply that we would be likely to get a man upon this board who did not have some political affiliations.

Mr. NORRIS. We probably would not; but we might. If we leave in this language, and the President wants to escape criticism, then it is certain that we will not get anybody on the board who is not the strongest kind of a partisan.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, possibly the Senator is correct. I wanted to get his view.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. I should like to refer first to what the Senator from Wyoming has said.

There are four members to be appointed. The language that I seek to strike out by my amendment provides that not more than two of them shall be members of any one party. That will mean that there will be two Democrats, let us say. Suppose the President went out into Wyoming and found there a prominent Democrat who had been supporting the Senator from Wyoming in all the contests he had ever had. There are Democrats like that in Wyoming—pretty good fellows, too.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There are not enough of them.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the President appointed one of them as representing the Democratic Party, what would Senators over here say? Why, they would say, "That man does not represent the Democratic Party." The Senator from Wyoming could answer and say, "Why, he is a qualified man. He has made a life study of this subject and knows more about it than anybody else." "That does not make any difference; he is not a good Democrat. We do not care about his qualifications. He is not a Democrat, and the law provided that he should be a Democrat."

Suppose, on the other hand, instead of doing that—and this is more probable than what I have suggested—the President, in selecting a Republican, should go into New Hampshire and he should find there a Republican, registered as a Republican, who could prove by the records that he was a Republican, and who perhaps had been running for office on the Republican ticket, but who had supported the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. There are such Republicans up there; otherwise, the Senator would not be here. He had to have the votes of a good many of them to get here. Suppose he should appoint one of those, what would happen over here? Republicans would say, "Why, here, the President is not carrying out this law in good faith. He has appointed a man who has not been true to the Republican Party. He has appointed a man who bolted the Republican Party and supported the Democratic candidate for Senator." He would be criticized for it; and it would not be any answer if the President or those who supported him in his action could say and could prove: "Why, this man whom the President has appointed as representing the Republican Party in New Hampshire is the best man in the country for this position. He knows more about the duties of the position than the men who passed the bill and the President who signed it. He is peculiarly adapted to carry out the provisions of this law." The Republicans would answer and say, "Why did you not appoint him as a Democrat?" But the man himself claimed to be a Republican. He had supported one Democrat, maybe two, maybe a whole ticket at one election.

This language makes it impossible for the President, unless he is subject to severe criticism, and perhaps violates the law, to appoint any such man to this board. He could not do it. What would the President have to do if he wanted to escape criticism? He would have to get some two Democrats who were able to show that from the time they were old enough to vote they had never scratched a ticket; they had always voted for the Democrat, yellow dog and all; and then he would have to come over on the Republican side, to prevent being criticized there, and appoint a man who had always been a bitter partisan in favor of the Republican Party, who had never supported anybody but a Republican, who felt himself bound to support a candidate for road overseer even if he had just gotten out of the penitentiary, provided he was on the Republican ticket, in preference to the best man in the county running against him on the Democratic ticket. To demonstrate his fitness for this position he would have to have a record as being the bitterest kind of a partisan. That is what the President would have to do.

If this language is stricken out, as proposed by my amendment, the President will have absolutely no limitation. He can pick the best men he can get regardless of their politics. If he does his duty, he will do it.

I now yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COLT. I was simply going to ask the Senator if he does not think that the reason for this provision is that the two parties represent certain tendencies with respect to the government of the country, and that it is deemed a little better on that account that the members composing that board should be men who belong to both of those parties? Might I ask the Senator, further, if he does not recall that when the circuit court of appeals was established there was an agreement that a certain number of Democratic judges should be appointed, there being a large number of judges to be appointed?

The underlying reason is simply this: There always will be two parties; and in order to avoid crticism, it is believed to be a little better to have representatives of both parties upon any board.

I might say further that I think this whole question of partisanship is a great deal overestimated and exaggerated, for the reason that any man when he has taken his position upon this board will, I believe, be entirely free from such partisanship.

Mr. NORRIS. With the last statement made by the Senator I most fully agree—that any man who takes such a position, unless you inject politics into it and give him a political obligation as well as an official obligation, will be absolutely free from political influence of every kind, and will so act; and that is what we ought to have.

I can see how, if we were passing a law here, we might say that a certain position, that of a judge, was established and the President was authorized to appoint some one to the position, and then say in the law, "The President must appoint a Republican." Suppose the President appointed the Senator from Rhode Island. The Senator from Rhode Island would feel—and it is perfectly natural that he should—that he had a double obligation, because the law said he must be a Republican, and the President in good faith in trying to carry out that law, before he appointed him, called in the Republicans, the leading Republicans—whatever that may mean, and it means a good deal sometimes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The most conspicuous ones.

Mr. NORRIS. And suppose he got advice from those Republicans, and they advised him to appoint the Senator from Rhode Island, and he appointed him not because he wanted the Senator from Rhode Island but because the members of the political party whom he consulted wanted him. Would you say that the Senator from Rhode Island, when he took the office, would be entirely free from political obligation? Why, he would owe his very official existence, under the circumstances, to members of a political party, because of his political affiliations and not because of his qualifications; and he would not be as nonpartisan then as he would be if he had been appointed under a law that said nothing about politics.

Why, Mr. President, the theory is just as the Senator from Rhode Island says it is. The theory is that, there being political parties, we ought to divide this up, and then we will not be so apt to have a partisan board. The practice, when you come to carry it into practice, is just the reverse. If we want to get a nonpartisan board, we want to let the appointing power be absolutely free to select men who are not partisans, but who are nonpartisans, and not put an obligation on him that he must go into his particular party to select the men. It would be just as unreasonable, to my mind, to say that he should appoint on this board two men who were bald headed. He might get just as good men, but the danger would be that they would be prejudiced in favor of bald-headed men; and the danger here is that if he must appoint a man because he is a Republican, feeling that he is on that board representing not only the country but the Republican Party, he will be inclined to be partisan; and that is true of the Democrat who is put on there. In this case, if the President did not want to honor any member of the Republican Party with the appointment, he could appoint two Democrats and one Socialist and somebody belonging to the Progressive Party. He could leave the Republican Party out, if he wanted to do so. I am in favor of giving the President the power to leave it out if he wanted to; but wherever he went, under this provision, he would go there on account of partisanship. Under the law he could not help it. So, by the very curtailment that we put upon the power of the President we make it impracticable to bring about the real thing we are trying to accomplish.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I have much sympathy with the views expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I think it frequently works out in the way he says.

Take the Federal Reserve Board, for instance. There were five members upon it. One of them had been an organization Democrat for many years. The other four had never taken any part in politics. Nobody knew what their qualifications were. Later it was charged that they were all Democrats. I do not think there was one of the four that any of us in this Chamber would call a Democrat. He had not been prominent enough so that anybody really knew what his politics were.

This provision, however, was inserted out of deference to the Republicans in Congress, with the idea that they would like it better if it were a nonpartisan board, and for the purpose of making it as nearly a nonpartisan board as we can. I do not know how the Senate will vote on it. So far as I am personally concerned, it does not make much difference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRADY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. As he is absent from the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made on the former roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before and vote "nay."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). On account of my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]. Not being able to transfer that pair, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made on the last roll call, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TAGGART. My colleague [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. LIPPITT. I wish to inquire if the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. LIPPITT. Then I withhold my vote, he being absent.

Mr. MYERS. Announcing the same transfer of my pair that I announced on the last roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—5.

So Mr. NORRIS's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, it has been brought to my attention that on the vote on the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to reduce the salaries of the members of the farm-loan board from $10,000 to $7,500 the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] voted "nay," and his vote was not recorded. If his vote had been recorded, the result would have been a tie.

Without troubling the Senate to go through the necessary parliamentary stages to have this set right, I merely reserve the right, when the bill gets in the Senate, to have a vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah in that respect. I reserve the right to have a vote on that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to section 35 of the bill. I desire to know whether a change has been made in that section. I see that it provides:

> That upon becoming satisfied that any national farm-loan association has refused to make good defaulted mortgages, as required by section 28 of this act, or upon receiving satisfactory evidence that any such association has failed to meet its outstanding obligations of any description whatever when due, and is in default, the Federal farm-loan board may forthwith declare such association insolvent and appoint a receiver—

And so forth. Is not that an extraordinary power to give to the board—to appoint a receiver for an institution of this kind? Ought not that to be done by the courts?

Mr. HOLLIS. I can not tell the Senator whether there is any precedent for that or not. Does the Senator care to offer an amendment to cover that point?

Mr. CURTIS. I think it is so important that it would pay to take it up to-morrow and have an amendment to the effect that they may go into court and ask for a receiver. I doubt very much our power to give to a board the authority to appoint a receiver. Of course we could provide that upon default they might ask for a receiver at the hands of the court.

Mr. HOLLIS. I will consider that and will be able to give the Senator an answer in the morning.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that there was such an enormous vote obtained in favor of my amendment seeking to make this law nonpartisan and keep this board out of politics, and feeling encouraged by reason of such an enormous vote, I offer another amendment along the same line.

On page 5, line 21, I move to strike out, beginning after the period, all the balance of that page and the first five lines on page 6. The language I seek to strike out reads as follows:

> All such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees, and all registrars and appraisers, shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act of January 16, 1883 (vol. 22, U. S. Stats. L., p. 403), and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the President from placing said employees in the classified service.

Mr. President, the language which I have read and which I seek to strike out by this amendment provides, in substance, that the appointments to be made by this board shall be made without regard to the civil-service law. In other words, it is a provision in the bill which if retained will take the appointments entirely out from under the protection of the civil-service law. The law referred to in this language is the one which provides for the civil service and the appointment of clerks and officials in accordance with the provisions of that law.

It sems to me that there will be necessarily a very large number of these appointments, and that they ought to be made in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service law. In other words, since you have now decided that the board itself shall be partisan and that a part of its membership shall represent the Democratic Party, and a part of its membership shall represent the Republican Party or some other party, you ought at least to provide that when they come to make the hundreds, perhaps the thousands, of appointments that they will make they shall do so in accordance with the law passed by Congress providing for the Civil Service Commission. If you do not, it is a partisan board that we have provided for, and it will do as perhaps it will be justified in doing, it will divide them up according to political parties, and after dividing up the offices according to political parties and going off into separate caucuses and deciding what political appointees shall be made to represent that political party, immediately when the appointments are made the proviso that I also seek to strike out will make it possible for the President by an order to put all of these partisan employees under the civil service, so that although they will be appointed because of partisanship as soon as they are appointed, if the President acts on this proviso, they can not be removed. In other words, the partisanship with which we have started, commencing with the board, will run clear down to and include the janitor.

It is provided "that nothing herein shall prevent the President from placing said employees in the classified service." So you take them for partisan reasons and give them these offices in disregard of the law, in disregard of the Civil Service Commission and the work that it was intended to perform, and as soon as these partisan political appointments are made the President by an order can put them under the protection of the law and they are there during the balance of their lives.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. While we have provided in the law that the President can not appoint more than three from any one political party, and, of course, the other is a Cabinet officer and belongs to the party of the President, does not the Senator think, as a matter of fact, the majority of the board will fill from their own party at least all the substantial offices?

Mr. NORRIS. They could do that under this law, no doubt.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator think they are very likely to do it?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know. In view of the fact that the Senate has decided they shall divide up the important offices, practically giving the Democrats the major part, and saying we will give you a few from these other parties——

Mr. JONES. We have not put any limit on their action. We have not said that they shall act in a nonpartisan way.

Mr. NORRIS. No; we have not said that.

Mr. JONES. Has it not been the Senator's observation that such a board will do that after they are appointed?

Mr. NORRIS. Personally, I may say that I have known instances where such commissions have divided them up, and in other cases where they have taken them all out of one party.

But, Senators, the real point is that a whole lot of clerks and a whole lot of appointments can be made by a board, the jurisdiction of which extends all over the United States. Thousands of positions are to be filled, in my judgment, and the board even decides whether there shall be positions or not, and then decides who shall fill them by appointment without regard to the civil-service law. If our civil-service law means anything, then it ought to begin at the inception. What use have you for the civil-service law if you have this kind of a provision in the law? You say to a political party in power, get your henchmen into office and after they are in we will through this authority granted to the President protect them for life. The theory of the civil-service law is that men will be appointed without regard to politics; and by the way, that law was in accordance with the argument I made a while ago. It does not provide that one man shall be a Democrat, and the next a Republican, and the next a Socialist, and the next what not, and then go through again and enforce it in good faith, but it means that political and party considerations shall have no place in the selection of officials. It means that they shall be appointed absolutely without regard to their political affiliations.

But what are we seeking to do here? We are providing that that law shall not apply to these appointments, and then we say in the same breath, as soon as you have selected these partisan appointees we will have the President issue an order that will put them under the classified service. Men who get into the classified service on merit because of their qualifications will be put side by side with these appointees, appointed because of their political qualifications. Yet the tenure of office, if the President exercises the authority given him in this proviso, will be the same in both cases. It is a nullification of the civil-service law on its face. It is contrary to its letter and it is contrary to its spirit.

Mr. President, when President Taft issued an order putting the fourth-class postmasters under civil service, something he had the legal right to do, a great cry went up that he had put into permanent office a whole lot of fellows who were appointed because of their political qualifications, and I always felt that there was some justification for that charge. Then, as I remember, when President Wilson came in he rescinded that order and provided that they should be examined first, and I thought that that was a good thing. It seemed to me that that ought to have been in the first order, although I know that Presidents from the beginning of the enactment of the civil-service law have made that kind of an order putting under the civil service a large number of employees. The effect of it has been to gradually extend the civil service further, and perhaps often justifiably, without taking the politics of the men into consideration. President Taft simply extended it. It may not be the best way to extend it, but it is the way the law provided it could be extended; and I would not blame the President if after all these fellows were put into office he would issue such an order. I think it is intended he should. Then he would include these men in the civil service.

But why do not the Democrats say now what they said about fourth-class postmasters, that it is not right to put them all in the classified service by a blanket order, because they were selected for political partisan reasons? Why not now practice what you preached? Why do you not do now what you claimed the Republican President ought to have done when he made that order? It seems to me that here is the opportunity to put into practice the very claim that you made then that that was not fair.

Mr. President, I am not making this motion, and I do not believe that any man who knows me will charge it, because we happen to have a Democratic President who will appoint a majority of Democrats on this board. I do not care, so far as I am concerned, if every one he appoints is a Democrat, provided he gets good men; but I do not want this board, being Democratic, as it will be very likely, to go all over the country and put this great system into operation by the use of political methods. How will these men get their jobs? They will get them because Senators and Representatives and committeemen will make recommendations to a board that, in the first place, is partisan. Does any member, at least, of the Democratic Party who is a Member of the Senate or of the House or is a member of the Democratic committee, think that he will not be importuned by friends to get them positions under this board, and does any man doubt but that this board, a partisan board to begin with, will not give heed to that kind of recommendation?

If you strike it out, what will happen? If my motion prevails, in the first place, you will be relieved of that duty; and you have had experience enough now since President Wilson has been in office and the Democratic Party has been in power to know that it is not a very pleasant duty. I have had too many Members of the Senate and House say to me in conversation, and I have heard them say even in public, that it is an unpleasant duty. It is an unpleasant duty, a duty that you can not perform even to the satisfaction of your own conscience. I know that from experience. Yet the obligation will be yours. You can not get away from it. If the law is passed in this form, no one will expect you to get away from it, and you will not try to get away from it. It ought not to take up your time to investigate, if you want to be fair with the board, and see whether these men are properly qualified or not. You ought not to be compelled to shoulder that responsibility. It is not just to you and it is not fair to the country. If it is made a party obligation, the first thing that will be necessary for every applicant will be to show that he is a good Democrat, and sometimes in showing that they will forget all his other qualifications. I would do just the same. I do not say it because he is a Democrat; it would be just the same if the Republican Party or any other party was in power.

If you make a party obligation of it, if you make a party machine of it, then no man can get an appointment as a janitor or as a clerk unless he establishes to the satisfaction of the political machine in control that he gives strict allegiance to that party and is faithful always to the party demands. That will be the first qualification, and if it happens after that that he has other qualifications to fulfill the office, and that he can perform his duty properly, well and good. If he does not it will be a bad precedent.

Now, what will happen if my amendment prevails? Then these appointments would be made for this board from lists certified to them under the civil-service law by the Civil Service Commission. Is not that fair? If it is not fair then we ought to repeal the civil-service law. If we are going to create new offices and provide in the law where we create them that they shall be appointed without regard to the civil-service law and then after they get in that they shall be put under the saving influences and control of the civil-service law, then we are going back to the old rule that "to the victor belongs the spoils," and going to it with a vengeance.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that it is worse than that rule. The old rule never protected the spoilsmen.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to say that. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. If we had no civil-service law, and these men were appointed as a reward for partisanship or political work, when their party went out and the other party came in they would go out. But here you have a provision contained in the bill that notwithstanding the fact that they are going to be appointed on account of partisanship they shall retain their positions for life. In common justice it seems to me we ought not to do that. President Wilson revoked the order of President Taft putting the fourth-class postmasters under the civil service, and I thought he improved the order. It struck me as being fair. All the Democrats at least claimed that was fair. Now, if you are true to that faith, if you believe what you said, it seems to me that you must then vote for this amendment to put these appointments on the same basis and on the same plane that you demanded fourth-class postmasters should be put on.

Mr. President, it all reduces itself down, it seems to me, as to whether we are going to uphold the civil-service law, and in offering this amendment and in saying what I have said I cast no reflection upon the committee. I know it is said that when you begin a great institution of this kind you can get along better by giving everybody a free hand and let the appointments be made without regard to the Civil Service Commission, and that it is difficult sometimes to get the Civil Service Commission to furnish a list for some offices. But, Mr. President, the Civil Service Commission, in my judgment, are better qualified to select any officer, any attorney, and any judicial officer, however high, than the chairmen of political committees or bosses of political machines through the instrumentalities of Members of the Senate and Members of the House, who necessarily, if they often made recommendations, would not and could not under the very condition of things know personally all of the things that anyone ought to know in passing on an applicant for some of the more important positions that will be included in this law.

Therefore, Mr. President, in the very best faith and in the belief that it is only common ordinary justice and a square deal that this should be eliminated, I have offered this amendment, and I hope the Senate will vote in favor of it and that this language may be stricken from the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am certainly in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska or, at least, of some modification of the section as it now appears, because I can see no justification whatever for the section as written. I can see where some of these officials probably ought not in their selection to be limited to the civil-service list. I can see where, perhaps, in the case of attorneys and experts they should be allowed a free hand to go out and search the field over and get the best they can, but why the merest laborer or clerk or typewriter or any of the minor employees should not come from the civil-service list I am unable to comprehend.

But that is not the worst feature of the bill as it stands. The bill as it stands provides an avenue or a channel by the use of all these minor appointments by which the work of the Civil Service Commission may be absolutely overthrown.

These people once under the civil service, as I understand the law, may be exchanged to do other kinds of governmental service. For instance, under the civil service, employees of the Treasury Department, if I understand the operation of the law aright, are eligible to be exchanged to the Post Office Department or to other departments of the Government. This bill, by this very section, provides an avenue by which every clerk to be hereafter selected and put into the service of the Government, or every laborer or janitor or elevator man or any employee in those classes, may be passed through this avenue into the civil service of any one of the departments without the necessity of civil-service examination or of a civil-service rating.

I have not been very will satisfied of late years as to the virtue of the Civil Service Bureau, because I have seen how easy it is to avoid the law. It has become a byword. Nobody needs to flatter himself, because he is an eligible on the civil-service list that that gives him any advantage whatever in securing a governmental appointment.

The Senator from Nebraska speaks of the new rule which has been inaugurated in regard to the appointment of fourth-class postmasters. Under the present administration fourth-class postmasters are selected from the civil-service list; but if there has been a fourth-class Republican postmaster appointed under this administration it has been a mighty rare case.

Mr. HOLLIS. I know of a great many such appointments in my State, where there have been more Republicans appointed fourth-class postmasters under this administration than there have been Democrats—a great many more of them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am glad to get that testimonial from the Senator from New Hampshire. It is indeed a relief, but I venture to say what I personally know is true in many instances, and that is, that a civil-service appointment is not given to the man or the woman who from the examination shows best upon the list. I do not think that at least will be disputed. The one best qualified, according to the records of the civil service, is seldom the one to get the appointment; and is never the one to get the appointment if he or she belongs to the opposite political party.

It does not, however, do any good to enter into that discussion here; it is not relevant to the matter; but I do not believe it is right to make this section of the bill an avenue or a channel through which there can be filtered into the Treasury Department or the Post Office Department or the Interior Department clerks, laborers, and others who but for the operation of this bill would have to be chosen from the civil-service list. I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if there was any particular purpose in that part of the section which provides that "nothing herein shall prevent the President from placing said employees in the classified service"?

Mr. HOLLIS. I will explain that at length when I get the floor. I had rather not answer the question in the Senator's time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course I can understand, as I said in starting, how experts and attorneys, perhaps, and the higher officers who may be employed ought not to be dependent upon the certified list of the Civil Service Commission; but I am absolutely unable to comprehend why the others should not be subject to civil-service examination. I am still less able to comprehend why it is that, having been once appointed without the civil-service examination, they should be immediately transferred into the civil service and be eligible to appointment under any other branch of the Government where the civil service prevails.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, answering the last proposition of the distinguished Senator from Wyoming first, I will say that it is not a fact that men can be appointed from the unclassified service into the classified service. I know that to be the operation of the law.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I will explain that to the Senator. Under the appointments which were made in the Internal-Revenue Service under recent legislation, deputy internal-revenue collectors were appointed outside the civil-service law under provisions similar to the one now pending. None of those men has been transferred into the classified service of any of the departments of the Government. The departments have repeatedly refused to make such transfers. Some of the men who were appointed in New Hampshire wanted to be so transferred, but, on inquiry, I found that they could not be, and they have not been.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let me ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. He is entirely conversant with the operations of the civil-service law——

Mr. HOLLIS. I tried very earnestly to get some of those men into the classified service, and I could not do it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Suppose this circumstance should occur: A clerk is appointed or a laborer is appointed who otherwise would have to be taken from the civil-service list, and his appointment should carry him in without examination. Having been passed under the civil service, could he not be transferred to a like office or like employment in other departments of the Government?

Mr. HOLLIS. My understanding is that he could not, unless he was in the classified service in one of the departments. If he got into the classified service in one of the departments, then he might be transferred; but otherwise he could not be.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, but he gets into the classified service by appointment?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. By appointment under this act. Then, being in the classified service, he could at once be transferred to another department?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is exactly so.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And in his place a man could be appointed without the classified service, and could take his place in that service?

Mr. HOLLIS. Not at all; because he could not be put under the classified service, for all future appointments would have to be made under the civil service.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am glad to learn of that situation.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is perfectly straight and perfectly right, because you take 90 per cent of the classified places under the Government now, and they have all been through exactly this process; we have created a department and we have created its force at the same time, and then the employees were put into the classified service. You can not do it properly in any other way. There is nothing original in it. We went through the whole thing in the Federal reserve act for the very same reason. Surely the Senator from Wyoming has not forgotten that?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Wyoming has not forgotten a great many things that he did not approve of that are now law.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is true; but every time we put a bill through we go all over these different things again.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I would be glad if the Senator, or some other Senator, in bringing these great bills into the Senate, would present them in such a way that in doing it they would not violate the civil-service act, if Senators profess any loyalty to the civil-service cause; but I have known what the Senator says, that there is a precedent for this. I had hoped, however, that the practice would be finally abandoned.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming is now addressing his remarks to one Democratic Senator who believes thoroughly in civil service, who has always supported it, who has never asked to have any of its rules violated, and who always votes for it in proper cases. Now, there is a most excellent reason why these places should not be filled under the civil-service regulations; and I am coming to that.

The matter that has been called before the Senate by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is one of the things as to which we do not have to rely on speculation or prophecy. We know just what will happen, because we know just what has happened within the past two years under the Federal reserve act; and I will tell the Senate just what happened under that act. Take the first one appointed, the secretary of the board. He is a man who has always been a Republican; he was secretary of the Aldrich Monetary Commission. Take the lawyers who were appointed. I have not the slightest idea as to their politics; but no one would ask to have the Civil Service Commission recommend lawyers to serve on this board or any other board. Take the experts to whom the Senator has referred. When they are all appointed, there will not be many of them; there will be a few assistants and stenographers here in Washington under the farm-loan board. The only others who will be appointed by them will be the farm-loan registrars, one for each district, who should be men of the highest financial standing, and who ought not to be appointed under civil-service rules. Then there are the examiners and land appraisers. Those examiners and land appraisers should be appointed exactly as the bank examiners are appointed now, and not under civil-service rules. You do not want to select men of that type from a list that is furnished by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly so. Then, while appointing as many land-bank appraisers as may be thought necessary—there is no limit to the number—why should they be put under the civil service?

Mr. HOLLIS. They would not be put under the civil service.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But authority is given to put them under the civil service.

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly, and there is authority now to put bank examiners and everybody else under the civil service.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If that authority now exists, why is it necessary to reiterate that authority under this bill? Simply to offend somebody's sensibilities?

Mr. HOLLIS. Not in the slightest, but because it has been found necessary to do so. Whenever a new department has been created the President has had to have authority to put the officers of a certain class in that particular department under the civil service. In the first place, a general law would pass permitting him to put certain employees under civil service. That would apply all right to the departments then in existence, but when you create a new board, a new department, you must have additional legislation in order to permit that to be done.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator's reasoning is not entirely convincing.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am not reasoning; I am stating facts, as I understand them. If I am wrong I should be delighted to have some Senator correct me.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator is a lawyer, and a good one, and he is an expert in the writing of statute law, but does the Senator think it is good legislation to write into a law a thing that is unnecessary?

Mr. HOLLIS. I think it is necessary; otherwise I should not favor putting it in here. When you create a new department, in regard to which existing law can not act because the department was not in existence at the time the law was passed, then you have to apply the law to it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But the Senator does not understand the point to which I am referring. Suppose the employees provided for by this bill are appointed. The Senator says there is no need of further legislation, because the President already has the power to put those employees under the civil service.

Mr. HOLLIS. I say he has not such power without this authority.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does the Senator think this authority is necessary for the minor employees?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly; otherwise I should not have put the provision in the bill.

Let me tell the Senator what has happened under the Federal reserve act. After they had organized and filled the important places, such as attorneys and experts, then they applied to the Civil Service Commission to give them lists of stenographers, clerks, and assistants, and they appointed such employees from the civil-service list furnished by the commission. There has been absolutely no complaint of any political appointments made by the Federal Reserve Board—not the slightest. No member of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee was able to get anyone appointed under that board. Some of the members of the committee tried to do so, and some of them complained because they failed. That is the way the Federal Reserve Board acted, and I should expect that the President would, when the farm-loan board is working fully and completely, cover into the civil service all proper employees; but we can not state in advance which ones should be so covered in. We can not tell who they will be; no one can until experience has been had.

The Federal reserve act has worked perfectly under an identical provision. The provision in this bill is copied directly from the Federal reserve act, as found in section 11. No one has criticized it; neither the Senator from Nebraska nor the Senator from Wisconsin, nor anyone who is a friend of the civil service will criticize the manner in which that has worked. So I say that, whatever else our critics may say about this bill, here is one part of it that has been worked out under exactly this language to the utmost satisfaction of Democrats and Republicans alike, with no criticism. I wish the other provisions of the bill had such good precedents and such good authority.

Mr. CURTIS rose.

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator looked as if he wanted to express some objection, or perhaps he is convinced and is ready to vote my way.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Kansas is ready to adjourn.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, in view of the lateness of the hour and the fact that some Senators have gone who have expressed a desire to speak on this matter, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The Chair lays before the Senate a House bill for reference.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 15048. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOLLIS. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 2, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 1, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, help us to realize that Thou art the supremest truth, the profoundest fact, in all the universe; that Thy will is good will, and therefore inflexible; that though we may deceive our fellow men, our hearts are as an open book to Thee. Help us to keep them free from guile; and though Thou dost lay upon us heavy burdens grievous to be borne, may we be able in the spirit of the Master to say, "Nevertheless, not my will but Thine be done," that we may be strong, courageous, and full of good works. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 29, 1916, was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RAKER, for one day, on account of illness.

To Mr. HAWLEY, for one day, on account of illness.

To Mr. CONRY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. PORTER, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

G. B. DICKSON.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8067, to quiet the title to certain lands in the possession of G. B. Dickson, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 10750. An act permitting the Mondak Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River in the State of Montana.

CONTESTED ELECTION—GAYLORD V. CARY.

Mr. MORGAN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 3, I present a unanimous report of that committee in the case of Winfield R. Gaylord against William J. Cary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as this is a unanimous report I suggest that we dispose of it at this time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to dispose of it now?

Mr. MORGAN of Louisiana. Yes; I would like to call it up now.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 220 (H. Rept. 619).

Resolved, That Winfield R. Gaylord was not elected a Representative to the Sixty-fourth Congress from the fourth congressional district of Wisconsin and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That WILLIAM J. CARY was elected a Representative to the Sixty-fourth Congress from the fourth congressional district of Wisconsin and is entitled to retain his seat therein.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, and pending that motion I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], who is the ranking member of the minority of the committee that reported the bill, what time he thinks we ought to have for general debate?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that I have had a great many requests for time from this side of the House. I think we could use 5 hours on this side. Let me suggest to the gentleman also that that was the time we used when the bill was up for discussion before. We had an agreement at that time for 2 hours on the rule and 8 hours for general discussion, which made 10 hours of general debate upon the bill. It seems to me that we ought to have at least that much time now for the discussion of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, that would mean, of course, that we would not complete the consideration of the bill to-day. I am told that the disposition of certain members of the House is to get through with the consideration of this bill to-day. I realize that there are a great many gentlemen on both sides of the House who desire to speak on the bill, and it is not my disposition to so limit the time as to prevent anybody who really desires to speak on the bill from speaking on it, but I do not believe that we will be able to get unanimous consent for as long debate as 10 hours.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make this suggestion: I know that there are some gentlemen who are very impatient to dispose of this bill peremptorily. Let me suggest to those gentlemen that it seems to me that the House can not justify itself in passing or jamming through this bill under any such program as that suggested. This bill, when it was before the House last year, was considered for about 3 or 4 weeks. After general debate, including the various sessions, I think there were 11 or 12 different sessions of the Congress devoted to the consideration of the bill.

This very bill was considered in the Senate for nearly two months and thoroughly discussed, and now when gentlemen suggest that this House ought to take up this great and important measure and dispose of it in one day's time it occurs to me that is asking altogether too much. I do not think it could be justified before the country.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, would not the gentleman think that three hours on a side devoted to general debate would be sufficient, and then when we get down to the portions of the bill that are in contention we could agree on time for the discussion of that under the five-minute rule?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that while, of course, I do not think that would be enough time to satisfy our people, if the gentleman modifies the suggestion to four hours on a side I will accept it.

Mr. KITCHIN. How about it under the five-minute rule? Would that cover the five-minute rule; that is, would we then hold strictly to the five-minute rule when we get down to the reading of the bill?

Mr. TOWNER. I understand it is now asked to limit general debate only, without consideration of what may follow.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question. Is it the purpose of the gentleman in making this request which he now suggests to so arrange matters as to finish the bill before we adjourn to-day?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think we can do it, as I understand there is no real opposition except to two portions of the bill—the prohibition and the Clarke amendment portion—and a great many gentlemen on this side and on your side would like to finish it to-night if they could. But we can not jam it through.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Could it not be that unanimous consent be arranged on those features to-day and not try to pass the entire bill?

Mr. JONES. I think we can arrange that when we get to it. I am going to ask, Mr. Speaker, that eight hours' general debate be permitted on the bill, the debate to be confined to the bill, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] and one-half by myself.

Mr. MANN. I would like to make one suggestion to the gentleman from Virginia, and that is that we give general leave to print for 10 days.

Mr. JONES. I shall be glad to add to that request, Mr. Speaker, that all gentlemen who speak on the bill——

Mr. MANN. All gentlemen.

Mr. JONES. That everybody who desires to do so shall have leave to print within 10 days on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to eight hours, four hours to be controlled by himself and four hours by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], and the debate shall be on the bill itself, and that all Members shall be permitted to print remarks for 10 legislative days on the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia if it is his purpose to hold a night session so that we can dispose of this bill to-night?

Mr. JONES. It is the desire to conclude the bill to-night. I do not know whether we will be able to do it or not. I hope so, but we would not like to enter into a hard-and-fast agreement that we would conclude the bill to-night, because nobody can say in advance how much time will be taken up under the five-minute rule.

Mr. AUSTIN. We will be here a week on this bill if we have the five-minute rule.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we are now about to consider one of the most important bills that has been before this body in the last 25 or 50 years; a bill that affects the future of eight and one-half million people; a bill that likewise affects the future Government of the United States very materially. It does not seem to me, gentlemen, that it is in keeping with the great amount of time that we have given to other measures in this House that we try to dispose of a bill of such immense magnitude, not only to the Philippine people but to the people of the United States, as this great measure, in one day.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. I will.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would like to suggest to the gentleman that I think upon this side of the House we are largely ready to vote, and on that side you debated it a good many hours in caucus, and it seems to me you have about thrashed it out, and why can we not vote?

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Very well. If the leaders on both sides of this Chamber have some sort of an agreement whereby some other bill is to be substituted for the bill now under consideration, then we might as well take the vote immediately; but if we are to have a straight-out fight to the finish and register the sentiment of this Congress upon this bill, then we need more time than one day to consider such a bill as a bill dealing with the independence of the Philippine people. We can not properly present the argument and discussion on this bill in one day. If the gentlemen simply want to vote on certain provisions, we might as well take the vote at once upon those propositions, and then take a reasonable amount of time to properly consider a bill of such magnitude as the bill now before the House.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I hope my friend from Ohio will not object to this request. I desire to remind him that when this bill, or a similar bill, for Philippine independence was before the House two years ago eight hours was all that was used in general debate, and I think I can also assure the gentleman that when we reach the last section of the bill, which is the one to which there is so much controversy, the five-minute rule will not be strictly enforced, and gentlemen who have no opportunity to speak in the general debate will have some opportunity then to speak upon that section. I hope my friend will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to object, and neither am I asking for any special time, but I want this bill to have the proper amount of time if we intend to discuss it in a way that its importance demands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether he intends to press for a vote to-night? If you give eight hours for general debate, that means 7 o'clock this evening.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, all I can say in reply to that is that if we reach the end of the bill at a reasonable hour this evening, I shall ask for a vote; but if we find when we get under the five-minute rule that is impossible, then, of course, I shall not ask that the bill be disposed of to-day.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, for the convenience of the House, it is very evident to me that if that length of time is agreed upon for general debate, you will get to no final vote to-night. I think everybody in the House wants to have an opportunity to vote on this bill. It may be practicable during the day at least to make some arrangement as to when the vote shall be taken.

Mr. JONES. I will give the gentlemen notice so that they will be here.

Mr. MANN. So that everybody will be informed.

Mr. JONES. I think that is a good idea, and I shall be very glad to further any such proposition as that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the leaders upon both sides that it is fair to the Members of this House not to keep them here until 7, or 8, or 9 o'clock to-night on an indefinite proposition.

If they knew that they were going to have an opportunity to vote they would wait. If they know they are not going to vote to-night you might have a very slim attendance when the time comes to vote.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am through. I have submitted it to the leaders that we ought to have a time fixed for a vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLAGHER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs if the time is already parceled out on this side of the House?

Mr. JONES. It is not on this side. I can not say for the other side. There have already been a great many requests for time from more gentlemen, I am sorry to say, than I am able to oblige.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Another inquiry: I would like to know if the people who are opposed to the Clarke amendment can get time from the other side?

Mr. JONES. It seems to me that is reasonable and just.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I want the House to know the way the matter is handled.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make this suggestion, that we proceed now under the agreement for eight hours' general debate, so that if we can in the next two or three hours reach an agreement as to how much time there will be under the five-minute rule, the committee can rise in a moment and enter into that agreement, so that perhaps, if we see we can reach a vote by 9 or 10 o'clock to-night, it can be announced by the middle of the afternoon. I happen to know that there are gentlemen on that side of the House, as well as on this, who are anxious that a vote should be reached to-night.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly evident that we can not reach a vote to-night.

Mr. GARRETT. It was my suggestion that we proceed with the general debate, under the agreement, for eight hours, with the understanding that later on, if we can reach an agreement as to a time for voting, the committee can then rise and ratify that agreement, if we choose to do so, and announce by the middle of the afternoon whether we can reach the vote to-night.

Mr. MANN. I think we could do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, these agreements about fixing time ought to be made now. It will not be convenient for Members to be in the House every minute watching to find out if a request is to be made to guarantee in some way the rights of Members under the five-minute rule. I think it is very apparent, with a bill of 34 pages, if we are to have eight hours' general debate, you can not suppress the Members under the five-minute rule sufficient to vote at once, to get through by the time indicated. Gentlemen might as well understand that.

Mr. MANN. There is no reason that I can see why we should not proceed and complete this bill in Committee of the Whole clear through, or at least up to the last section, and possibly have the previous question ordered on the bill, and have an arrangement made as to when the final vote shall be had on the bill and a motion to recommit, possibly fixing it in advance so as to accommodate all the Members of the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we can do that a little later.

Mr. MANN. I think we can do that later in the afternoon.

Mr. KITCHIN. A little later, when we find out how the matter progresses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, why can not the time be fixed now for a vote? I was asking the question, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why we could not fix the time to vote, while the Members are here. We would like to know.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] give heed to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Why can we not fix the time to vote now, so that Members can know?

Mr. JONES. I do not think it is possible, Mr. Speaker, to say now when we will close the consideration of this bill and take a vote. The amendment which will be more earnestly debated than any other is the last provision in the bill, and an arrangement of that sort might cut out absolutely every consideration of that amendment. The time might be taken up on the unimportant amendments, and when you reached that amendment under a hard-and-fast understanding there would not be an opportunity to say a word on the provision of the bill that gentlemen on both sides regard as the vital and most important proposition in the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, what does the gentleman say to this proposition: Of course everybody understands that the critically contested point in the bill is the thirty-fourth section of the Senate act, which is the Clarke amendment. What does the gentleman say to taking that matter up first and disposing of it?

Mr. JONES. Well, so far as I am concerned, if the gentleman will ask unanimous consent that when the bill is read under the five-minute rule the first section to be considered shall be the thirty-fourth section, I will make no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. I will make that request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MADDEN. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, if I may, that we agree to vote upon this bill immediately after the reading of the Journal next Thursday.

Mr. JONES. That suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa would mean, Mr. Speaker, that we will vote on the bill this evening, certain.

Mr. MADDEN. Does it mean that?

Mr. JONES. I think we will vote on the bill this evening, if that request is granted.

Mr. KITCHIN. And I should think, too, that in the general debate most of the debate will be on the thirty-fourth section, anyway. The whole general debate will turn around that section, and if we vote on that first it will not take any time on that under the five-minute rule, because we are going to debate that under the general debate.

Mr. JONES. That will unquestionably prolong the general debate, which follows immediately.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] suggests adding to this request the further request that when the bill is read under the five-minute rule to begin at the end of it instead of at the top of it, and discuss section 34 first.

Mr. KITCHIN. And vote on that first?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Consider it.

The SPEAKER. Vote on it and discuss it, too. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], as modified by the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. May I ask whether that includes the right of the committee to rise and take a vote in the House on the Clarke amendment the moment that is determined, so that we can get through with this business?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no!

The SPEAKER. The way to get a vote on the Clarke amendment is to move to strike it out in the committee.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is a new feature introduced in this bill which has never been discussed in the House, and the suggestion of eight hours seems to me astonishingly short for a modification of such policy. My experience is that when we have general debate nobody stays here, and there is no chance to change anybody's opinion. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to stay here from now until we vote. However, I think it is exceedingly important that there be a full discussion, but not to empty seats.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, we on this side can not hear the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. And nobody else can. All gentlemen will refrain from conversation. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] asks unanimous consent, pending his motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, that general debate on this bill be limited to eight hours, four hours to be controlled by himself and four hours by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]; that the debate shall be on the bill itself——

Mr. MANN. With general leave to print for 10 days.

The SPEAKER. And that everybody shall have the right to print a speech in the RECORD for 10 legislative days; and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] adds to that the suggestion that when the bill is read for amendment section 34, the last section, be considered and voted on first. Is there objection?

Mr. FESS. Reserving the right to object——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. JONES, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule adopted by the House the general debate is limited to eight hours. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] is recognized for four hours.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, it is just 18 years ago to-day since Admiral Dewey, at the head of an American squadron, triumphantly entered Manila Bay, destroyed the fleet under the command of Admiral Montejo, and sounded forever the death knell of Spanish dominion in the Philippine Islands. [Applause.]

It will be just 14 years on the 1st day of July next since President Roosevelt affixed his signature to the act of Congress under which the Philippine Islands have been governed from that day to this.

That act, described in its title as a temporary measure, was designed as a substitute for the autocratic military government under which the Filipinos had been theretofore governed. It was never intended by its sponsors to serve as a permanent form of government, and it has long since outlived its usefulness.

The bill now under consideration by this House has a twofold purpose. It gives the Filipino people a more liberal and autonomous government, thus conferring upon them larger control of their public and political affairs than they are now permitted to exercise. The life of this government, however, is to expire so soon as American sovereignty shall cease to exist over the islands, which, the bill declares, shall occur in not less than two nor more than four years after its passage, provided that the President, by proclamation, may extend the time to the date of the final adjournment of the session of Congress which shall convene next after the date of the expiration of the said period of four years, in the event that the condition in respect to the stability or efficiency of the external or internal affairs of the Philippines shall warrant him in so doing.

The necessity for the enactment by Congress of a new organic law for the Philippines is not questioned by anybody. It is stated in the views of the minority members of the Committee on Insular Affairs that—

> The minority entirely agree with the majority that the Philippines should be given a new fundamental law, granting to the people a larger measure of self-government.

And the fact that the only section of this bill to which any reference is made by the minority is that which relates to the independence of the islands amply justifies the conclusion that the provisional government provided for is not unsatisfactory to them.

The justice for the demand that the Filipino people be immediately given a larger measure of self-government being conceded, and no objection having been raised to the governmental features of the bill, it would be a waste of the time of this House to enter upon any detailed discussion of the changes which it effects in the present organic law. I shall therefore only direct the attention of the House to one or two of the more important changes. The most important of these is that which establishes a Philippine legislature to be composed of two houses, one the senate and the other the house of representatives.

The senate is designed to take the place of the present Philippine Commission, an appointive body composed of nine members. As is well known, this commission now constitutes the upper branch of the Philippine Legislature, and also exercises exclusive legislative and other jurisdiction over all the non-Christian and noncivilized peoples of the islands. The archipelago is divided into 12 senatorial districts, each of which is to be represented by two senators. One of these districts embraces the territory inhabited by the non-Christian and noncivilized tribes, and its two senators are to be appointed by the Governor General. The representatives of the other 11 senatorial districts are to be elected by the qualified voters of those districts.

The house of representatives is to be composed of 90 members, 81 of whom shall be elected in the districts now provided by law; the remaining 9 are to be appointed by the Governor General, and they will represent the noncivilized and non-Christianized territory.

The President of the United States is authorized to appoint a Governor General, a vice governor, an auditor and a deputy auditor, a director of civil service, and the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court. All other officers are to be appointed by the Governor General with the approval of the Philippine Senate. The Governor General is given a qualified veto power.

One other important change which this bill makes in the present organic law is that which relates to the suffrage. The present educational qualification requires that all voters must be able to read and write either Spanish or English. This bill provides that they must be able to read and write either Spanish, English, or a native language. This will necessarily greatly enlarge the present electorate. Its justice is so obvious as to leave no room for discussion. There are many thousand literate Filipinos who speak neither English nor Spanish. Many of these are at least as well qualified to exercise the right of suffrage as the nonnative inhabitants who only speak a foreign language.

When the bill is read for amendment under the five-minute rule, I shall take pleasure in explaining the provisions of the bill more in detail, in the event that explanation is desired. I shall now proceed to discuss, as briefly as I may, that section which withdraws the sovereignty of the United States over the Philippines and confers upon them full and complete independence after a specified period.

This section is known as the Clarke amendment. It is the only section over which there has been any controversy, the only one that has proven a stumbling block to our friends of the minority.

Some misapprehension seems to exist as to the history as well as the scope and meaning of the Clarke amendment. The impression seems to prevail in some quarters that the Clarke amendment was substituted in the Senate for the preamble to the bill which passed this House by an overwhelming majority in the Sixty-third Congress. Senate bill 381, now the subject of consideration, as introduced in that body did not contain the House bill preamble, which declared that the Philippines should be granted their independence as soon as a stable government was established therein. The preamble of the Senate bill, as introduced, declared it to be the purpose of the United States to grant independence to the people of the Philippine Islands when, in the judgment of the United States, they "shall have shown themselves to be fitted therefor." As reported to the Senate, this language was so changed as to read that independence should be granted when "it will be to the permanent interest of the people of the Philippine Islands." To say to the Philippine people that they shall be granted their independence when they have shown themselves to be fitted therefor would be to offer a gratuitous insult to an intelligent, brave, and sensitive people. To tell them that independence shall be theirs when, in the judgment of the United States, it will be to their permanent interest would be a cruel mockery. Such a declaration of purpose ignores completely the interest of the American people. It might result—and, in the opinion of many people, would result—in compelling the United States to retain possession of the Philippine Islands forever. No matter what the cost in blood or in treasure, it would bind the United States to hold and protect them through all time. It would destroy the dearest hope and the loftiest aspirations of the Filipino people and plunge them into blackest gloom and despair. It would add immeasurably to the difficulties of American administration of their affairs, and if it did not eventually lead to revolution it would at least kindle the fires of distrust and hatred of the American people in the heart of every patriotic Filipino.

It was this declaration of purpose in the bill which we are now considering for which the Clarke amendment was substituted. It was not a question between the promise of independence so soon as a stable government should be established in the Philippine Islands, as contained in the House preamble, and the promise of independence at a specified period, as set forth in the Clarke amendment, that the Senate was called upon to vote. The choice presented to the Senate was between a vague, indefinite, meaningless, and almost inconceivable proposition and an honest effort to redeem the solemn promises which the Democratic Party, at least, have been making the Philippine people for the past decade and a half.

The Clarke amendment is much broader in scope and more comprehensive in meaning than is admitted by its critics. A systematic, well-organized, and persistent effort has been made to create the impression that it ignores American and other foreign interests in the Philippines. On the contrary, it specifically clothes the President of the United States with the power and authority to make such orders and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of the Philippines as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the Philippines, to cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States and of other countries resident or engaged in business in the islands or having property interests therein.

The President is thus invested with full power to take every step that is possible to protect and safeguard every American or other foreign interest in the islands; and, to my mind, it would be difficult to make the language which is employed in the bill more binding upon the Chief Executive of the United States or more comprehensive in its scope.

But our friends of the minority insist that the authority thus conferred upon the President to settle and adjust personal and property rights between citizens of the United States and the Philippines is not broad enough to cover certain Philippine bonds issued under authority of Congress. They argue that any promise or guaranty given by the Philippine government either as to property rights or the rights of the holders of Philippine bonds, which they distinguish from property rights, would be worthless. My reply to this is that no President of the United States would ever draw so nice a distinction as this, thus discriminating between different classes of American investors in the Philippines. I may say further, however, for the benefit of holders of Philippine bonds who honestly hold this opinion, that I have assurances that the administration will ask Congress to remove all doubt that could possibly exist upon this subject by specifically clothing the President with the power and authority to safeguard, as far as it is possible to do so, the interests of every holder of Philippine bonds. That it would not be possible for the President to do this, I do not believe for one moment, and therefore I feel that every American investment in the islands will be as safe under Philippine sovereignty as under the sovereignty of this country.

It is not contended that the United States is in any way legally responsible for the payment of these Philippine bonds, which amount, in the aggregate, to $16,125,000. It is claimed, because they were issued and sold under authority conferred by Congress upon the Philippine government, that some moral obligation rests on the United States to see to their payment. It is true that the average price at which they sold was something over 6 per cent above par. They all bear 4 per cent interest, and are exempt from all taxation in the United States as well as in the Philippines, and had they been guaranteed by the United States they would probably have sold for 20 per cent, or even more, above par. They are now selling for less than par; but if Congress were to guarantee their payment, their price would at once advance to something like 12 per cent above par. However, I have assurances from representatives of the American Banking Association that if Congress will specifically authorize the President to take such steps as may be possible to safeguard the payment of these bonds, such action will be satisfactory. I feel sure, as I have indicated, that this will be done, and I trust that when it is done it will put at ease all holders of Philippine bonds.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Just for a question.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to know whether, if the sovereignty of the Philippine Islands was turned over to the Philippine people, they would not be able to repudiate the bonds which were issued, and which are guaranteed by the Philippine government as it stands to-day, for the construction of that railroad.

Mr. JONES. No; I think not, if the President of the United States carries out in good faith—as I believe will be done—the authority conferred upon him in this bill. [Applause.] However, I will say again that I have assurances from representatives of the American Banking Association that if Congress will specifically authorize the President to take such steps as may be possible to safeguard the payment of these bonds, such action will be satisfactory. I feel sure, as I have indicated, that this will be done, and I trust that when it is done it will put at ease all holders of Philippine bonds.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield just for a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the bankers accept the security of the Philippine government and their guaranty or the guaranty of our Government?

Mr. JONES. I am assured by representatives of the American Banking Association that if specific authority is conferred upon the President of the United States to make such arrangements with the Philippine government that is to be set up in the islands in the event of independence, as it is possible for him to make, it will be satisfactory to that important association.

Mr. AUSTIN. Suppose the Government should fail——

Mr. JONES. I can not enter into a discussion of that supposition with the gentleman. He starts out with suppose this and suppose that.

The Philippine government has also guaranteed the payment of interest for a limited term of years upon certain railway bonds, the proceeds of which may have been used in constructing railroads in the islands. The holders of the interest-guaranteed bonds of the Manila Railway Co. do not appear to be disturbed over the Clarke amendment. That corporation, for reasons upon which I do not care to enter at this time, appears to be in a bad way financially, and negotiations are pending by which the Philippine government will in all probability take over its property. The President of the Philippine Railway Co., however, appears to be greatly perturbed in mind lest Philippine independence may result in loss to the holders of the interest-guaranteed bonds of his corporation; and, in response to a circular letter sent out by him to the holders of these bonds, Members of Congress are being deluged with letters calling upon them to vote against the Clarke amendment unless some provision is made by which these bonds shall be protected. It is not claimed that the moral obligation of the United States to meet the interest and provide for the ultimate redemption of these bonds is quite so strong as that which exists in the case of the Philippine bonds; but it is stated in the views of the minority that subscriptions for these bonds were received by the Bureau of Insular Affairs. I do not know upon what authority this statement is made, but I do know that it is absolutely groundless. It is true that in an advertisement of an issue of these bonds in 1908 it was stated that the subscription would be opened simultaneously by certain financial institutions and the Bureau of Insular Affairs; but no subscriptions were ever received by that bureau, and such communications as were received were at once transmitted to William Salomon & Co., bankers, of New York City, who signed this advertisement. The first advertisement of these bonds did not name the Bureau of Insular Affairs as one of the places where subscriptions would be received, but inasmuch as the bids received were disappointing to the syndicate underwiting these railroad obligations its purpose in including the Bureau of Insular Affairs in the subsequent advertisement was evidently to induce the public to pay a higher price for them. These bonds were publicly sold as low at 86 cents on the dollar, and I am informed that at private sales they sold for as low as 60 cents on the dollar. They are now selling for something like 46 cents on the dollar. Should the Government of the United States guarantee their payment, their present value would be more than doubled, and their holders would thus pocket several million dollars. It is only necessary to state these facts in order to make it plain that no Member of this House would have the temerity, if he had the desire, to vote to make the United States responsible for these railroad bonds, which the act of Congress which authorized the Philippine government to guarantee their interest expressly declared should not be sold for less than par. By what legerdemain they were actually sold for less than par is another story. So much for the argument that the Philippines should not be granted their independence so long as their bonded indebtedness is not in some way guaranteed by the United States.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. HILL. The Philippine bonds are exempted from taxation in the United States. What becomes of that exemption if we surrender sovereignty in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. JONES. That exemption stands, and these bonds will never be subject to taxation in the United States.

Mr. HILL. They will be in the position of bonds of a foreign country exempted from taxation by our own people.

Mr. JONES. That is true; but it will have been done under very peculiar circumstances, and inasmuch as these bonds are held for the most part by American citizens I do not think the gentleman would vote to remove that exemption.

Mr. HILL. I do not know. I want to find out what the result of this bill is.

Mr. COADY. At what price did the gentleman say these bonds sold?

Mr. JONES. They sold on the market for as low as 86 cents on the dollar, and I understand they are selling now for about 45 cents on the dollar.

Mr. COADY. I would like to correct the gentleman, if he will permit me.

Mr. JONES. I hope the gentleman will do it in his own time, because these figures are absolutely correct. I have them from the War Department. [Applause.]

Mr. COADY. I have documents here from one of the savings banks of Baltimore city, which shows that they were bought at 95.

Mr. JONES. Some of them were sold at 95, but I said in my remarks that others were sold at public auction for as low as 86. I did not undertake to say what the highest price was, but none ever sold as high as par, and Congress provided in the act which authorized their issue that not one dollar should be sold for less than par. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. Assuming that the bill passes and four years elapse; you have that independence on paper in the Philippines and the 4 per cent bonds—I am not speaking of the railway bonds—are exempt from taxation in the United States and have not been paid, and that we have in the Philippines the conditions that we have substantially now in Mexico, what would be the attitude of the Government of the United States? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JONES. In the first place I shall not assume that we will ever have in the Philippines such conditions as prevail in the Republic of Mexico to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not think that any gentleman who understands the difference between the character of the inhabitants of Mexico and that of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands would for one moment suggest a comparison between the two. [Applause.]

The manufacturers of certain American products, for which they have been finding a market in the Philippines, have also been busy in urging Members of Congress to vote against the Clarke amendment upon the ground that the alienation of the Philippines would mean to them the loss of that market. A manufacturer of cotton goods, claiming to represent 13 such concerns, recently strove to convince me that the Clarke amendment should not be adopted because it would mean an annual loss to the cotton manufacturers of a trade approximating $5,000,000 in value. He made the astounding statement, too, that the manufacturers' profit on these goods did not exceed 5 per cent of their value. In other words, according to this manufacturer of cotton goods, it is the duty of the United States to retain possession of the Philippines indefinitely in order that he and his associates may put into their pockets the sum of $250,000 annually. Thus the altruistic arguments for retaining possession of the Philippines, so eloquently voiced by McKinley, Taft, and other Republican leaders, are now giving place to those of commercialism. The mask of altruism, heretofore concealing the real purposes and designs of the imperialistic advocates of colonialism, has at last been cast aside, and we are now given to see that the real, animating purpose of those who would retain possession of the Philippines forever, in utter disregard of the cost and danger involved in such a course to the United States, and in cruel indifference to the God-given rights of the Filipino people, is based in commercial greed. [Applause.] Precious little, if anything, is now heard of the high-sounding doctrine "The Philippines for the Filipinos." It has ceased to be the party cry of those who oppose Philippine independence. They are now openly and shamelessly appealing to the forces of selfishness and greed, heedless of the fact that it was President McKinley who said, "The Philippines are not ours to exploit, but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government." [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. No; not just now, if the gentleman will excuse me.

The minority ask, "If we 'Mexicanize' the Philippines, what will become of the property and lives of the Americans there." They would create the impression that if the Philippines are granted independence the lives and property of American residents of those islands would be as unsafe as they are in Mexico. This is a baseless and wholly unwarranted assumption. There is not the slightest similitude between the character, temperament, and disposition of the inhabitants of the Philippines and those of Mexico. Their peoples are so totally dissimilar in every important particular that no comparison between them is possible. The contrast is as light to darkness.

The Mexicans number 15,000,000, 80 per cent of whom are peons or savages, and of those only 2 per cent can read and write. So densely ignorant are the masses in Mexico and so utterly devoid of civic virtue that there were less than 20,000 votes cast when Madero was chosen President of the Republic. The great bulk of the Mexicans are turbulent, lawless, vengeful, treacherous, cruel, without respect for constituted authority, and utterly callous to all human rights. They entertain no regard for law and order and are amenable only to superior force. How about the Filipino people? More than half of them are literate and more than 90 per cent civilized and christianized. Although the Mexicans outnumber them as two to one and despite the fact that under the educational qualification which obtains in the Philippines and which limits that class of the electorate to those who can read and write either English or Spanish, considerably more than 200,000 votes are polled at their elections. The Moros, who constitute the only disturbing element in the whole Archipelago, number less than 4 per cent of the entire population, whilst in Mexico 40 per cent, or 6,000,000, of its population are pure-blood Indian savages. The Filipinos are an intelligent, docile, kindly, generous, peace-loving, Christian, law-abiding people, and their whole history belies the unjust imputation that they are to be compared to the desperadoes who infest Mexico and render property rights and even human life insecure. Nowhere is there to be found a higher type of the educated, refined, and cultured citizen than is to be found in the Philippines, and nothing is farther from the truth than the statement so often upon the lips of those who would hold the Filipinos in perpetual bondage that they are an illiterate and densely ignorant people. There are those among them who have won distinction in every branch of higher learning—in medicine and in law, in literature and in philosophy, in science and in art. And there are about 500,000 Filipino children attending public schools and being taught in English. It is true that this does not embrace all the Filipino children of school age, but let us not forget that there are a number of States in our American Union where from 35 to 45 per cent of children of school age have never entered a schoolhouse.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman cite those States?

Mr. JONES. I will furnish the gentleman with their names, but I can not do it offhand. I have examined the United States census and these figures are absolutely correct. I might feel some delicacy in giving the names of these States out of regard for my friend from Minnesota, for it may be that his is one of those States.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will state that 98 per cent of the people in Minnesota above the age of 8 years can read and write. I will ask the gentleman if the States that he mentions are not south of Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. JONES. No; that is not true.

Even in the department of Mindanao and Sulu, where civil authority has with such marked success been substituted for military, many primary schools are now in successful operation, where Moros and Filipinos are being instructed side by side in the English language. These schools are not locally maintained, the funds therefor being largely provided out of the insular treasury, thus annihilating the oft-repeated slander that such a feeling of hatred exists between the Filipinos and the Moros that the former can not be intrusted with the government of the latter.

If the question of the future political status of the Philippine people is to be determined upon the basis of dollars and cents rather than that of justice and right, the sooner they are granted independence the better it will be for the American taxpayer. [Applause.]

The Philippines are costing the United States annually a larger sum than their total bonded obligations added to the total value of the cotton manufactures imported from the United States, about which Members of Congress are hearing so much these days. As a purely financial proposition, therefore, the American people could well afford, if relieved from the cost of holding the Philippines, to pay off every bond for which the Philippine Government is responsible, and to make the cotton manufacturers the gift of a sum equal to the total value of their exports to the Philippines. [Applause.]

It has not until recently been seriously claimed by any one familiar with the situation that the Philippines would ever prove commercially valuable to the United States. Mr. Taft and others have repeatedly admitted they never would, but the advocates of retention point to the fact that since the beginning of the European war the trade between the United States and the Philippines has greatly increased, and they argue therefrom that if it continues to increase in the same proportion it will, in a few years, justify from a commercial standpoint the indefinite retention of the islands. They apparently forget that the European war can not last forever, and they utterly ignore the fact that if it shall be decided to hold the Filipinos indefinitely they must be included in any program for national defense which Congress may adopt.

There may be room for difference of opinion as to what constitutes ample provision for national defense, but there can be none as to the obligation of the United States to defend every foot of territory over which the American flag floats, and the obligation to defend the Philippines against foreign attack, if they are to be held indefinitely, will be all the stronger, since they are held against the will of their people.

Many of those who favor the retention of the Philippines are among the most extreme advocates of what is called national preparedness. Do they realize what it would mean to the taxpayers of America to fortify and defend the Philippines on land and on sea? Already more than $10,000,000 have been expended in fortifying the entrance to the Bay of Manila. Who can say what it will cost to fortify all of the important ports of the entire Archipelago? There are now only 12,000 American soldiers in the islands. Who believes that 200,000 will be sufficient to garrison the forts that must be constructed and to defend the islands in the event of attack by some powerful nation? But it will require more than strong fortifications and large armies to successfully defend the Philippines against foreign invasion. To do so with any hope of success will necessitate the constant presence in the Orient of an American fleet at least equal in strength to that of any naval power which may attempt to seize the islands; and yet, whatever may be the cost in blood and in treasure of defending them, we shall be bound by every consideration of justice, honor, and national pride to undertake to do so, if it shall be determined to hold them permanently. I do not hesitate to express the opinion that it would be impossible to successfully defend them against any first-class military and naval power. Without the loyal and united support and cooperation of the Philippine people it would not be possible, in my judgment, for the United States to hold and defend the islands against foreign aggression. Notwithstanding that Spain conferred upon the Philippines the inestimable blessing of the Christian religion, so deep was the desire for liberty implanted in the hearts of the Filipino that they hailed with delight the advent of the soldiers of America, and eagerly joined with them in driving out the Spaniards; and if whilst holding them in subjection we shall become involved in some great conflict, may we not, with reason, expect that history will repeat itself?

I dismiss as unworthy of serious consideration the absurd and utterly untenable argument so frequently advanced that the Philippine people are incapable of maintaining their independence, and, if given it, must sooner or later become the prey of some stronger power, for this may be truthfully said of most of the nations of the earth. It is true as to Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Switzerland, and other countries of Europe. It is true of each and all of the Republics of South and Central America, and the halls of this Chamber have echoed for months with dismal forebodings as to the present ability of our own great Nation to successfully maintain itself against foreign attack. Even an international guaranty of the independence of poor, stricken Belgium did not save that gallant little nation from the horrible fate which has overtaken it. If, therefore, the Philippines are not to be given their independence until they are capable of maintaining it in arms, then they are doomed to everlasting political servitude.

Another of the stock arguments of the opponents of Philippine independence is that the Filipinos lack a common language. When the real facts are considered in the light of the history of the world, it will be seen that this argument, too, is entitled to little respect.

Half of the Philippine people speak either Visayan or Tagalog, and more speak English than any other tongue; so that with more than half a million children being daily taught in English, the day is not far distant when English will be the common medium of intercommunication throughout the archipelago.

But, Mr. Chairman, is it true that national spirit and national unity can not exist in the absence of a common language? Within the narrow limits of the British Isles Welsh, Cornish, Gaelic, and Scotch are spoken, and the names of the different languages spoken throughout the British colonies are legion. In Quebec, for instance, although for more than a hundred years under British dominion, French is universally spoken. There are four different languages spoken in Switzerland, and I shall not venture to give the number of those in Austria-Hungary. It has recently been ascertained that there are 41 languages and 51 dialects spoken in Mexico, and yet the wretched condition into which the unhappy country has sunk has never, I think, been attributed to the multiplicity of its languages.

Of the many indefensible arguments advanced by the imperialists against granting Philippine independence about the most absurd and groundless is that the Filipinos themselves do not desire it. I shall not be surprised if, during the course of this debate, some one does not have the temerity to make this claim and even to undertake to establish it by the production of a petition signed by a score or more Filipinos protesting against the passage of this bill. Then, too, it is highly probable that we shall be told that the Democratic Party in the Philippines has adopted resolutions protesting against the passage of this bill.

It may be true that there are a few Filipinos who are willing to sell their birthright for a mess of pottage, but there is no Democratic Party in the Philippines. Four years ago, as now, a few Americans domiciled in Manila got together and adopted a set of resolutions, and actually undertook to accredit delegates to the Baltimore convention, but that convention very promptly, and very properly, refused to accept their credentials or to permit them to participate in its deliberations.

It ought not to be denied by anybody that the Filipinos as a whole desire independence. This is abundantly testified to by the sacrifices they have made and the blood they have shed in their efforts to secure it. The desire for freedom is universal. It is confined to no class or condition of men, and it pervades every part of the civilized and Christianized portions of the islands.

The fires of liberty, kindled in the hearts of the Filipinos by such patriots as the martyred Rizal, have never died out and they will never cease to burn so long as the spirit of freedom shall continue to animate mankind.

The minority undertake to support their contention that it is unwise to fix a definite date for Philippine independence by quoting the opinions upon this subject expressed years ago by ex-Presidents Roosevelt and Taft. Instead of informing us as to the views held in the past by former President Roosevelt it would have been more to the point to have been told what are the present views of that Republican statesman. In his book entitled "Fear God and Take Your Own Part," recently published, Mr. Roosevelt comes out squarely and unequivocally for Philippine independence. He says:

> We have promised the Filipinos independence in terms which were inevitably understood to be independence in the immediate future.

And he adds:

> Let us, then, as speedily as possible, leave the Philippines; and as the Philippines desire us to leave we would be quit of all moral obligations for them, and would under no circumstances be obliged to defend them from other nations.

Realizing, as every other intelligent American must, the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of defending a group of islands extending over a wide area and 7,000 miles distant from our shores, Mr. Roosevelt declares that "Alaska, Hawaii, our own coasts, and the Panama Canal and its approaches" constitute "the military problem with which we should grapple." In view of the fact that Mr. Roosevelt will in likelihood be the next presidential candidate of the Republican Party, I commend his latest and most unequivocal utterances in respect to the future political status of the Philippines to my Republican friends who may be contemplating voting against this bill, and who yet feel a lively interest in the outcome of the approaching Chicago convention.

I may add that if Mr. Roosevelt succeeds in making himself the Republican candidate and in having himself elected, he may not wait for a Republican Congress to set the Philippines free, but may, of his own volition, withdraw the American troops, pull down the American flag, and grant the Filipinos their freedom. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why does not the Democratic President pull down the flag and withdraw the troops?

Mr. JONES. Because there is no authority under the Constitution for such action. It was Mr. Roosevelt, who, in the absence of constitutional authority, took the Isthmus of Panama. No Democratic President ever did such a thing. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SNYDER. He did not pull down the United States flag.

Mr. JONES. No; he did not pull down the United States flag, but he pulled down the flag of a friendly nation—the flag of Colombia.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman state what Democratic President it was that pulled down the flag of Hawaii?

Mr. JONES. It is preposterous to say that the Filipinos are ignorant as to the provisions of this bill. It has been published in full in the Philippines in both English and Spanish and in at least one of the principal native languages of the islands. It has been published too in pamphlet form in Tagalog, and I am informed by an American friend in Manila that one native bookstore sold within a short period more than 100,000 copies of this publication. It has the support of all the political parties in the Philippines, and Gov. Gen. Harrison has cabled his approval and expressed the earnest hope that it may be speedily enacted into law. In the face of such testimony as this how vain it is for Members to assert upon this floor that the Filipinos do not desire their freedom.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does the gentleman refer to Senate bill 381?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Senate bill 381 has ever been published in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think the gentleman is the only man in the world who thinks so.

Mr. JONES. I am so informed, and I have in my possession a pamphlet in which this bill is translated into Tagalog, and I shall be glad to hand it to the gentleman for his enlightenment. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it not a fact that all political parties have approved the Jones bill for two years?

Mr. JONES. Yes; and it is also a fact that they all approved the Senate bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Do they approve any kind of a bill?

Mr. JONES. Any bill that is an advance over the previous bill; any bill that will give them their freedom and independence a year sooner than another bill will do it.

Mr. Chairman, that great Virginian, Thomas Jefferson, is best known to the world as the author of the Declaration of Independence, and yet it may be truthfully affirmed of him that his highest title to fame rests upon a broader and firmer foundation than even the authorship of that immortal document.

He was the greatest apostle of human liberty that the world has ever produced—the most courageous as he was the ablest champion of free popular government known to ancient or modern history. The political aphorisms of Thomas Jefferson are so universally true as to be applicable to all the peoples of the earth, to the inhabitants of the Eastern as well as those of the Western Hemisphere. If they could be read and understood by every patriotic American citizen there would be no Philippine problem to vex our minds and disturb our peace.

When Thomas Jefferson asserted that "Every man and every body of men on earth possesses the right to self-government," he did not intend to be understood as limiting that axiomatic declaration to the people who constituted the American colonists then struggling for their independence.

In his first inaugural address, that great document in which are formulated with matchless perspicuity and force the essential principles of democracy, these words are to be found:

> Sometimes it is said that man can not be trusted with the government of himself. Can he then be trusted with the government of others? Or have we found angels in the form of kings to govern him? Let history answer this question.

But nowhere, and at no time, has the imperishable truth that self-government is a right inherent in all men been so clearly and so strikingly set forth as in these words of the Declaration of Independence:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the principles enunciated by Thomas Jefferson have never been repudiated by the party which he founded. The Democratic Party stands to-day precisely were it stood a century ago. In one form or another it has reaffirmed its fealty to the principles laid down by its great founder in every platform which it has ever adopted. In every national platform which it has promulgated since the Philippine Islands were ceded to the United States it has solemnly declared itself in favor of the independence of those islands, and my faith in the integrity of the party to which I have given the adherence of a lifetime is so unfaltering that I can never believe it will be guilty of the political perfidy and cowardice of proclaiming itself as favoring a policy which it is not willing to defend and enforce. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It has seemed to me, Mr. Chairman, that in discussing a measure designed to carry into effect Democratic promises of independence for the Philippines, it was not inappropriate that I should invoke the power and authority of the mighty name of the greatest of all Democrats to the end that the Democratic Party, now that it is clothed with full legislative and executive power, shall not falter in what I hold to be its highest duty. For I can not if I would disguise the fact that there are those who, professing to believe in its principles, are nevertheless endeavoring to prevent the consummation of the lofty and patriotic purposes to which it is so solmenly committed. They would, upon one pretext or another, have the Democratic Party, now that it has been given the opportunity to redeem its promises, abandon its position in respect to the Philippines and cravenly acquiesce in a policy which Democrats for a decade and a half have denounced with one accord as prompted by commercial greed, as unconstitutional, unpatriotic, and cruelly unjust both to the American and Filipino people—a disgraceful policy of criminal aggression which, if persisted in, must result in the destruction of the free principles upon which this Republic was founded. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I would not, of course, be understood as intimating that all who hold that the time has not come when the Filipinos can be safely intrusted with their freedom are inspired by commercial greed or any other unworthy motive; but, whatever may be their incentives, Democrats at least are strangely unmindful of the teachings of Jefferson, and either ignorant of or indifferent to their party's position upon this great, burning, living issue.

I do not minimize in the least the influences of a commercial and business character that are being exerted to defeat Philippine independence, and I know, too, that there are still other powerful influences at work with the same end in view, but my faith in the patriotism and sense of justice and fair dealing of the membership of this body is such that I do not permit myself to doubt what the issue will be.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to say, in conclusion, that fervently believing with that great apostle of human liberty, Thomas Jefferson, "that the people of every country are the only safe guardians of their own rights," my prayer is that the day is not far distant when we shall see arise in the Far East a free and independent Christian nation, to be known throughout the world as the "Republic of the Philippine Islands." [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for four hours. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, this is a great anniversary. On this date, May 1, 1898, occurred the battle and victory of Manila Bay, one of the honor days, one of the heroic days, one of the immortal days, of American history. As long as the Republic lives and her children gather to read the story of her birth and growth so long will they thrill with pride as they read the story of Dewey's victory on that day. [Applause on the Republican side.] With the Olympia leading, in the obscurity of the early dawn, past the frowning fortress of Corregidor, past the belching batteries of El Fraile, past the bursting mines strewn in the uncharted channel, out into the unknown waters of Manila Bay steamed the American fleet. To meet the little squadron there were drawn up in a long crescent-shaped line of battle seven Spanish ships of war, supported by the land batteries of Cavite. A few minutes after 5 there floated from the signal mast of the Olympia the order, "Prepare for general action," and instantly in response on all the American ships the Stars and Stripes floated on the breeze. The Spaniards at once opened fire from ship and shore. Steaming slowly ahead Commodore Dewey and his flag officer, Capt. Gridley, stood on the bridge of the Olympia, tranquilly observing the shell fire of the enemy, which lashed the waters about them into yellow foam Presently the commodore, turning quietly to his companion, remarked in a casual tone, "You may fire when you are ready, Gridley." In seven hours time, the Spanish fleet was annihilated, the Battle of Manila Bay had been fought and won, and the United States became a world power.

In this country popular enthusiasm was unbounded. No victory ever achieved by American valor had so stirred the patriotic fervor of the Nation. Nor was praise and admiration confined to the United States. The London Times declared:

> The destruction of the Spanish fleet was as complete as any achievement in naval annals. Dewey showed himself worthy alike of the finest traditions of the United States Navy and of his kinship with the race which produced Nelson.

The Kaiser, when the news was reported to him, said:

> There is evidently something besides smartness and commercialism in the Yankee blood! Those fellows at Cavite fought like veterans.

It was a proud day for America. It will ever remain a "red-letter" day in our history.

As a celebration of that great event it is proposed on this eighteenth anniversary to say to the historians, "Wipe out that chapter of our history, it was a mistake"; to say to our own people, "We need the money for other things, the Philippines are costing us too much"; to say to the nations of the world, "We are afraid to try to keep the islands our sailors and soldiers fought for. If any of you want them, take them; we are too proud to fight." [Applause on the Republican side.]

ARE THE ISLANDS A SOURCE OF WEAKNESS?

Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman from Virginia that the Philippines are a source of weakness and that we ought to get rid of them. That argument is strained and weak and is based on a singlar inconsistency. On the one hand, it is urged that the Filipinos are amply able to take care of themselves and should be given their independence. On the other hand, it is urged that with the assistance of the United States they would be defenseless and easy victims of any predatory nation. The Filipinos alone would be invincible, but with the assistance of the American Army and Navy they would be helpless! That implies the utter incapacity of American arms. The argument then proceeds to claim that the United States would be stronger without the help of nine or ten million of Filipinos fighting with us to protect their homes than it would be with such help. That assumes the utter worthlessness of the Filipinos.

Neither of these assumptions are justified. The Filipinos are a brave, courageous people and make good soldiers. Gen. "Chinese" Gordon, as he is called, was one of the most illustrious officers who ever led English soldiers. He said of the Philippine troops who formed part of his forces in the China war:

> They are a fine, sturdy body of fellows, faithful and long-suffering, bearing hardships without murmurs, plucky, and never losing heart in defeat, and considerably superior to the Japanese.

We have more than 5,000 Philippine Scouts now in the islands, and have made them a part of the American Army. They are well trained, armed, and equipped, and remarkably efficient. We have also over 5,000 Philippine Constabulary, trained by United States officers, and thoroughly competent for any military service. These forces can be increased to any number thought necessary when sufficient revenues can be secured to maintain them. A force of 200,000 men could be secured for the defense of the islands if there was money to pay them.

The land forces of the Philippines can be increased as increasing revenue will permit, and can be trained under our own officers to become a strong and sufficient army for the defense of the islands. But with the American withdrawal and the consequent loss of revenue, without arms, ammunition, or training or officers, the Filipinos would be helpless.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; for a question.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman propose to tax the American people to raise 195,000 additional men to defend the Philippines?

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman heard me imperfectly, I think. I said the Philippines were not able now to support a defensive force, but as they become economically stronger with the development of the islands under American supervision their forces could be increased from their own establishment and paid for from their own revenues.

Mr. GORDON. Suppose you could not increase them?

Mr. TOWNER. I can not yield any further on that line, I regret to say.

But that is only one phase of the question. If it be admitted that the islands are a source of weakness in so far as military operations by land forces are concerned, the case is far different from a naval standpoint. We have determined to become for our own protection either the first or the second naval power of the world, and to keep that place. It is now apparent that we must control the Pacific for our own self-preservation. That means a fleet on the Pacific strong enough to protect every American coast that borders on its shores. If we are unable to defend the Philippines, we are unable to defend Guam, we are unable to defend Samoa, we are unable to defend the Hawaiian Islands [applause on the Republican side], we are unable to defend Alaska, we are unable to defend the Pacific coast of our own country, and we are unable to defend the Canal Zone. All of these are vulnerable without a commanding navy. If we are to surrender the Philippines because of their military weakness, we should also surrender Guam, Samoa, the Hawaiians, Alaska, and the Canal Zone. This it is not suggested we should do, and with a Navy sufficient to protect these we can not only protect the Philippines, but it will strengthen our Navy to have them as a base.

Naval bases and coaling stations are as necessary for extensive fleet operations as are ships and sailors. But it is said we can retain a naval base and coaling station there and let the islands go. When we dissociate our interests from the Filipinos we make our occupancy in their territory impossible and unsafe. United we can both easily stand; divided we would most certainly fall. Besides, with the islands in the possession of Germany or Japan we could not protect and preserve a coaling station or naval base.

If Japan should send an army to invade and occupy the Philippines it would have to maintain it there. Without the control of the seas, its only line of communication, it could not do so. The control of the seas is our defense of the Philippines, as it is of our other Pacific possessions. Having the mastery of the Pacific, as we must have to protect our other Pacific territory, the possession of the Philippines is not only an advantage, it is indispensable.

It is strange that while every other great nation considers the Philippines a source of strength, there are so many in the United States who consider them a source of weakness. Gentlemen who consider the Philippines, so far from our shores and so near Japan, a source of military weakness might ask themselves if they would consider the occupancy of Magdalena Bay in Mexico a source of military weakness to Japan. Yet this Government, as everybody knows, would go to war with Japan before it would allow such action to be taken. When a Japanese cruiser, chasing a German war vessel, ran aground in Turtle Bay and other Japanese ships went to her relief, the whole Pacific coast was panic-stricken because it was asserted Japan was preparing to acquire a source of "military weakness" on the Mexican coast. If a settlement by a European power in Mexico, or the Caribbean Sea, or in South America would weaken rather than strengthen a European power, we ought, as an act of preparedness, to encourage rather than protest. Our Monroe doctrine is based on the theory that such possession would be a source of strength to them and a menace to us.

It is the counsel of fear rather than of reason that favors the relinquishment of the Philippines. Unless we have the power to hold the Philippines we might as well surrender in advance the control of the Pacific. A power so dreaded as to compel our surrender of the Philippines can drive our commerce from the Pacific, take our other insular possessions, dispossess us of the Panama Canal, and dictate on what terms we may trade with the Orient. Gentlemen who so believe and advise are not in accord with the traditions and spirit of true Americanism.

The gentleman from Virginia with great care cites some statements from Mr. Roosevelt, recently made, that as the Democratic Party has promised independence, and the Philippines can not easily be defended, we might as well let them go. This late conversion of that gentleman to the Democratic position so pleases the gentleman from Virginia that he nominates his convert as the Republican candidate for the Presidency. I noticed that all the applause given that nomination was on the Democratic side of the House. Not a single handclap was heard on the Republican side. The exceeding popularity of that gentleman's candidacy with the entire Democratic Party does not sufficiently recommend it to Republicans to induce them to accept it, in my opinion. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I wonder if the mention of the name of either of the living ex-Presidents would bring much more applause?

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think the mention of the name of the President would bring much applause?

Mr. TOWNER. I presume sincere expressions of approval would be difficult to obtain at this time.

WHAT THE FILIPINOS WANT.

The Philippine Islands are now self-supporting. The total revenue of the Government is about $17,000,000 annually. It is almost wholly derived from customs and internal revenues. Under powers given it in this bill their resources can be materially increased. The greatest potential wealth of the islands lies in their agricultural resources, the public lands, timber, mines, and water power. To develop and at the same time conserve these will furnish ample and continually increasing revenue for the islands. The Philippines are at present the richest undeveloped region in the world.

For such development capital is the first essential, and capital will not be invested unless there is a reasonable certainty of security. The American withdrawal now, making worthless American investments in the islands, would make it almost certain no foreign capital would go into the islands except for a sinister purpose. Indeed it is difficult to see how the islands can obtain funds to maintain a separate government. Certainly they could not raise and maintain an army. They could not build a navy. They could not borrow money unless they placed themselves under obligations to some nation desirous of controlling or absorbing them. Indeed I can not believe there is any real desire among Filipinos of responsibility for independence unguaranteed.

I remember that only a few months ago that distinguished representative of the Philippines, that brilliant gentleman whom we so admire, said that what they wanted was their independence with an American protectorate.

Mr. QUEZON. Is the gentleman referring to me?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. QUEZON. I never made that statement.

Mr. TOWNER. You did not?

Mr. QUEZON. Never.

Mr. TOWNER. You are quoted as having made it.

Mr. QUEZON. I never made the statement.

Mr. TOWNER. The New York Evening Post, which ought to be considered by you as very good authority, for it is very strongly in favor of Philippine independence, quotes you as saying:

> I have found, after talking with both politicians and these men in the Philippines that they consider a United States protectorate as a more efficient guaranty of the integrity of the Philippines and less liable to produce friction which might result in the absorption of the Philippines by other nations. Speaker Osmena believes with me.

Mr. QUEZON. I want to say that the statement is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. TOWNER. And you were not alone in being so reported. Your colleague, Mr. EARNSHAW, is reported as saying in an interview never repudiated:

> That the United States should, for a period, exercise a protectorate over us until we are able to walk alone among the nations of the earth is a plan which I feel certain meets the approval of all patriotic Filipinos.

The Democratic Party of the Philippines recently assembled to select delegates to the forthcoming Democratic national convention. They adopted resolutions which declared:

> We denounce and repudiate as un-American, un-Democratic, and cruelly unjust to the Filipino people any policy which would cast this people adrift in the dangerous sea of international politics without adequate financial resources and no protection or guaranty of their national integrity.

Instances could be multiplied to show that the people of the islands who want independence desire that the United States shall guarantee their independence until they can take care of themselves.

DEMOCRATIC PROMISES.

Those Democrats of the Philippines have a right to appeal to the Democrats of the United States that no action be taken that casts them adrift without protection. The Democratic Party have always demanded independence for the islands, and have always promised to guarantee it. Now, when they have the power and are called upon to fulfill their promises they propose to get rid of the islands and let them shift for themselves. They are willing to give them their independence, but are unwilling to keep their equally binding pledge to guarantee them against domestic insurrection or foreign invasion.

In their last national platform, adopted in 1912, the Democratic Party declared:

> We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

The party representatives are ready now to give the Filipinos their independence without waiting until a stable government can be established, and they utterly repudiate their promise to guarantee such independence. For years the Democratic Party has called upon Republicans to fulfill what they are pleased to assert was an implied promise. Now we press upon Democrats the observance not of an implied promise but of an express promise—one to the American people that we would not release the Philippines until a stable government had been or could be established; the other to the Filipinos that they should not be cast adrift without protection. Both of these promises the majority will break if it adopts the Clarke amendment.

THE CLARKE AMENDMENT.

The history of the Clarke amendment is not creditable to its sponsors. What is known as the Jones bill was introduced in the Sixty-third Congress and passed the House October 14, 1914, by a large majority. It failed of consideration by the Senate. It was introduced in the Sixty-fourth Congress in the Senate by Senator HITCHCOCK, chairman of the Senate committee, and reintroduced in the House by Mr. JONES, chairman of the House committee. The Senate took up the consideration of the bill before the House, and during the discussion of the preamble, regarding which there was great diversity of opinion among Senators, Senator CLARKE of Arkansas introduced as a substitute for all suggested preambles his provision, which is now section 34 of the pending bill. The preamble originally reported with the Senate bill declared the purpose of the United States to be that independence should be granted "when in the judgment of the United States it will be to the permanent interest of the people of the Philippine Islands." The House bill provided that the United States would recognize the independence of the islands "as soon as a stable government can be established," the House preamble being in exact conformity to the party platform declaration.

The Clarke substitute abandoned both preambles and declared the United States would withdraw from the Philippines in not less than two nor more than four years. It was not believed that such an amendment would receive any considerable support, but when the vote was taken there were 41 yeas and 41 nays; the Vice President voted "yea," and the amendment was adopted. Five Republicans voted for it, and 11 Democrats voted against it.

As a substantive piece of legislation, I do not hesitate to characterize it as discreditable and absurd. It is utterly out of harmony with every other provision of the bill. The bill as a whole provides for a new constitution of government which shall supersede the present system. If adopted, it will require a complete reorganization of the existing establishment. An elective senate is created, new officers must be elected, and a greatly enlarged electorate is provided. Under existing law the present electorate is about 275,000. Under the new law it will be increased to between 800,000 and 900,000. To these new voters, who never cast a ballot before because of lack of educational qualifications, will be intrusted the formation of a new government, the installation of a new nation.

And this new government, which is to last only two or three years and is then to be cast aside for the new republic, or whatever they shall create, can be of no possible value to anybody. It can do nothing the existing government could not do and do far better than the new government created by the bill. In other words, if the Clarke amendment is adopted, all the rest of the bill is worse than useless. It will only put upon an excited, distracted, disorganized people a costly burden and cast upon an electorate, two-thirds of which never voted before upon any proposition, the most intricate and difficult task any people are ever called upon to perform. If the Clarke amendment is to prevail, then the Senate bill and the Jones bill should both be abandoned, for under such circumstances they are unnecessary, unwise, and dangerous.

It is generally supposed that the United States has the power under the provisions of the Clarke amendment to delay the separation four or five years. That is a mistake. The Filipinos have that power, but not the United States. Full power to take steps to institute their new independent government is given them as soon as their provisional government is instituted. It can not be consummated in less than two years, but if they have their new independent government ready for recognition at the end of two years, and desire us to recognize it—whatever it is, republic, monarchy, or what not—we bind our ourselves by the Clarke amendment to withdraw and recognize its independence.

If in its substance this Clarke amendment is absurd, in purpose it is dishonorable and cowardly. It is dishonorable because by abandoning the islands in a fit of petulance we are falsifying every statement of purpose we have made to the Filipinos and to the world during the 18 years of our occupancy. We have promised to educate them, to develop them, to elevate them, to give them from time to time larger measures of self-government until they would be able to take care of themselves, if at that time they should decide to ask for separation. Men may differ as to when that time shall come, but very few, indeed, claim that it had now arrived.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is debating a feature of this matter in which I am very much interested. What time would the gentleman suggest as the time when we might properly withdraw?

Mr. TOWNER. That question can be decided when we come to the time, when it is really debatable. My position is that it is not even debatable now. I think the gentleman will hardly contend that at the present time or that within two years the people of the Philippines could take care of themselves.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, I do not agree with the gentleman at all, although I do not pretend to know.

Mr. TOWNER. I agree with the gentleman that we do not any of us know when the time shall come when we can safely grant independence to the Philippines. We ought not to speak dogmatically about it, and certainly we ought not to act precipitately about it. What we should do should be governed by a sense of duty and obligation and responsibility, and not from pique, impatience, or a desire to get rid of what might be considered an unpleasant duty.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the gentleman on that; but I want to ask him this question: Did the gentleman vote in favor of returning Cuba to the Cubans?

Mr. TOWNER. I was not in Congress then.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the gentleman have favored such action?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman very frankly that I would.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are not so many literate Cubans as there are literate Filipinos. Is not that so?

Mr. TOWNER. Perhaps so, but the proportion is greater.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why make one rule for the Cubans and another rule for the Filipinos?

Mr. TOWNER. That is very easy to answer, for before we entered the War with Spain to free Cuba we promised solemnly to the world that we would not stay in Cuba.

Mr. McKELLAR. Ah, but is not our implied promise to the Filipinos just exactly what our express promise was to the Cubans? [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to my friend that there has not at any time been any suggestion even of an implied promise to fix any definite date for independence. Your party promised independence when a stable government could be established, and when your committee reported a bill fixing the time for independence at 1921, your party leaders repudiated it and forced its withdrawal. Since then you have never dared to fix a date.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are fixing a time now.

Mr. TOWNER. No; you have not done so yet.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are trying to.

Mr. TOWNER. You are trying now to pass a bill that was not formed by the Democratic committee of either the Senate or House, which was disapproved by your Bureau of Insular Affairs, by your Secretary of War, and by your President until he has again changed his mind and asked you to do so, too. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KELLEY. In the case of Cuba did not this Government go back a second time and establish order there?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes, indeed.

Mr. KELLEY. Is there anything in this bill which would require us to do that?

Mr. TOWNER. No. In the case of Cuba we reserved that right in the treaty and afterwards exercised it.

Besides we should remember that we are under obligation, because of the Monroe doctrine, to protect Cuba in any event. We did not extend that doctrine when we guaranteed Cuban independence. But we have not extended the Monroe doctrine to the Philippines. We would not be under any obligation, unless we expressly agreed to do so, to protect them, or to prevent any nation from subjugating them and absorbing them after our withdrawal. In the case of Cuba we were only acting in accordance with the traditional policy of the country, in accordance with that doctrine which no party in the United States has ever dared repudiate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the gentleman permit me again?

Mr. TOWNER. Just another question.

Mr. McKELLAR. The gentleman said, "in accordance with our traditional policy." Is it in accordance with our traditional policy to govern a foreign people without their consent?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that we have governed foreign people without their consent from the very commencement of the Republic. There has never been an hour that we have not done so. We did so when we purchased Florida, when we acquired Louisiana, when we secured California, when we bought Alaska, when we annexed Hawaii. We have governed the Indians, an alien race, without their consent from the beginning, and do so now. We even to this day preserve the fiction of treating them as foreign powers and making treaties with them.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I would like to ask the gentleman if the provisions of the Clarke amendment were submitted to the Filipino people for ratification, by referendum, what does the gentleman think the result would be?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman, frankly, that I think they would vote for it.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Replying to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], is it not true that Jefferson, the great apostle of self-government, purchased Louisiana and governed its people without their consent?

Mr. TOWNER. For years; for decades.

Now, let me say, further, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] asked me what would be the opinion of the Filipinos regarding the Clarke amendment. I think the Filipino people generally have the idea that independence is the most desirable thing on earth. Many of them do not understand what it means. I believe the more intelligent and educated do not desire it without a guaranty. They know that unprotected independence to them would be a vain and idle thing which they might lose within 24 hours.

Mr. GALLAGHER. But the Clarke amendment provides that the United States shall cut away from them entirely.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; it wipes it all out. It proceeds upon the theory that we are under no further obligation to them.

Mr. GALLAGHER. That was the idea of my question. What would they do if they really understood it?

Mr. TOWNER. It is hard to say. They have been so long clamoring for independence that they might still demand it on any terms and take the chances.

But that would not lessen our responsibility nor relieve us from the full performance of our duty. If we believe it probable that the Filipino people are not now prepared to assume the full responsibility of nationality, if we believe that domestic insurrection would follow our withdrawal, if we believe that they would soon fall a victim to some foreign power, then, no matter what a few politicos may demand, we should not yield to their clamor.

THE AMERICAN OCCUPANCY.

No matter what shall hereafter occur, the record of accomplishment during the American occupancy of the Philippines can never be obliterated. The results may be lost by vain desire and overconfidence, but the history of the last 18 years is the most splendid example of unselfish devotion and unparalleled accomplishment to be found under like conditions in all the annals of the past.

In 14 years an educational system has been established in many respects better than any other ever established either in the Orient or in the Tropics. It is better than that in operation in many of the great civilized nations of the world. During that brief period it has touched 8,000,000 people and has been extended to the remotest regions of the archipelago. More than 600,000 pupils have been enrolled in the public schools, and more than 400,000 are in attendance. One-half of the children of school age are still without facilities, but that is because there are not as yet available funds to build the required schoolhouses and secure the requisite additional teachers.

At the very beginning of the American occupancy, while yet the only established authority was military rule, the American Army opened a school as soon as they had established a post. Before Manila was taken a school had been established on the island of Corregidor, which guards the entrance to Manila Bay. A few weeks after the surrender of Manila four or five thousand children were in attendance in the city schools. As soon as districts were brought under the control of American arms soldiers were detailed to open schools, and the American system of education was begun. As the Hon. Frank L. Crone, the efficient director of education in the Philippines, says:

> It can be truthfully said that the Army traveled with a musket in one hand and a schoolbook in the other.

Upon such a foundation a most carefully organized system has been put in operation adjusted to the needs of the people and consonant with their character and development. A balanced curriculum, from primary to university, embracing academic instruction, industrial and vocational education, and physical training has been established. Courses in farming, domestic science, commercial subjects, and trades are offered with a view to fitting the Filipinos to follow these trades when they leave school. As Dr. Crone declares:

> In working out this plan we have conceived it to be the function of the public-school system to prepare every boy and girl for the happiest, freest, and most efficient life in the sphere to which his activities will probably be confined.

The department of agriculture had been for some time vainly endeavoring to interest the farmers of the islands in raising corn. A corn campaign was finally inaugurated in the schools, which now enroll 50,000 boys, as a result of which the production of corn in the islands was doubled and the Philippines are $4,000,000 a year richer.

The introduction of physical training and American athletics in the schools has had a three-fold beneficial effect. It has increased the health and strength of the children. It has driven out vicious amusements, such as cock fighting, and substituted baseball and basket ball and other American outdoor sports. The rivalries for supremacy in these American games have brought the different parts of the islands, with their various tribes, languages, and customs, into a broader knowledge of each other and a greater harmony of interests. It has been said that in no other instance has the civilizing influence and political value of baseball been so fully exemplified.

Much remains to be done. Only about one-half of the children are now in the schools. New schoolhouses must be built. More teachers must be secured. The system must be extended and strengthened and firmly established. It is self-evident that this must be done under American supervision. Gen. McIntyre, in his official report as the result of a special investigation made last summer, says that more American teachers are necessary to maintain the efficiency of the system, and "any effort to increase the numbers of schools and teachers without obtaining a supply of teachers from the outside would be probably more harmful than beneficial."

Again he says:

> A material increase in the number of schools or the number of pupils would only be justified in case the number of teachers from the United States could be correspondingly increased. I am convinced that any effort to economize in the number of competent American teachers is a mistake, and that steady progress demands that the number of American teachers be not decreased from the maximum of the past five years.

American teachers will remain only during the American occupancy. When that ends, with the American soldier will go the American teacher. Haul down the American flag from the schoolhouses of the islands, and with it will fall the most promising and successful educational work that has been accomplished since man studied the printed book. No American superintendent or teacher who has had any experience in the islands but will say that it is absolutely impossible now for the Filipinos unaided to carry on a general system of public instruction.

Some few believe that after the present system has been extended to all the people and has become well established the Filipinos unaided can carry it on, but not now.

Closely allied to the question of education is that of language. In the Philippines there is no people—there are peoples. In the islands there are scores of languages and hundreds of dialect variations. There are at least 50 linguistic groups differing from one another as much as Spanish and Italian, while many are as different as German and French. Catechisms have been printed in more than 50 of these languages and dialects. No two of these are mutually intelligible. The Tagalog, Visayan, and Ilocano languages are as different from each other as are English, French, and German.

The Filipinos are of Malayan stock, but they come from widely separated sources. The pigmy race of Negritos are, as far as can be ascertained, the only aborigines of the islands. The seafaring Malays came from their widely scattered homes in Java, Sumatra, Borneo, and the hundreds of other sources where the Malays had settled. They came a few at a time, settled on different islands, and built up separate establishments. There were 3,000 islands among which to choose a home, and they were not compelled to fight for a place. The fighting came later. These small and independent migrations, isolated both in time and place of origin, were numerous and extended over a period of several centuries. The linguistic diversity which followed was the natural result of such settlement. Added to these were the later migrations to the islands of the Mohammedan Malays, the Moros, as they were called from the race of Moslems which overran Spain, the Moors. These warlike people were rapidly overrunning the islands and bade fair to exterminate the other and less warlike tribes when their progress was arrested by the advent of the Spaniards.

According to Prof. C. Everett Conant, formerly Government translator and interpreter in Manila, from whom most of these facts are derived, the chief languages of the Philippines are the Visayan, spoken by about 3,250,000; Tagalog, by 1,500,000; Ilocano, by 800,000; Bicol, by 500,000; Pangasinan, by 350,000; Pampanga, by 300,000; Igorot, by 200,000; Ibanog, by 150,000; Moros, 275,000.

There is not now and never has been any common language of the people. They can not now, and never could understand each other. There is not now and never has been any common literature. During the 350 years of Spanish control, the governing body and the specially educated spoke Spanish. But they were few in number. It was the policy of the Spanish Government to teach the language only to the native officials and the wealthier classes. The people who were taught anything were given only a rudimentary training in their own tongues.

The teaching of English in the schools is the first attempt to secure a common medium of communication that has given any promise of success. As a result English is already more widely spoken than is Spanish or any other common tongue. It is absolutely essential to the unity and cohesion of the islands that this establishment of a common medium of communication be continued until it is well disseminated and generally accepted. A unified and common public school system is impossible without it. Reforms in Government, the preservation of a free press, and free speech is dependent upon it. Under existing conditions the continued extension and final establishment of self-government is dependent upon it.

The teaching of English in the schools would be abandoned in less than a year following an American withdrawal. Already its use is challenged and disapproved by political leaders and the national press. The benefit of a common language has never been understood by the people, and from the first they have clamored for instruction in their own languages. With the disappearance of the American language from the schools and from official use will begin the disappearance of American institutions from the islands. We will have worked and sacrificed in vain if we now abandon our trust.

The American Nation must not now, having done so much, give up its duty.

> And when your goal is nearest,
> The end for others sought,
> Watch Sloth and heathen Folly
> Bring all your hope to nought.

No work undertaken by Americans has so excited the admiration and wonder of specialists as the results secured in health and sanitary reform in the Philippines. Until the Americans appeared such work was unknown in the Orient. It was said there was not a sewer east of Suez. The native populations wallowed in the accumulated filth of centuries. For ages smallpox, cholera, bubonic plague, beriberi, leprosy, and many other diseases were considered part of the established order of things. In an article which appeared recently in a leading American magazine reviewing the work of Dr. Heizer, from which many of the facts now stated were taken, it is related that when the doctor visited the principal cities of the Orient and stated his purpose to clean up the Philippines they discouraged him, saying, "No, no, Doctor; let the beggars alone—they'll be much happier and like you better. Go back and sanitate the United States; don't try to clean up the Philippines."

But the doctor did not go back, and he did not give up. He went to work. As a result, Manila, from being recognized as one of the plague spots of the world, is now the cleanest and most beautiful city in the Orient, and one of the healthiest on the globe. The Philippine Islands in less than a score of years have made more progress in stamping out disease and in sanitary reforms than any other nation in the world, civilized or savage.

At the commencement of the American occupancy smallpox carried off 40,000 people annually. The year the Americans began their work there were noted 128,000 cases of cholera. That plague on previous visitations had caused the death of 1,000 persons a day in Manila alone. More than 6,000 lepers roamed the islands, spreading contamination wherever they went. Bubonic plague had raged for centuries. Beriberi destroyed thousands of lives every year. Malaria, amebic dysentery, and tuberculosis were everywhere distributed. It is stated that 70 per cent of the people were tubercular.

Sanitary conditions were such as can not be described. In the cities and villages the homes, built of bamboo and palm on stilts 3 or 4 feet above the ground, were built close together without streets or order. They consisted for the most part of a single room. The floor was made of planks with wide interstices through which the family refuse was thrown into the area below, where the family animals were kept. In such homes as these nine-tenths of the people lived. Pure water was not to be found. Medical attendance could not be secured, and surgery was practically unknown.

In a remarkably short time conditions have changed completely in all of the cities and most of the villages. Pure water is secured from well-protected sources and from artesian wells. Smallpox has been practically exterminated. Dr. Heizer and his associates vaccinated 10,000,000 of Filipinos without a fatality. Manila, where thousands died every year, has not had a single death from smallpox since 1906.

Dr. Heizer gathered the lepers together in the beautiful island of Culion; established a village with well-built houses, streets, a sewer system, water supply, town hall, school buildings, warehouses, dining halls, hospitals, electric lights, a post office, stores, and a theater. Here have been gathered more than 8,000 lepers, and the spread of the disease is stopped. More than all, Dr. Heizer has discovered a cure for leprosy. At the Mohonk conference last October he reported that the year previous four had been actually cured, that 23 had been pronounced cured last year, and that several hundred others were well on the road to recovery.

Up to 1906 the Philippines had annual visitations of the dreaded bubonic plague. The plague has not visited the islands since that date. Two cases appeared in Manila a few years ago and the city was in a panic. But the spread of the scourge was prevented, and with the continuance of strict quarantine regulations its reappearance is practically impossible.

The cause of beriberi has been discovered, and measures are being taken to prevent its prevalence. Already the mortality from that disease has been greatly reduced.

The visitations of cholera have never been entirely prevented, but great progress has been made and the loss reduced to a minimum. Gen. McIntyre reports that the general health conditions of the islands are much better than in any of the neighboring oriental countries. Indeed the East is learning from America in the Philippines and profiting by her example. Japan, Hongkong, Indo-China, the Straits Settlements, Java, India, Australia, Ceylon, and Siam are introducing Heizer methods everywhere. We have taught the world that health can be maintained in the Tropics, and that even the Orient can be "cleaned up."

Is it the sober belief of thoughtful men that when the American withdrawal is accomplished this work will be or can be continued? It is probable that an honest and determined effort will be made by Filipinos who realize what the loss of these results would mean to preserve and carry on the work. But without the stimulus of American ambition for accomplishment and without the benefit of the unselfish devotion of American physicians and scientists working under the American flag not only for the good of the Filipinos but for the honor and glory of their country—without such incentive hope of further progress is small. Against the accumulated ignorance and prejudice of centuries even the unexampled triumphs of 15 years can not expect to stand unless supported by continual reinforcements from the brain and heart of America.

It took France 80 years—from 1790 to 1870—to establish a Republic. Three times it was overturned by her own people, three times by the army, three times by foreign invaders.

It took the United States 150 years to secure, through colonial experience, the knowledge and strength to achieve independence.

It took a century for the South American Republics to establish stable governments, and some of them are far from secure even now. A century ago the revolutions in what are now known as the South American Republics started. One by one they threw off the yoke of Spain. They achieved their independence. But they did not by that means bring to their people peace, prosperity, or stable government. For 50 years revolution succeeded revolution.

Practically every one of them suffered conditions such as now and for many years have existed in Mexico. Their history is one long record of bloodshed, rapine, assassination, and disaster. Their revolutions were so frequent that the historians wearied in recounting them. No period of rest was secured until in effect the Monroe doctrine was established and intrigues ceased and sedition slowly died out. The world will never know and the South American Republics will never acknowledge the debt of gratitude due this country not only for saving them from conquest and absorption by European powers, but for saving them as well from internal revolutions and domestic insurrections. Diaz arrested for a generation the Mexican revolt, but with his abdication revolution broke out anew. Such is liberty without restraint. Such is independence unguarded.

With such instances as these to consider, is it not foolish for anyone to expect that a collection of tribes only yesterday gathered together with a semblance of unity can be made into a self-governing nation able to guarantee life and liberty to its people and protect itself against the world, with but 18 years' preparation and experience?

I have hoped—I still hope—that with the aid and protection of the United States the Philippines will develop into a great, self-governing commonwealth, maintaining some such relation to us as do Canada and Australia to Great Britain. The tie that binds those countries to the mother country is not force, for it has been acknowledged by Great Britain for years that if they should ask for independence Great Britain would not coerce their retention as part of the Empire. They remain associated with the mother country both because of sentiment and self-interest. They are self-governing and self-developing. They live their own lives and work out their own destiny; but knowing they can go, they remain, and it is manifestly better for both that they remain. Such may be and such, I hope, will be the relation between the United States and the Philippines. It is so apparently to the mutual advantage of both that it is difficult to see how either can desire at this time to separate. I hope to so bind the people of the Philippines to us by our service to them, by their love for our institutions, by self-interest, by mutual protection against foreign aggression, that they will not desire separation. We would not and we should not refuse their independence when the day shall come when they can maintain it if they shall desire it. But I hope that they may have an opportunity at least to consider it, and to consider it with intelligence and good judgment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I heard a moment ago an interruption and a suggestion later by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] about our having governed Louisiana without its consent. I think there ought to be incorporated in the gentleman's remarks the term of the cession of Louisiana to us. Article 3 of the treaty says:

> The inhabitants of said Territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of the Constitution of the United States.

And then the first law that Congress passed in pursuance of that treaty which guaranteed their rights extended the Constitution of the United States over Louisiana.

> No law shall be valid that is inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Practically they were guaranteed what Cooley says was always considered a guaranty of territory that we took—to in due time be made into States. Do you intend that for the Filipinos?

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman from Ohio will be able to take care of himself. I will say, however, that because the Constitution has not been extended to the Philippines is because it would have been to their disadvantage to have done so. The duties which are collected in the islands and which now go to support their separate government would have been necessarily converted into the Treasury of the United States if they had been organized under the Constitution. This they themselves do not desire. All this the gentleman very well knows, because he was chairman of the committee when such laws were enacted.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. All I wanted to interrupt the gentleman for was because the gentleman from Ohio said that we had always governed people at one time or another without their consent, and I wished to distinguish between the Filipinos and the people of Louisiana.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask does the gentleman believe now that we should have extended the Constitution and laws of the United States to the Philippine Islands and made them an integral part of our Nation?

Mr. TOWNER. No; we could not do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the gentleman does not believe that.

Mr. TOWNER. There are many reasons why they can not be incorporated as a State into the Union. However, in the Jones bill, the substance of which I approve, we grant them practically every constitutional privilege that we ourselves enjoy. Neither the Philippines nor Porto Rico could maintain themselves if they were organized under the Constitution.

Mr. McKELLAR. The gentleman does not believe in extending the Constitution and laws to the Philippines, but does believe in ruling them indefinitely as colonies?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no; not as the gentleman implies. The word "colonies" in its significance to an American means subjection, and colonists in that view are subjects. That idea is of course obnoxious to us. But no Territory under the American flag is so governed. I am in favor, as I hope we all are, of giving the Filipinos the largest measure of self-government which they are capable of using. I would grant to the islands the same right of local self-government, the same guaranty of constitutional liberty that we have in this country, and that is what we have done so far as we can.

HAULING DOWN THE FLAG.

Gentlemen, in no mere desire to rid ourselves of a burden, and in no panic of fear should we haul down the American flag in the Philippines. I know there are some who are anxious to relieve the country of what they consider an unprofitable undertaking. There are some who believe that as a measure of preparedness we should draw in our territorial possessions. But to cast the islands away at this time would be like loosing a lamb among wolves. To do so would be an act of unspeakable cruelty and of unpardonable selfishness.

To release the islands for fear that we might not be able to defend them would be to abdicate our position as one of the great nations of the world. It would be a confession of weakness. It would be an abject surrender that would forfeit the respect of all mankind.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield? I know that he is making a good speech and is familiar with the subject. The gentleman thinks it would be a disgrace to haul down our flag in the Philippines. The gentleman does not think that we were disgraced in hauling down the flag in Cuba, does he?

Mr. TOWNER. We never hauled down the flag in Cuba. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FERRIS. We gave them their independence.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; and we promised to do that before we ever went into the war.

Mr. FERRIS. And we promised it in this instance also.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no; we never did. The gentleman can find no such promise anywhere. In the case of Cuba both Houses of Congress passed an act which the President signed which declared our purpose with regard to Cuba. But no such act, nor any other official act, can be found which promised or guaranteed independence to the Philippines at any time.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is making precisely the same technical subterfuge that his party made when they promised to revise the tariff and did not do so; and I think the gentleman's party will receive the same rebuke at the next election as it did at that time.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, I presume the gentleman would like to change the discussion of this question to a tariff discussion, and so would I, but duty compels me to stick to the question of Philippine independence at this time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

There has been much loose talk about promises of independence to the Filipinos. There could be no person or power authorized to so promise except Congress. That certainly must be clear. Even the Democratic Party in its platform declarations never declared for immediate independence. Nor did it ever fix a date. It declared our purpose should be to grant them independence when a stable government could be established, and left the determination of when that time had arrived to the American Congress. Even then independence was to be guaranteed by the United States.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Is not the gentleman by being in favor of the Jones bill as he was, and is, in favor of now making a promise to the Philippines of ultimate independence?

Mr. TOWNER. That was the declaration of the preamble, and not of the bill.

Mr. HARDY. But the gentleman now is in favor of the preamble?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I am not in favor of the preamble. I voted against it, and I do not think it wise at this time to make such a declaration. I will say this, however, as between the Jones preamble and the Clarke amendment I should certainly support the Jones preamble.

Mr. HARDY. The question I wish to ask is whether the gentleman is now of the opinion that we ought to make a promise to grant them at some time in the future their independence?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman frankly that I do not so believe.

Mr. HARDY. Then the gentleman is not in favor of ever granting them their independence?

Mr. TOWNER. I would not make any such statement as that. I do not know what the future may bring to us or to them. If when they are prepared for and capable of maintaining their independence it shall seem best to grant it, I would not for any selfish reason refuse it. I would not now or ever dim the luster of our splendid record of altruistic work in the islands by any ignoble or unjust act. Neither would I for any selfish reason desert them now when they need our help and protection more than ever before.

And that is what I mean by hauling down the flag. No party can be justified, in the opinion of the people of this country, in hauling down our flag except for grave, imperative, overwhelming reasons. An experiment of that kind was made once before which may be instructive to recall.

A revolution in the beautiful Hawaiian group of islands had succeeded in overthrowing an intolerable despotism and had established an independent republic. The republic desired to be annexed to the United States, and had sent a commission here to negotiate a treaty. Mr. Cleveland withdrew the treaty "for the purpose of reexamination," and sent a personal representative to Hawaii to investigate and report. President Dole, of the provisional government, in anticipation of what he hoped would follow, had hoisted the American flag over the government building at Honolulu, and the commander of the U. S. warship Boston had sent a detachment as a guard of honor. Cleveland's commissioner on the day after his arrival ordered the American flag lowered and directed the marines to return to their ship.

A flood of patriotic resentment swept over the country. Mr. Cleveland's effort to restore the Hawaiian monarchy had to be abandoned, and in a short time the administration was compelled to formally recognize the republic. Annexation followed, and now no President proposes to haul down the American flag in that splendid addition to American territory, in that matchless key to the control of the Pacific.

In the congressional and presidential campaigns that followed every Republican orator rang the changes on this unnecessary, unwise, and unpatriotic act. Our flag will never cease to float over the Hawaiian group, because it stands there, as it does everywhere, for justice and liberty and the welfare and happiness of the people. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is what it stands for to-day in the Philippines, and in the coming campaign, when gentlemen on the other side go out to defend the many indefensible acts of this administration, I suggest that they do not add to them this other utterly indefensible proposition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Insular Affairs, of which I am a member, in the last Congress considered and reported to the House a bill the purpose of which was to give to the people of the Philippine Islands more control over their own affairs than they now have, and by a preamble to that bill promised to withdraw the sovereignty of the United States over those islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government could be established therein. That bill passed the House, but failed in the Senate. The same bill as it passed the House in the last Congress, with some minor changes, was at this session introduced in the Senate and reintroduced in the House by the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. JONES, chairman of the Insular Affairs Committee. It was considered for days and weeks by the Senate, and after being amended in some important particulars was passed. Our committee has reported the bill as amended by the Senate to this House without amendment, and that bill is before you to-day.

The chief difference between the bill now under consideration and the bill passed by the House in the last Congress is this: The former bill promised that the United States would withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and recognize their independence as soon as a stable government could be established therein, which was indefinite as to time. The bill now before us, containing what is known as the Clarke amendment, is more definite as to the time fixed, and proposes to give to them their independence in not less than two nor more than four years after the passage and approval of this act, provided that the President for certain reasons may by proclamation extend the time to and including the day of final adjournment of the session of Congress which shall convene next after the date of the expiration of said period of four years. So that if this bill should pass and be approved at this session of Congress the last possible date to which independence under it could be delayed would be the 4th day of March, 1921.

So far as I am concerned, and speaking for myself alone, I am for the definite proposal of independence within a fixed and a reasonable time as provided in this bill, and I desire in the time at my command to give the reasons that have led me to the opinion I entertain.

This bill contains one provision not in the House or the Jones bill that I heartily indorse. It contains some others that as independent propositions I perhaps would not favor, but recognizing the fact well known to all experienced legislators that all important legislation is and must be the result of compromises, I am willing to yield to the legislative will of the Senate in matters that I consider of minor importance in order to secure if possible that which I consider vital and of more importance, namely, the early independence of the Philippine Islands. If this bill passes the House as it is, it will become a law, but if amended in any particular it may not, in my opinion it probably will not, become a law at this session of Congress.

We acquired these islands as the result of the War with Spain, a most unfortunate acquisition, and the misfortune will, in my opinion, continue and grow in magnitude and gravity as long as we continue to hold them. For about 17 years we have had possession of these islands, and during that time they have cost this Government many millions of dollars. The exact amount can not be determined. The late distinguished ex-Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, about 14 years ago declared that the expenses incident to the control of these islands had been $600,000,000, and as near as I can ascertain the cost since that time has been at least $50,000,000 per year, which would make a total of $1,300,000,000. I am sure that I am within safe limits when I state that the cost to this Government incident to the possession and control of these islands has been more than $1,000,000,000. This amount of money would have built good roads, costing $5,000 per mile, for 200,000 miles, equal to 50 gravel roads across this continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific, or an equal distance elsewhere in the United States as Congress might have determined, or it would have completed the improvements that are now urged for every navigable inland waterway of the United States and furnished adequate and complete protection to the entire country from the floods that have heretofore been so frequent and so destructive to life and property. That amount of money, if properly expended in any of the important lines of internal improvement, would have brought to the American people innumerable conveniences, comfort, and blessings.

But the enormous amount of money that our Government has expended while controlling these far-away islands is not the only sacrifice we have made. Hundreds of our American boys have lost their lives or their health while serving in that distant land. Some of them returned, but some did not. I personally knew a number of friends from my district who went to the Philippines young, strong, healthy, and perfect specimens of American manhood; I saw them when they returned, pale, emaciated, and in some cases physical and mental wrecks. After I came to Congress, now nearly 10 years ago, I was called upon by a lady constituent, Mrs. Ferguson, the mother of a boy who lost his life while in the service of his country in the Philippine Islands. She desired his remains brought back to her so that she might have the sad privilege of looking upon his face again. Through the courtesy of the authorities in the War Department his body was brought back, and he is now buried in the National Cemetery at Jefferson Barracks, in my home State. Another prominent citizen, who formerly resided in my district, Col. Newton Morrison, whose former home, however, is now in the district represented by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY], also lost his life in the Philippine Islands, now sleeps in the beautiful National Cemetery at Arlington Heights, in view of this Capitol. His heartbroken widow soon followed him to the grave, and we laid her to rest by his side. These are but two of many whose lives have been lost or whose health has been permanently wrecked in these far-away islands.

I believe that the control of these islands on the other side of the globe, a distance of 8,000 miles from our shores, is a menace to our peace, and will be as long as we exercise sovereignty over them.

Preparedness is the one question more discussed at this time than any other and largely increased appropriations are urged as necessary to properly prepare for national defense in case of possible invasion by a foreign foe. I am advised that some of the experts testified before the Naval Committee at the present session that a large percentage of the amount desired for the maintenance of the Navy is made necessary by reason of our possession of the Philippine Islands, and that if our control over them should cease the appropriation could be decreased many millions of dollars.

The Monroe doctrine in effect declares to all the world that no foreign hostile nation in the Eastern Hemisphere shall set foot upon the soil of the Western Hemisphere or lay the weight of their hands upon our people. So long as we maintain and uphold that doctrine consistency suggests that we should keep our hands off territory in the Eastern Hemisphere. If we continue to hold these islands I fear they will sooner or later involve us in disputes and war with some other nation. [Applause.]

I am for peace, with its comforts and blessings, rather than for war, with its privations and horrors. I sincerely hope and shall devoutly pray that war with any nation will never come to us; but if it should unfortunately come, may it be only when necessary to defend the honor of our country and its flag. I trust we will never be forced to fight to sustain our sovereignty over the people of the Philippine Islands while ruling over them without their consent and in violation of the basic principles upon which our own independence was won and established. [Applause.]

I am for independence for the Philippines because it is and has been advocated and promised by the great political party to which I belong. In four national platforms that party has promised independence to them as early as they are prepared for it, or as early as a stable government of their own can be established. I am in favor of making good this promise that we have for 16 years held out to them, and I feel that every Democrat in this House owes it to himself and to his party as well as to his country to vote for the passage of this bill.

I further favor the passage of this bill because I believe it is based upon the time-honored principles upon which our own Government was established and has stood for 140 years. The Revolutionary patriots who by the sacrifice of their lives and blood gave to us the independence that we to-day enjoy and that we intend to preserve and to hand down to those who shall come after us, denied the doctrine that England or any other country on earth had a right to rule over us without our consent. I am committed to the faith of our fathers, and glad that I am now in this, the House of Representatives of the American Congress, permitted to defend the principles for which they contended, fought, and died. We are ruling over the people of the Philippine Islands to-day without their consent, and while they are asking for independence, to deny their demands is to repudiate the justice and the right of the cause for which George Washington and his compatriots in arms fought and won in the Revolutionary War.

We were told by the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. TOWNER] that we must not haul down the American flag, and I agree that wherever our flag has been unfurled in any land it must not be hauled down by unfriendly hands; but whenever raised in any foreign land over a people held in subjection against their consent, if we can take it down and give to them the same independence and freedom we have claimed for ourselves, then, in my opinion, there would be more honor to us as a Nation in voluntarily taking it down than there would be to continue to have it float by force over the heads of an unwilling people, who are pleading for independence and liberty. [Applause.]

There are some of our citizens who, no doubt in perfectly good faith, say that they are opposed to this bill, because the inhabitants of the islands are not sufficiently prepared by education and training to govern themselves. The same apprehension, I understand, was expressed by the people of England of the American Colonies in 1776. I have never had the privilege of visiting the Philippine Islands and can not speak from personal contact with the people there, but I understand that a large percentage of the inhabitants are educated, intelligent, and self-reliant. I am advised that in 1886 more than 10 years before our occupation of the islands there were more than 21,000 public schools in the islands and a number of colleges and universities. Since that time the number of public schools and other institutions of learning have very greatly increased. There is one thing that I do know, that one of the Delegates from the Philippine Islands, Mr. QUEZON, has one of the brightest minds of any Representative who occupies a seat in this Chamber, and I think it is reasonable to assume that the people whom he represents and who send him here are not without intelligence and appreciation of their public duties as citizens. This able Representative believes that his constituents are qualified for self-government and favors the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

Ex-President Taft is, in my opinion, one of the most competent witnesses upon the question of the competency of the Filipinos for self-government, as he was Governor General in the islands for several years. He is universally respected by the American people, and his opinion upon that question should have great weight. When before the committee in its hearings upon this subject in 1914, he was asked by the chairman of the committee this question:

The CHAIRMAN. Could you not go further, Mr. Taft, and say that they are better equipped for self-government than the Cubans?
Mr. TAFT. Yes.

He then gave a long explanation of his reasons for so believing.

By general consent, and I think with practically the universal approval of the American people, we gave independence to the Cubans, and if true, as stated by ex-President Taft, as I have no doubt it is, that the Filipinos are better qualified for independence, I can see no good reason or just cause for withholding independence from them, and, in my opinion, no good reason has been or can be given by any Representative upon this floor.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. For only a short question. My time is limited.

Mr. MEEKER. Did the ex-President in the same hearing advise letting them go in two years?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Ex-President Taft was not at that time in favor of giving them independence, but he said they were better qualified for it than the Cubans, and we had already given them their independence. But the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] says to us to-day that we promised it to the Cubans. Yes, we did; and we did it because it was right, and if right to give freedom to the Cubans so is it right to give freedom to the Filipinos. Another thing, when war was declared against Spain we announced it was not for the purpose of acquisition of territory or self-aggrandizement. This generous spirit of the American people was applauded the world over, and we ought to stand by the promises made at that time.

Some say that the islands still have some uncivilized tribes that are not fit to take part in the control of a government of their own, but that argument could have been urged against this country as well when we were given our independence, as this country was at that time inhabited by many thousands of uncivilized Indian tribes. Less than 10 per cent of the 8,000,000 inhabitants of the islands are classed as uncivilized, and time will, no doubt, correct this unfortunate condition under their own government as well as if continued to be controlled by the United States.

Some say that polygamy still exists there, and for that reason they should not be given independence, but only a few years ago the same could have been truthfully said of the United States. That evil has been corrected in our country, and in due time will, no doubt, be corrected in the Philippine Islands.

Some say that slavery still exists in the islands, and I understand does still prevail to some small extent, but only a few years ago it prevailed in our own highly civilized country. I am not very old and have not lived very long, but I have lived long enough to remember seeing a negro man placed upon an old-fashioned log stile block and sold to the highest bidder, bringing $900 in gold. This was a crime against humanity and a stain upon our civilization, but, thank God, it has been corrected by our own people and slavery in the United States has been blotted out forever.

There are some who contend that the Filipinos themselves, or majority of them, do not desire the passage of this bill, but would prefer to be permanently under the American flag and controlled by the United States. The Philippine Legislature recently, by unanimous vote, passed a resolution favoring the passage of this bill as it passed the Senate, containing the so-called Clarke amendment. This resolution, unanimously passed by that body, is by me, and ought to be by everyone, accepted as conclusive of their wishes. I also understand from the Delegates representing the Philippine Islands in this House, while admitting that some provisions of this bill do not meet with their approval, still they strongly favor the bill as a whole and are anxious to have it passed by this House.

There are some who insist that the passage of this bill giving independence to the people of the islands will be detrimental to the interests of Americans who have made investments there and for that reason are opposed to it. I do not want to lay violent hands upon the property rights of any man, and especially our American investors. Capital in all legitimate lines is entitled to its proper protection, but every American citizen who invested in the Archipelago did so knowing full well that the Democratic Party for the past 16 years has been promising independence, and they should have given that party credit for being honest in their declared purposes. I do not concede that independence will jeopardize the interests of American investors in the islands, but even if it should our people who have gone there to make investments have done so with their eyes open, and were fully advised as to the position of the Democratic Party upon that question and assumed their own risk. In passing upon this question I am not disposed to draw fine distinctions between the rights of money and the rights of men, as they are not of equal importance. I am opposed to the idea of weighing in the balance the question of commercial profits against the rights of citizens, or of fostering human greed at the expense of human liberty.

In conclusion I will summarize in these words: To continue to govern the Filipinos against their consent will continue to add to the burdens of the American people millions of dollars in costs annually and the sacrifice of many lives of our American boys. So far as I am concerned, I would not give the life of one American boy for the privilege of controlling for all time to come all the islands in Asiatic waters. To continue to control these islands will, in my opinion, be a continuing menace to the peace of our country that is so generally desired by our people. It will be a repudiation of our declared purposes when war was declared against Spain, and when we purchased the islands. It will be a positive violation of four national platforms of the Democratic Party, and it will be a grievous departure from the teachings of Jefferson and the fundamental doctrine of our countrymen as written in the Declaration of Independence. We then announced to the world the doctrine that "all men are created equal."

Upon the other hand, the passage of this bill will carry with it the announcement to all the world that this Government, true to its traditions and history, does not stand for an imperialistic colonial policy in violation of the principles upon which it was founded, and it will carry to the hearts and minds of the Filipino people the conviction that we, the people of this Republic, are true to the faith of our fathers, and still believe that liberty is the natural God-given right of man, and that all Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I suggest that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is not present just now, and that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] have one more speech?

Mr. JONES. We have used more time than you have on that side, and I think the gentlemen ought to use some time now.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] for 30 minutes. Before I speak, I would like to get it clear on the record whether I exempted myself from the rule of the caucus. I sent Judge SAUNDERS a telegram which said I had made declarations that would exempt me from the rule of the caucus.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want 30 minutes, and the chances are that I will yield back considerable of it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY].

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I disagree with my party upon the stand it is taking to-day relative to the Philippine question. If I were to characterize the bill as it stands to-day, I would say that it was a sample of crossroads legislation. It looks to me as if it were a bullheaded attempt to bring about peace and comfort, not to the Philippine Islands, but to bring peace and comfort to the minds of some men who are disturbed by the Philippine question and want to rid themselves of an obligation.

I do not believe that I can open my remarks with better emphasis than to quote President McKinley as to what should be done with the Philippine Islands. He said:

It is imperative upon us that as victors we should be governed only by motives which will exalt our Nation. Territorial expansion should be our least concern; that we shall not shirk the moral obligations of our victory is the greatest.

I have a sympathy with those who oppose colonialism. I do not believe that it was ever intended by those who gave us this Republic that we should colonize. But here is a proposition that comes to us as an incident of war. They did not invite us; we went in there; and it looks to me as if, in passing legislation of this kind, we brand ourselves as cowards in running away from a plain, imperative obligation. [Applause.]

I looked in vain for the compelling reason for the Clarke amendment until I got hold of one of the reports. I was trying to figure out what was the great reason for rushing the Philippines into independence, and in studying the progress of the legislation I find that in the Senate, where the matter was amply considered in committee, the bill as reported agreed with the Jones bill that was passed by the House at the last session. But in some way, after it had been approved by the committee of the Senate, after they had said that a greater measure of self-government should be given to the Filipinos, there was catapulted into the bill from the Senate floor the much-talked-of Clarke amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think this is something every man in this House should consider seriously. The vote was 41 to 41, and the tie was broken by the vote of Vice President Marshall.

But in trying to find out the reasons that actuated the Senate and the compelling motive of the statesman from Arkansas—and I must accept that as an underlying reason for this sudden desire to free the Filipinos—I get this from the gentleman from Arkansas. In explaining his act he said—and I want every man here to dwell upon the reasons underlying this bill—

I had no particular reason in introducing this amendment except that no one else would do it. * * * Either I or some one else had to do it. I am getting as much salary as anybody else, and doing about as little, and I did not know but that I had better get busy right along that line.

And that is the statesman-like reason underlying the Clarke amendment, submitted to you for your earnest consideration. [Laughter.]

I believe there is no better way for the House of Representatives to advertise itself as listening to shallow reasoning than to base their action upon those few lines in the minority report as outlining the reasons given by the Senator from Arkansas. I had a great deal of respect, and have to-day a great deal of respect, for Lindley M. Garrison, who until lately was Secretary of War. I consider it a privilege to embody in my remarks the reason assigned by him as to why he did not approve the Clarke amendment. He says:

I consider the principle embodied in the Clarke amendment an abandonment of the duty of this Nation and a breach of trust toward the Filipinos. So believing, I can not accept it or acquiesce in its acceptance.

This may be the easiest way for the United States to rid itself of an obligation. This may be the easiest way out of what is considered to be a difficulty. This may be the easiest way for ridding ourselves of the bogey of the East. But I wish to ask you what would you think of a man who had grown tired of supporting his wife and said, "I want to be through with you forever; you are too expensive for me"? What would you think of a parent who frowned upon a child and said, "I do not want to have anything more to do with you; your expenses are eating up my income"? What would you think of the guardian who ruthlessly throws his ward aside? There is not any question in the world but that that is the easiest way to get rid of a burden. But, my friends—and I say it with all reservation and in all seriousness—it is not the most honorable way to get rid of an obligation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I can not understand the sudden transition which characterized the gentleman from Virginia, the author of the Jones bill. A little while ago he had a vision of Filipino independence in 1921. Then, listening to the objections raised by some men in his own party, he framed a bill declaratory of the purpose of the United States Government to recognize the right of these people to govern themselves without putting any arbitrary date or limit upon the time. Now he gleefully accepts this Clarke amendment.

I feel that I am strictly in accord with Democratic promise and that I am living up to everything enunciated in the Democratic platform when I cast my vote against the Clarke amendment. The Democratic platform declared that we would be for the independence of the islands when the islands would have a stable government.

Now, the question is, Have they got a stable government there to-day? And we here, acting as representatives of the American people, acting as guardians of those Filipinos, must of necessity turn to men better qualified from their experience in telling us whether or not these people are ready for independence and self-government. I know of no man better qualified to speak upon that subject than a man who has grown in national importance vastly since leaving the position of Chief Executive of this Nation. I refer to the honored citizen of this Republic, William Howard Taft. [Applause on the Republican side.] He has given it as his opinion that it will be two generations before a controlling proportion of the population of the Philippine Islands will be prepared to decide for themselves what their political status shall be. As he well says:

Preparation does not mean the organization of a Philippine oligarchy or aristocracy competent to administer government and then turn the government over to it. The capacity of the great body of the people must be considered if we expect to establish a government of the people.

What truer words were ever said about government and the right of a people to self-government than those wise words from a wise statesman? Gather, if you please, a handful of men, perhaps self-seeking, not unconscious of the opportunities it brings to their personal doors; educated, if you will; versed in government, if you will; but the great majority of people that they are to govern, uneducated and unfit for government; and I presume that nobody will challenge the statement that when we went in their 18 years ago 80 per cent of the natives were illiterate. And to-day, by the way, is the eighteenth anniversary of the day that Admiral George Dewey sailed into Manila Harbor and brought a thrill of joy to the American people, not because he was conquering some foreign territory, but because he was proving the prowess of the American Navy and showing the world that we were capable and fit to fight. [Applause.]

Now we have the redoubtable Roosevelt, of whom we read in the public prints once in awhile. [Laughter] A few years ago this virile American—and nobody challenges or questions his Americanism, although some of us believe that he is not averse to a little of the limelight and some of the things that go with it—a few years ago ex-President Roosevelt said:

I trust that within a generation the time will arrive when the Filipinos can decide for themselves whether it is well for them to become independent or to continue under the protection of a strong and disinterested power, able to guarantee to the islands order at home and protection from foreign invasion; but no one can prophecy the exact date when it will be wise to consider independence as a fixed and definite policy.

Now, against the opinion and the expressed judgment of ex-President Taft—and no one will challenge the statement that he is a man of varied experience, knowing a great deal about the government of the Philippine Islands—and against the judgment of Theodore Roosevelt, who has had some experience—all that and more is to be cast into the discard in favor of the unsupported opinion practically of the gentleman from Arkansas, Senator CLARKE, who says he wants to do something to earn his salary; and that is the reason for the Clarke amendment, and for our being here to-day to consider it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I have not the time.

Mr. AUSTIN. We will give the gentleman the time.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to state to the gentleman that Gen. Luke Wright, who lives in the city represented by our beloved colleague Mr. KELLAR, was the Governor General of the Philippine Islands. He is a Democrat and an ex-Confederate soldier. His views coincide with those of ex-President Taft on this subject.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I do not think it will be hard to gather a great many splendid testimonials to the wisdom of ex-Presidents Taft and Roosevelt in their judgment as to what should be done with the Philippine Islands. It is an easy thing to go out on the stump and say, "I voted to make the Filipinos free; I voted to make them an independent nation." That is the easiest thing in the world, and I suppose a thing that would get the readiest plaudits; but there is something beyond the plaudits that greet the stump orator. There is something more than giving honeyed phrases to the crowd. There is a duty imposed upon the people here, and I believe that the real, true friends of the Filipinos are not the people who will throw them into the maelstrom of the world's politics in a phrase saying, "In not less than two or more than four years you shall be free and independent"; but I take it that the real friends of the Filipinos are those who would continue the liberalizing policy of the American Government and the spirit of education in those islands. [Applause.] We have every reason to be proud of our record there. Education has gone on in wonderful strides. They are learning the art of self-government. They are proud of their connection with us, and I fully and honestly believe that there is no man in the American Congress who feels that he wants to lay a restraining hand upon the Filipinos for all time. It is only a question as to what is best to do for the Filipinos. They are progressive, they are making wonderful strides, a people who were under Spanish domination for hundreds of years, and we go in saying, "We are going to save you and make a great people of you." And lo and behold! we say that by the alchemy of 18 years' domination we are going to take this composite people of eight or nine million, speaking varied languages, many dialects, and embracing all stages of advancement, from the savage to the most highly cultivated, intellectual, and intelligent citizens, and by the alchemy of a few lines written by the gentleman from Arkansas, Senator CLARKE, we will make them a free and independent nation worthy of the respect of the world. It is fallacy. It is more than fallacy. It is humbug. [Applause.]

I agree with this minority report. Great progress, unparalleled progress, has been made. Of that both Americans and Filipinos have a right to be proud. It is a reason why we should now grant a larger measure of self-government to the Filipinos and why we should continue such grant until absolute self-government is secured. What is the underlying reason beside this peculiar wording of the gentleman from Arkansas, Senator CLARKE? I will tell you what it is. It is an un-American policy. It is an un-American thing lying at the bottom of this majority report, written in letters so large I feel ashamed to say it. It is fear on the part of the American Nation. [Applause on the Republican side.] They say, "We fear to further guard and protect you. We fear further to educate you. We fear further to conduct you along the path of progress and civilization to the day when you shall be fit for government, because we are afraid that if we keep you we will get into trouble ourselves." I, for one, do wish to say emphatically here to-day that I have no sympathy with that reason. I am willing that this great country of ours should shoulder the responsibility and maintain it; that it should keep on as it has, in spite of any power in the world. Let us say: "These are our wards. We are ready to protect them. We are ready to guard them. We are ready to lead them along the pathway of civilization and progress. Lay a hand on them, if you dare!" [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. On behalf of the chairman of the committee, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, during my entire service in Congress I have been a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives. I hope the time has now arrived when the work that has been so consistently and persistently engaged in by that committee will reach its full culmination. In the world-wide tragedy that is now being enacted I think I learn a lesson. I see in Europe the great British Government drawing support and aid from its colonies like Canada and Australia; all people of kindred races and tongues. They are a distinctive asset to the British Government to-day. In fact, judging from reports, they are doing about all of the British fighting. On the other hand, the weak spots, the danger zone to Great Britain to-day are her colonies of India and Arabia and Egypt, because they are wholly unlike her either in race, customs, manners, or religion, as well as climatic conditions.

It is a reasonable conclusion that the great bulk of British soldiers are required to hold India, Arabia, Egypt, and her possessions in that quarter of the globe in subjection. Large numbers of her soldiery are necessary to safeguard the Suez Canal. Her soldiers are in Persia and in Turkey. What is the argument? We are forcing a government on an unwilling people—the Filipinos. They are not bone of our bone or flesh of our flesh, they do not fraternize with us, they have nothing in common with the English-speaking people, due largely to climatic conditions. The government we are forcing upon them is obnoxious, odious, and objectionable to them.

Now, what is my argument? You can not mix oil and water. The people of the United States are as distinct and separate in race, in manner, in customs, in religion from the Philippine Islands as are the people of India, Persia, Arabia, and Egypt from that of Great Britain. If the day should ever come when trouble arises, I entertain the most serious doubts whether we would find the Filipino an ally ready to aid, help, and assist us, or whether we would discover them to be a distinct liability.

Now, I believe that the feeling to-day, encouraged by the prospect of independence in the near future, creates in the hearts of the Filipinos a decidedly friendly disposition toward our Government. But let it be once distinctly understood, as some of you Members state, and as the Republican Party advocates, never to give them their independence, I doubt whether that cordial, fraternal feeling that exists there now will continue to exist.

I learned a further lesson from the Spanish-American War. It was absolutely impossible for Spain to defend Cuba, just off our coast, against the United States, as it will be for the United States to defend the Philippine Islands from any country in the world, any world-power country that is close to the Philippine Islands as Cuba is to the United States. We could not send an Army to defend the Philippine Islands—in the first place we have not it, and in the second place you have not a sufficient or adequate Navy for that purpose. In God's name, if we have not the instruments and means of defending our continent, what have we to send 7,000 miles across the ocean to defend the Philippine Islands?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The military experts say that Alaska would be infinitely harder to defend than the Philippine Islands. Would the gentleman suggest a withdrawal from Alaska? They also say that Hawaii is harder to defend than either Alaska or the Philippines. Would the gentleman withdraw from all three?

Mr. HELM. No; because I do not believe, in the first place, that Alaska or Hawaii are harder to defend than the Philippines; and, second, the possession of the latter does not strengthen but weakens our defense of both Alaska and Hawaii.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then, where does cowardice cease and bravery begin?

Mr. HELM. When you talk about cowardice and bravery, when you pat yourselves on the back and poke out your chest and talk about how game you are, how brave you are, how capable you are, the best thing is to have ample means of defense and protection when it comes to a showdown—what can we do to defend these islands, and what have we to do it with? [Laughter.] It is all right to brag, boast, and strut around until somebody calls your hand. We Americans are a mighty chesty Nation of people. We take a great deal of stock in ourselves, and I am glad of it. We are good on claiming, but I doubt whether we are very long on performance.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman enumerate the times when the Americans failed to perform on a showdown with any nation until now? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HELM. We never want that time to come, and that is one reason why I think that this is the opportunity to prove our good common sense and not lay ourselves wide open so that the time may never come when we can not perform successfully when we have to perform. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am far from being a disciple of that man who once made Republican history and is still molding the policies of that party, Ex-President Roosevelt, but for the benefit and edification of those who are his disciples I submit an extract from a chapter in his recent autobiography on this, the question of Philippine independence, which is as follows:

> I do not believe that America has any special beneficial interest in retaining the Philippines. Our work there has benefited us only as an efficiently done work performed for the benefit of others does incidentally help the character of those who do it. The people of the Islands have never developed so rapidly from every standpoint as during the years of American occupation. The time will come when it will be wise to take their own judgment as to whether they wish to continue their association with America or not. There is, however, one consideration upon which we should insist: Either we should retain complete control of the islands or absolve ourselves from all responsibility for them. Any half-and-half course will be both foolish and disastrous. We are now governing and have been governing the islands in the interest of the Filipinos themselves. If, after due time, the Filipinos themselves decide that they do not wish to be thus governed, then I trust that we will leave; and when we do leave it must be distinctly understood that we retain no protectorate—and, above all, that we take part in no joint protectorate—over the islands, and give them no guaranty of neutrality or otherwise; that, in short, we are absolutely quit of responsibility for them of every kind and description.

If it should result that he is to be the Republican nominee for President, it would be fit and proper for the Republican convention, to be held at Chicago, to place a plank in its platform indorsing the bill now under consideration, and it will be amusing to see those who are now violently assailing this bill advocating it on the stump as one of the reasons why the Republican Party should be restored to power.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. TOWNER, I yield 30 minutes to Mr. MILLER from Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, adequately to debate so tremendously an important subject as Philippine independence within the limits of a single session is, of course, impossible, as such limited time is wholly inadequate for so great a purpose. Nevertheless, as it seems to be the purpose of gentlemen on both sides of the aisle to vote to-day, we are confined to the limits of a few hours, and in them but a few phases of the question can be discussed.

Mr. Chairman, I am not afraid to meet the vote in a moment, in a week, or a year's time. The question of Philippine independence is one that affects vitally 8,000,000 of people of those islands, but in no less a degree it affects the honor, the glory, and the national aspirations of the hundred millions of American citizens on this continent. [Applause.]

I listened to-day for the first time, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, for the last time, to the Members of this House asking that we go back upon history, that we turn our backs upon civilization, upon our plain duty once magnificently assumed, that we throw away the glory Dewey won with his guns at Manila Bay 18 years ago because we, as Americans, are too cowardly to assume and discharge our national duty. If, Mr. Chairman, there is anything concerning the American people that should receive our undivided support, it is that Americanism and nationality are the watchwords of the hour. Our national passion is at high heat, and our people will to be just, honorable, and great as they will our Nation to be strong. But Americanism and nationality are the same yesterday and to-day. The duty assumed at Manila Bay is still America's duty; the American opportunity that opened up with Dewey's victory is still before us. The movement to greatness and to glorious achievement is real and living to-day, and we of to-day should give it our full measure of undying devotion. If we are Americans, robust and strong, confident of a great mission before our people, we should triumphantly bear our national responsibilities, and especially when they lead directly to our own strength and greatness. Cowards do not deserve to grow, and grow they do not; nor do they perform their allotted share of civilization duty.

While, indeed, perhaps it would be more congenial to me were I to discuss this subject entirely from the standpoint of American interests, yet I now feel that I should direct the attention of the Members of the House to the thoughts and the feelings and the ideas of the Filipino people themselves. Oh, I know it was said by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES]—and he rolled the words over and over with an unction that made me think they were sweet morsels to his tongue—that the Filipino people to-day ask that this Clarke amendment and this bill be passed. I want his attention when I say that they ask no such thing. It is true that by lip service some individuals in the Philippine Islands in political power have sent to him word that they want this bill passed. Whether that lip service speaks the conviction of their hearts I know not, but I do know that the heart throbs of the people of the islands to-day beg that you vote against the Clarke amendment and the bill. [Applause on the Republican side.] It may be you think I am not fortified in what I say. Let me direct your attention as serious-minded men who really want to do the right thing, men who have sworn to let their conscience and their judgment and the interest of their Nation guide their vote—let me direct your attention for a moment to what has been said lately by some of the Filipino people. There is in the islands a paper which is the official organ of one of the leading parties there, La Democracia. It is not the organ of the party represented by the gentleman from the Islands [Mr. QUEZON]. He represents the Nationalistic Party. La Democracia represents the Progresisto Party, which, with his party, has taken a position on the question of independence. In an editorial appearing in that paper just after the Clarke amendment passed the Senate I find the following:

> The present epoch in the history of the islands is the most critical in all their history. It can not be overlooked that, left to their own efforts, the Filipinos are unable to repel foreign aggression of powerful people like Japan, nor would they be able to withstand the peaceful aggression of immigration that even China with all her power, was unable to resist.

That is but a beginning, and that is but a start in the expression of the people of the islands. There is a gentleman in the islands named Vicente Soto, who has had a notable career. It is sufficient to say that he has recently been permitted to return to the islands. My friend Mr. QUEZON will bear me out when I say that of all the Filipinos who have ever lived he is probably the most anti-American of them all, also one of the most steadfast champions of Philippine independence from the early days of Aguinaldo until now. He came back to Manila and is now publishing a newspaper. In that paper recently appeared this article:

> In our patriotic zeal we must not forget that Japan is our neighbor. We must not trust in the delusive hope of diplomacy. Our security in the future lies in our strength. Our prayer to keep out foreign invasion will not avail.

To-day, looking far to the east in early morn the Filipino beholds the rising sun, and against it the American Statue of Liberty, in uplifted hand the beacon light of liberty, an emblem of eternal hope and benediction. Remove this sovereignty and in the place of that view the Filipino will behold another sunburst, emblazoned across it in letters of blood, "Banzai."

And listen to these words, freighted and charged with potential meaning:

> If it is the intention of the people of the United States to give us complete independence within four years, could we protect ourselves from foreign invasion and have the respect of the rest of the world? With our present economic situation it would require a return a thousand times greater than our present revenue in order for the Government to organize within the short space of four years a force of sufficient strength to preserve and maintain our national integrity and honor.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. For a brief question.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I think I shall vote the way the gentleman does upon this bill, but does he advance as an argument that they should not have their independence the fact that they could not repel a foreign invasion?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not place it alone upon that ground. I am simply giving the position of the Filipino as he manifests an opinion to-day toward the Clarke amendment. It would require a commercial prosperity and an economic advancement a thousand times greater than that which they themselves say they possess in order to carry out and maintain this fatuous independence it is proposed to give. That leads us naturally to inquire what is their present economic condition? We might indulge ad libitum here in discussion pro and con as to the intellectual attainments of the Filipino. Let us just forget that subject for a moment. Let us address ourselves to a practical question upon which there can be no difference of opinion. There is a system in the islands enabling us to determine exactly who is doing the business in the archipelago. It is required that every man transacting business, wholesale or retail, shall secure a certificate and pay a tax upon his business. This gives us reliable and complete statistics. Those statistics show that 95 per cent of all of the business done in the islands is performed by foreigners. Ninety-five per cent of the business in the islands is in the hands of foreigners. There are in the islands about 40,000 Chinese, and there are about 8,000,000 inhabitants altogether, but these 40,000 Chinese to-day are paying 72 per cent of all of the taxes in the islands. Forty thousand aliens pay 72 per cent and 7,960,000 pay about 28 per cent of all of the taxes.

Of the 7,960,000, by far the greater part of the taxes is paid by the European and American foreigners. Thus we see that the Filipino as yet does little of his own business and pays only a small fraction of the taxes necessary to run his government. The Filipinos must yet develop an industrial and merchant class throughout the islands. There is invested in the islands to-day $300,000,000 of Spanish capital. Pause for a moment to reflect upon our duty toward that capital. In the treaty that we made at the conclusion of the war with Spain we guaranteed two things. We guaranteed, first, to protect religion in the islands. We guaranteed that there should be freedom of religious worship in the islands as we have decreed it here within the United States. We pledged our sacred word to the people of Spain that we would maintain absolute freedom of religion for all the people there, especially the Spanish people. Should we haul down the flag now and relinquish our sovereignty, who for a moment dare stand up and say that there will be freedom of religious worship in all the islands? Here is an obligation we can not throw if we are to retain a decent respect from the Christian nations of the world. We guaranteed something more practical, too. We guaranteed to the subjects of Spain that there should be given protection to their property. We have no right to complain of the assertion that treaties are but "scraps of paper" unless we live up to our own treaty obligations. [Applause on the Republican side.] If we pass this bill as it stands we repudiate as solemn an obligation and treaty as was ever assumed by any nation since the stars first began to shine. No one can pretend that conditions throughout the islands are now such that if we withdraw life and property will be protected and absolute freedom of religion shall exist.

We should not lose sight of the fact that the Filipinos are the only Christians among all the hundreds of millions in the Orient. Surrounded, as they are, by more than half the human race, all pagans, our duty as a strong, protecting Christian Nation becomes clear.

Let me digress, Mr. Chairman, long enough to observe that idle words we sometimes hear, to the effect that the Filipinos are aliens and can have nothing in common with us. This is wide of the mark. The 6,000,000 Christian Filipinos have had 300 years of Christian influences at work upon them. All their civilization Spain gave to them; therefore it is European, not oriental. No greater affront to these sensitive people could be given than to suggest that they are like the Japanese race, and we may as well let the Japs have them. Filipino history still tells of martyred missionaries who went from the Filipinos to Japan and were put to death with fierce cruelty. The Filipinos are not Japs. The two peoples are aliens in race, religion, and civilization.

There are $300,000,000 of Spanish capital invested in the islands. Should we withdraw our sovereignty under the conditions now existing, betray the confidence Spain reposed in us when we entered into the treaty with her, who can say what awful responsibilities will come thick upon us in the years to come? Nations can not break their plighted word with impunity even in these days of the world's woe. We made this straight contract with Spain to protect Spanish capital, and stand by it we must. Not only that, but our own citizens have now invested American money in the islands to the extent of $125,000,000. Unless our Government protects this investment, it is unworthy the name of a Nation and not fit to be called great.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If I can conclude the main course of my remarks in time, I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. GARRETT. I would like to interrogate the gentleman upon that particular point.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not know what actuates or could actuate the thought of any man who looks upon his fellow citizen with disfavor because he has gone beneath the American flag, under American sovereignty, and invested capital for the welfare not only of himself but also of the people among whom he has invested the money. So if we are going to refuse our protection to American property under the American flag, let us renounce our nationality and surrender for all time all claims to a sovereign State.

My good friends, I do not believe the American people ever indorsed or ever will indorse the statement that has been made that American business men who have gone into Mexico should be left to their own peril. I am one of those who believes that wherever, legitimately and according to the laws of the country, American capital goes and finds investment it should be protected to the last flutter of our flag. [Applause.]

How much greater our duty to give adequate protection to this capital that has been invested under our flag in the Philippine Islands! Do not for a moment let yourself be beguiled into thinking that this capital has not been welcomed by the Filipinos. It has. They are sitting up nights now praying for more capital to come in. They realize their economic dependence. They are asking that money come from the United States to relieve their necessities and help them develop their industries and their country. Let us answer that call by giving full and complete protection to American capital that already is invested there; otherwise that capital and all the foreign capital will struggle to get out, precipitating a condition in the islands I shudder to contemplate. And let us give heed to their call when they say that they know they are not in a position to handle independence at the present time. There is not only American capital and Spanish, but about $60,000,000 of English capital, $15,000,000 of German capital, $15,000,000 of Swiss capital, and $5,000,000 of French capital invested there. Practically all the business of the islands is supported at this hour by foreign capital. We believe capital will demand protection. If not received by the United States, under which it shall be beneficent, it will be received under some foreign flag that will know not the rights of man. [Applause.]

I am not limited to newspaper comment as expressing the hope and the wishes of the people. Shortly after the passage of the Clarke amendment in the Senate I received a cablegram signed by an ex-member of the Philippine Assembly, Señor Ramon Lopez, in which he said that the farmers of the Philippine Islands, more particularly in the great islands of Negros and Panay, begged that Congress not enact the Clarke amendment into law. I replied that I wanted petitions to that effect, signed by the most substantial and capable men that could be found. About two weeks ago I received the first petition. I am going to read it to you. I will have to read the translation, because the original is in Spanish. This translation was made by the Bureau of Insular Affairs. It reads, and I ask you to listen:

We, the undersigned residents and property holders of the islands of Panay and Negros, P. I., and all Filipino citizens, respectfully state that it is our opinion that the passage of the Jones bill in the form that it was passed by the Senate of the United States would be fatal to social progress, to the development of the commerce, industry, and agriculture, and to the political well-being of all the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands;

Therefore we earnestly beg the Congress and the United States Government and its citizens that they suspend all action on the Jones bill, and that the question of the political independence of the Philippine Islands be definitely suspended for a period of 20 years, and that when this period arrives that no action as to the independence of the Philippine Islands be taken without the vote of the Filipino people.

Iloilo, Province of Iloilo, P. I., this day, the 1st of March, of the year 1916 A. D.

Will you listen to these earnest people, words coming from men who are not engaged in the political exploitation of their islands, asking you to protect their homes, their property, their civil and political rights, and their very islands from an unconscionable, from a contemptible, from a humiliating withdrawal of sovereignty and stable government and the abandonment of our duties once heroically assumed.

My good friends, it seems to me that the voice of the Filipino people should be heard. This petition is signed by 92 men. They have been checked over by those who are best acquainted with the islands. I am informed that they represent the farming industry in value exceeding $20,000,000; that they are the most substantial men of the entire central group of islands. It is certain these signers are men each representing a big sentiment in his own locality. This one petition is overwhelming in what it represents and in the request it makes. But I was informed when this came that other petitions would follow.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, another came this very morning, and still another, making three in all, and altogether representing the farmers of the islands. These petitions are to the same effect, but in a little different language. One is signed by 125 men, the other by 95, who, I am informed, represent the best in thought, and best in business, and best in earnestness, and best in all that goes to make up the life of the Filipino people.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Certainly, for a question.

Mr. KEATING. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think that Lord North, in 1776, might have secured a similar petition signed by substantial property owners in the American Colonies protesting against the Declaration of Independence?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not know, and I do not care anything about what Lord North might have done. I know that this is a voluntary petition, and sent without political glare, to represent the sentiment of the Filipino people. Maybe the gentleman will close his ears and shut his eyes to it, because he does not want its truth to sink into his soul; but I believe a majority of the men in this House will have a nobler conception of their duty here to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I can not yield further.

We all have in mind the words of the great Secretary of War, who resigned a few weeks ago, a Democrat of Democrats, and who resigned because he would not be a party to such an iniquitous measure as it was proposed to pass. He said this:

I consider the principle embodied in the Clarke amendment an abandonment of the duty of this Nation and a breach of trust toward the Filipinos. So believing, I can not accept it or acquiesce in its acceptance.

There is a Democratic gentleman whom I know very well, with whom I have talked many times relative to things concerning the Philippine Islands, but with whom I have found but little opportunity to agree. I find, however, that he and I are agreed to-day. He is the arch apostle of Democracy relative to all things Philippine. He it was who became the first great champion of Democratic principles for the islands, and has continued such down to this hour. He went over as a soldier from the State of Georgia. He bears a distinguished name. He remained there to serve as a judge. He has now resided in this country for some years, devoting himself largely to the study of Philippine questions. I refer to Judge Blount, the author of The American Occupation of the Philippines, and this is his position:

I am wholly unable to understand the intellectual processes of an honest and patriotic American who will vote on foreign or quasi-foreign affairs for party reasons. We are all in the same boat, all Americans, and, to use a familiar colloquialism, it is like rocking the boat. If I were in the House now, I would vote with my party on domestic affairs, such as the tariff, the currency, and so forth, with all the fidelity of a Tammany sachem; but on a question that concerned the national honor of my country, like this Clarke amendment with the neutralization cut out, I would feel ashamed to vote any way but against it, because, as Senator STONE said, the whole world would look upon throwing the Philippines overboard in any such way with amazement, and we would fall under the just condemnation of mankind.

So far as I have been able to determine—and I have endeavored with the utmost industry to ascertain the facts—there is not a single Democrat charged with the administration of Philippine affairs, directly concerned with them or conversant with the present conditions in the Philippine Islands, who favors the passage of the Clarke amendment. It is repugnant, in my judgment, to the opinions of any man, regardless of politics, who views with concern his Nation's honor.

Mr. Chairman, we might spend hours in discussing what it means to the Philippine people should we at this hour withdraw our sovereignty. To the great mass of the people that flag flying there has meant the same that it has meant to the boys of America. It has meant opportunity to them all. I was informed a few weeks ago that an Army officer living in the Philippines was asked by one of the servants of his house this question: "Sir, I am told the United States is going to give independence to the Philippines and that the Americans are going to leave." He said, "That is what I hear from America." The young man departed. In an hour's time this officer had occasion to go into another part of the house, and there he found five, all of his Filipino servants, together in tears, and he asked them why. The reply was, "The Americans are going to leave us in the hands of the politicos, and we, the poor people, know what that means."

That has been duplicated, according to my information, time out of mind in the Philippine Islands during the past two months. When I say that the people of the islands ask that this bill be defeated in its present form, I know I am expressing their heart convictions. I know the distinguished and lovable gentleman, my friend, Señor QUEZON, in a few moments will tell you about his party, the Nacionalistas, and their party propaganda, and the Progresistas and their party program and the Partido Tercera and their party program—I know he will say these things, because he ought to say them. But while he speaks for the political parties of the islands, I speak for the Filipino people, and I know what they want.

Should it be desired to inquire what may be the attitude of the non-Christian peoples, permit me in a word to tell you that they are to the last soul, 1,200,000 of them, not only begging but demanding that our sovereignty remain. Thus far I have devoted myself exclusively to the area occupied by the Christian Filipinos. A consideration of prime importance to us should be the wishes and the welfare of the non-Christian people. In the passing of time all these peoples will become fused together, cemented into a nation, but only if American sovereignty remains many years yet. I have journeyed among all these wild people, the head hunters of the north, the Moros of the south, and many tribes between, and from their own lips received the unvarying request that the American Government remain, and if it does not there will be trouble. The hauling down of our flag will be the signal for the struggle to commence. These peoples—the Christian and the non-Christian—have not yet learned to know and trust each other. It must be remembered that the American sovereignty is the only one that has ever existed over all the non-Christian area, about one-half of the entire area of the islands. Our plain duty to these people, who now trust us implicitly and believe in us devotedly, is to continue that opportunity the coming of our flag brought to them.

More than 1,000 American boys—our soldier dead—lie buried in the Philippines—they died that stable government, free institutions, and opportunity for all might come to these people. Shall we to-day defile their memory and shall the angels on high tell them they died in vain? No; a thousand times no! Their achievement shall be perpetuated, and the world shall know that we who act to-day are worthy to come after such heroic souls.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has used 1 hour and 35 minutes. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] has consumed an hour and 43 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, opportunities such as to-day confront this House are seldom given to a legislative body. We have the privilege of extending to a race of people numbering nearly 10,000,000 inhabitants the rights, privileges, and enjoyment of a free and self-regulated form of government.

Every boy when he reads the early history of our own country is convinced of the great justice and the righteousness of the cause in which our struggling Colonies fought for eight long years for just that status which we now attempt to give to the Philippine people by the enactment of this legislation now before the House.

This should not in any sense be a partisan question, for there is glory enough for all parties if upon this occasion the great measure now before us is enacted into law. The Republican Party was the agent of our Government in freeing the islands from Spanish rule and establishing a form of government there looking to the future independence of the islands, and the Democratic Party was and now is our Government's agent in perfecting the preparation for self-government and fixing a time when that self-government will become operative.

There is one cardinal principle which should not be lost sight of when we are considering this measure, and that is the great precept that all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed.

Do the Filipino people consent to our continuation as the molders of their destiny? Their representative here says no. It is readily comprehensible that the people of these islands would trust us when we first made representations to them that ultimately they were to be free, because our history, our ideals of liberty, and our actions have always bespoken our attitude. On these assumptions they trusted us, and now we should not belie that trust.

Those people had been studying our history and had dreams of the days to come when they, too, would be blessed by the virtues of liberty and self-government. Do not be deluded into the thought that we are now continuing our sovereignty over the islands of the Philippines for their own good. Throughout the ages of history you will find repeated the arguments that will be heard on this question at this time, namely, that we are reserving our control over the Philippine Islands for their own good. No people can be helped nor can they thrive properly when weighed down with the thraldom of usurped power.

In my opinion our mission has been a benevolent one, and one that has been appreciated by the people of those islands. I also firmly believe that we have almost completed our justifiable mission, and should now keep our promise and set an example to the world of justice to our fellow men without resorting to force, coercion, and subjugation.

After having given the people of the Philippines the assurance of ultimate independence the question naturally arises, Is this the proper time to give them self-government; and if not, when will that time arrive? When this same question was before the House during the Sixty-third Congress I was anxious to secure information first-hand, and I therefore wrote to one of my close personal friends residing in the Philippines and who is dean of the law school at Manila.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss the relative merits of the Clarke amendment with the original Jones bill, but I have asked for this time more especially to read some questions which I submitted to the dean of the law school of Manila, who, by the way, is not of my political party, and his answers to those questions, for the enlightenment, it may be, of the gentlemen of this House, and especially of those of his political party.

This gentleman was for a number of years an assistant attorney general in the Philippine Islands, and is now the dean of the law school in the Philippine Islands. I know him very well, and therefore I submitted to him these 10 special questions and asked for his answers in detail. I have before me his answers, and I am going at this time to read what he has to say in answer to those questions which I deemed pertinent. He prefaces his remarks with this sentence:

> At the beginning I must warn you that on a subject on which there are as many varying opinions as there are debaters, the viewpoint from which the person starts is most important. Both Filipinos and Americans in the Philippines can be roughly divided into three classes: First, there are those who fawn on the people of the opposite race for personal advancement; second, those who, through ignorance or prejudice, have bitter racial feelings; and lastly, those who recognize both the good and the bad characteristics of the Filipinos and Americans, respectively, and treat each other courteously and fairly as men. I am glad to bear testimony to the fact that the large majority of Americans and Filipinos fall within the last division.
> It is also true that if an American publicly advocates immediate Philippine independence some of his countrymen are sure to scoff and jeer at him as a hair-brained Filipinista and theorist, while if a Filipino publicly advocates permanent or indefinite joinder with the United States he is looked upon by his fellows as a heretic and a traitor. I am certain, nevertheless, that there are a respectable number of Americans who conscientiously favor independence for the Philippines within the next few years, and a corresponding number of Filipinos who would dislike to see their country absolutely independent within the same period. The problem is therefore primarily not one of race but of actual existing conditions.

It is further true, I am sorry to say, that the environment, avocation, or training of the speaker or writer is largely or entirely responsible for his conclusions. Whether done consciously or unconsciously, it has the same result. A merchant will naturally think in terms of business and the effect on commerce; a churchman in terms of religion and the effect on his church; a soldier in terms of war and the chances for conquest or glory; a Government official as to how the outcome affects his position; an outsider who spends two or three weeks in the islands and considers that he knows the country, from prejudiced, theoretical principles; a Moro with the sole interests of his people and religion in mind; a Filipino from natural patriotic instinct, without possibly taking into account future consequences, and so on ad infinitum.

Personally I can only state that I have, during more than seven years in the Philippines, spent in different educational and legal positions, with somewhat extended travel throughout the islands, seen and become acquainted with different conditions of people. I shall in my abrupt statements herein, containing not alone by own views but the perspective of others, try to disassociate myself from personal motive as much as is humanly possible. You state in the concluding paragraph of your letter, "I am writing to you because I would like to get an honest opinion from one who is on the ground floor. I want to do what is right by my own people and by the people there, and for that reason I would appreciate it if you would write me an extended brief covering your views." I shall endeavor not to disappoint you, although it is not for me to say whether I approach the criterion laid down by Resident Commissioner QUEZON in his speech before the House of Representatives on February 13, 1913, when he said, "To know a people you must not only live with them for a number of years, but share their feelings, possess a sympathy for their aspirations, and, most important of all, be broad-minded enough to abandon race prejudice and fixed views on the superiority of one civilization over another."

I follow the order of questions as stated by you:

(I) "Does the policy now in vogue in the Philippine Islands hamper the development of the Filipinos?"

I note the word "now." I answer categorically "No." Every branch of the Government is progressing rapidly toward Philippine self-government. Commercial intercourse, internal improvements, sanitary betterment, and educational advancement are going forward as rapidly as the finances permit. Omitting the mooted point of independence, I think all intelligent Filipinos and all impartial observers will admit that this is true. While I differ from you and Gov. Harrison politically, it is only fair to say that the Governor General is carefully and persistently advancing these ideas.

(II) "Could the Filipinos take entire charge of the government of the islands and make a success of it?"

The bearing of time is here most important. They could not tomorrow, as would likewise be impossible for any people by such a sudden change. The Filipinos could take entire charge of the legislative and judicial departments. In the legislative department the Philippine Assembly, composed entirely of Filipinos, has been most remarkably successful. Critics are inclined to make fun of it because of the foolish bills introduced, forgetting that the same is true of any legislative body. The members of the Philippine Commission, composed of a majority of Filipinos, has also proceeded cautiously and conservatively in its work. The members of the judiciary have likewise proved their integrity and judicious bearing alongside of American judges. In many executive positions, however, the Filipinos need American assistance and supervision. It is only common sense to promote capable Filipinos from one position to the position next higher. It is foolish to thrust one into an important office without previous training and experience. This does not mean that there are not many Filipinos who have filled high executive positions with entire success. For example, Araneta, Villamor, Palma, Tinio, Monreal, Kalaw, Nieva, and others could be mentioned. But in many technical positions, such as engineering, education, accounting, and so forth, Americans will be needed until the requisite number of Filipinos can be trained. When this result shall be reached, and it can be accomplished in a much shorter period than is generally believed, then I think that the Filipinos could take charge of the government and make as great a success of it as one could reasonably expect under the particular and grave conditions in which placed.

(III) "If not, are there any departments that they could conduct as efficiently as they are now conducted?"

This question is practically answered under No. II.

(IV) "Could all the peoples of the different islands be brought to recognize a civil government conducted by their own people?"

There is no doubt in my mind that, excepting the Moros, all the people of the other islands would recognize and support a government conducted by themselves. The Moro problem is one on which I am not capable of expressing an opinion. I do know, however, that the proverbial statement that there is jealousy and hatred between the so-called tribes and that if given self-government they would fight among themselves "like cats and dogs" is more fanciful than real. It is not nearly as evident as is the same feeling between races in other countries. I have yet to hear a native boasting of himself as a Visayan, a Tagalog, or an Ilocano, but always speaking of himself as a "Filipino." I have never noticed such a division in the schools, in the Philippine Assembly, or elsewhere.

(V) "Would the inhabitants of Manila and the immediate vicinity in any way control the entire government?"

The facts easily bear out the negative. There are, it is true, and naturally also, I think, able men in public life who reside either in Manila or the surrounding country. There are, for example, Chief Justice Arellano, Commissioner Quezon, Acting Secretary of Public Instruction Palma, Commissioner Illustre, Assemblyman Corpus (a leader of the assembly), Mr. Ortigas, of the code committee, and many others. On the other hand, from the southern islands, are such men as the speaker of the assembly, Mr. Osmeña, possibly the most influential Filipino; the only secretary of an executive department, Mr. Mapa; a Filipino commissioner, Mr. de Veyra; the leader of the assembly, Mr. Adriatico, and others. From the northern Provinces, Attorney General Villamor, Commissioner Singson, the director of lands, Mr. Tinio, and others. The inhabitants of the city of Manila would bear the same relation to the government of the Philippine Islands as the capital or metropolis of any State or country bears to that State or country, and no more.

(VI) "Would you recommend that the United States Government place the government there entirely in the hands of the natives or only partially?"

If it were given to me to recommend, I would say that the government should be placed only partially in the hands of the Filipinos now, entirely, unless in isolated instances by the express desire of the Filipinos themselves, in the near future. The changes in the judiciary will work out gradually as Americans resign. The next step in the legislative department should be the creation of a Philippine senate. The legislature, composed of the assembly and the senate, should then be given jurisdiction over all of the Philippine Islands, unless it be the Moro Province, as to which I express no opinion. The Governor General should then be given the veto power with an appeal from his veto by a two-thirds vote of each house, to the President of the United States. Administratively, the Governor General can, in pursuance of his present policy, Filipinize that division of the government.

(VII) "In what pursuits and occupations do the Filipinos excel?"

First, in law, preeminently. There are as great lawyers among the Filipinos as will be found anywhere. Chief Justice Arellano, Secretary of Finance and Justice Mapa, Attorney General Villamor, Justice Torres, Judge Araullo; Messrs. del Pan and Ortigas, of the code committee; Mr. Agoncillo, president of the bar association; ex-Secretary Araneta; and a long list of others will bear comparison with the bar and judiciary of any country. In medicine also there being not only a number of older Filipino physicians, such as Dr. Calderon, Dr. Singian, and Dr. Bautista, but other skillful ones among the younger generation. In business, there being among the merchants of the islands MANUEL EARNSHAW, the Resident Commissioner; Teodoro R. Yangco, the great Filipino philanthropist; the Fernandez brothers; Mr. Mauro Prieto; and others. In literature, science and art, Dr. Pardo de Tavera; Luna and Hidalgo, now deceased; not to mention the great Filipino patriot, Dr. José Rizal. There are, further, capable pharmacists, artisans, and farmers.

(VIII) "What influence will the generation now growing to manhood and womanhood exert on the civilization of the entire people?"

While I do not underestimate the inherent capability of the Filipinos and the influence of Spain on their civilization, possibly I am an extremist and enthusiast in emphasizing the national good which the American Nation has accomplished in its work with the Filipino youth. Although in some instances it must be conceded the American Government has tried to force a western civilization on an eastern people, and in other instances it may not have taken into account the prejudices and desires of the people of the islands, it has, nevertheless, given a chance for education to the lower and middle classes formerly debarred from such opportunities. It has trained students in democratic ideals, in practical pursuits, and in the elements of good government. It has elevated the Filipino women, opening to them useful pursuits, such as nursing, teaching, stenography, and household industries. It has, moreover, conducted this training in the English language, for, whatever may now be the viewpoint, it must eventually be conceded that it was well to ingraft a common method of communication which happens to be the great commercial language of the world. There are, of course, small jealousies on the part of some of the older people or on the part of some of the "ilustrado" class trained in the private schools according to Spanish methods, and, on the other hand, small jealousies on the part of some of the students trained in the public schools. In the main, and leaving these minor matters out of consideration, the influence of the generation now passing into manhood and womanhood, or which within the next 50 years will do so, will be found to be so extensive and so diverse as to be the leading factor in a progress which will give the Filipinos the same standing as Japan without a monarchial form of government.

(IX) "How could the functions of government be more economically administered?"

The Philippines have had from the beginning of American administration a most scientific system of government. If this system had any defect, it was in being too elaborate and top-heavy. The present administration is remedying these defects by making the government more simple and elastic. It is also cutting out unnecessary positions and Filipinizing the service wherever possible. I think this point can well be left to the best judgment of the present Governor General.

(X) "The main question is: Are the Filipinos ready for independence; and if not, how soon will they be likely to be ready? I am satisfied that the people of this country are looking forward to the time when the Filipinos will be free; but is it to be to-morrow, next year, or many years hence?"

As you state, this is the main question. It is a question on which no two persons can hardly agree. It would appear foolish, therefore, for me to rush in where so many have trod before. I offer my suggestions with some diffidence.

I do not believe any of your possibilities fit the case. The Filipinos should not be made free to-morrow; they should not be made free next year; they should not be made to wait many years. I consider there is a safe medium between "next year" and "many years hence."

The conclusion on such a point should be reached from a nonpartisan standpoint. It is not and should not be a matter for political controversy. It is a subject which should rise above Republican, Democratic, or Progressive platforms. It should be decided from the high altitude of what is best for the Filipino people and what is best for the American people. It should be the considerate dealing of a great and powerful nation with another nation less fortunate.

I say that the Filipinos should not be made free to-morrow or next year. They lack, and it is no reflection on them as a people, many of the characteristics and safeguards which are needed for a free and independent country.

I say also that it is not necessary to wait many years or many generations. One point which many Americans miss, either voluntarily or through lack of investigation, is that the Filipinos have had these aspirations and training not simply since American occupation, but through hundreds of years previous thereto. There was developed in the islands a civilization of their own. The church and the kingdom of Spain added to this from time to time. I fail to see how, if the Filipinos can not be made independent within a respectable period, they would be in any better position if they await the coming of generations yet unborn.

I would therefore think it only fair both to the United States and the Philippines that a resolution be adopted by Congress formally asserting the intention of the United States to make the Philippines free and independent on a given date, say in 1925. In the meantime, by administrative action, the Filipinos can be prepared for this event. In the meantime, also, and up to that specific date the sovereignty of the United States is supreme. Thereafter the United States would have no further obligations, moral or otherwise, and would have withdrawn itself from a dangerous position in the politics of the Orient. The United States should only have retained in the islands the island of Corregidor, on which it has expended so large an amount of money, and the necessary coaling station for its fleet.

GEORGE A. MALCOLM,
Dean, College of Law.

I will say that this letter was written before the last bill which has been reported here, which provides for a Philippine senate, was passed by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Will the gentleman kindly tell us from whom he is quoting?

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. George A. Malcolm, dean of the law school of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. HELVERING. It was written when the Jones bill was up for consideration in the previous Congress, November 20, 1913. For the information of the House I will say that Mr. Malcolm has been in the Philippines for nine years. He has been Assistant Attorney General in the office of the Attorney General, and is now, as I stated, the dean of the law school of the islands; and I submit his letter, not in support of the Clarke amendment to the present bill, but in support of the general proposition that we should at this time give some definite assurance of ultimate independence to the Philippine Islands. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, when we were trying to reach an agreement at 11 o'clock, under my right to reserve a point of order I wanted to suggest that we confine our discussion to the one point in dispute, the amendment that gives the Filipinos independence, and thus reduce the time so that we might reach a vote to-day. I did it because of what I knew would take place—that if general debate was the order, the House would empty and the speeches be delivered largely to vacant seats. I do not think that to discuss an issue involving such a change of policy as this amendment involves—in the House of Representatives, of 435 Members—and to discuss it with the House largely empty is very creditable either to those who speak or to the House itself. It does not speak very well for our interest in great public questions. That is the reason I wanted that suggestion made.

I have no pride in my opinion, and I am not here to criticize unduly any leader or any political party for this proposed legislation; but it does seem to me that it involves enough so that the membership of this House should be here when it is discussed.

I made a somewhat careful examination of the issues involved in this issue of independence; but, under leave to extend, I propose to insert that statement, cut loose here, and speak my mind as it is now stirred by the speeches made by the friends of this Senate policy.

Eighteen years ago the American flag went up in the Orient, figuratively speaking, for it was then that Dewey went through that dangerous channel into Manila Bay, when the command "Keep cool and steam ahead" became famous.

It is now to be determined to-day by the vote of this House whether we will haul down the American flag 18 years after it went up. It seems to me that the scuttle policy involved in that proposition ought at least to enlist the attention—if it does not of the American people, as I know it will—of every Member responsible for his vote to-day.

I have listened to this debate. I have analyzed the objections to a further continuance of the United States in those islands. I have listened to the argument that we should now get out. I notice that certain gentlemen put it upon the basis of fear. Fear, my fellow countrymen, in a time of crisis, when the honor of the Nation is involved, was never spoken of the American soul, and it is too late to do it now. [Applause.] They say that the Philippine situation is a military weakness, and therefore we should turn tail, recognize our inability, dishonor our past history, haul down our flag, and take to the woods. That does not appeal to me, and I feel sure it will not appeal to the American people. [Applause.]

Another line of argument is that it is based upon economy; that it has been costing too much. And in estimating the cost we have heard counted the cost of the establishment of the Army there. My fellow countrymen, should we to-day cut loose from the Philippines, we will not disorganize the Army. We will still keep somewhere in the world that establishment that is expensive to us. And that argument has no meaning to me, because the economy of it will be disrespected as soon as we take the vote, no matter how the vote goes. The fact is the islands can and will become self-supporting in time. They now support the constabulary while we support the Army, Navy, and harbors.

I have heard upon this floor that it is our duty to the Filipinos as well as to ourselves. There I differ from the author of those utterances. I do not believe that it is our duty, after inaugurating in the greatest laboratory for civilization that the world has ever known the work of training and disciplining people for self-government, and then right at the beginning of the promise of future ability to govern themselves, to scuttle the ship and run away, allow them to revert to the original type, which is absolutely sure to happen when we leave them. [Applause on the Republican side.] In the language of Abraham Lincoln in 1858, could we tell where we are and whither we are drifting we could better tell what to do and how to do it. In this discussion it is pertinent to ask the question "Where are we?" For 18 years we have been in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I think I will have to yield to my friend.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has made three very forcible points. I wanted to ask him whether he was willing to recognize the logic of his position and say that the time would never come when we would agree to withdraw from the Philippines?

Mr. FESS. I would not take that position. I have voted and I will continue to vote to pursue the policy inaugurated by President McKinley and followed by Roosevelt and Taft. [Applause on the Republican side.] If you will keep out of your bill the mischievous promise in your preamble, which would mean nothing simply because it might mean anything, and of course the Clarke amendment of this Senate bill, which is a complete abandonment of our duty, I will vote for your bill. I have not taken the position that the United States shall never consult the time for withdrawal, but I am opposed to making any promise that future events may compel us to break; for you can not tell what is in the future, and no wise policy would commit you to some proposition that you might not be able to follow. You can not give self-government; it is not a gift; all we can do is to give opportunity to develop self-government. The Philippines are not ours by choice. We are not there by choice. We are there by the result of war the results of which we could not control. And now, when we get out, we must get out only when we are convinced that our duty to these people is fully performed, and not in the beginning of the performance of that duty that can not be effectively performed before conditions are attained that will make self-government possible. To do so would be a willing abandonment of a work the wonder of the Orient, to permit it to lapse back to former conditions. This will be a repudiation of an honor as well as duty that will invite the condemnation of the world and compel an admission on our own part of a miserable, craven spirit of cowardice.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to the chairman.

Mr. JONES. Did the gentleman not sign the minority report?

Mr. FESS. I did.

Mr. JONES. Does not the minority report say that you gentlemen would be willing to accept the House bill, preamble and all?

Mr. FESS. Preferentially, as between two evils, I will accept the lesser, of course, and so would other people. Eighteen years ago we started upon the solution of a problem that came to us not from our wish. That problem was to inaugurate a system of government of the best that we could do in the far Orient among a people unused to the modern spirit of enterprise. Some people said, "Get out and let them go to shift for themselves." Others said, "Convey them to another country." Having destroyed one government me must substitute another. Consequently still others said, "Let us stay and do the work for the Filipino, with no special regard to the selfish view of our own interests, and when we have put them in position to become what we hope some day they will be, a country of themselves, then we will let them pass, if such would seem to be the wise policy of mutual benefit to all concerned, but not until that time." That time must be determined by this Government, and not by Filipino agitators.

Now, you propose to do it in 18 years. A nation can not be built by the calendar. Nation building is not the result of a coming and going of the seasons. Nation building is the result of generations of careful preparatory education which must begin with the childhood of the nation and end with the full stature of its manhood. When the child that is in the primary grade of the school to-day in the Philippines becomes a man of 25 of 30 under American discipline and such training of the people that we will continue to require by that time, I doubt not we will be able to set a day to let them go. But you can not do it in a year or in a score of years; it is a thing to be done in generations.

Now, I waive aside all of the considerations mentioned except the one for the Filipino. I say nothing about the very important items of a commercial or material character involved in this bill. Others have done and will do that. I am not going to spend a moment upon the Philippines in reference to ourselves, but only as to our duty to these people, and what we have done.

Will you hear me and believe that there is a thousand times more in formation of character than in reformation? We begin with the child, believing that if you want to clean up a boy you do not begin with his body but with his mind. If you want to better the next generation, you begin on the minds of the children of this generation. That, in McKinley's mind, was fundamental. The first thing he did was to call the country's experts and to inaugurate a system of education, and among some of the men he sent there were some of my own personal friends. Here is a letter from one of the brainiest and best-informed men in America, the present president of Colgate University, a former head of the education department in the Philippines, and well versed on the subject. I wrote him, and said, "Give me your honest opinion." Here is what he said:

HAMILTON, N. Y., April 24, 1916.

Hon. S. D. FESS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It would be a mistaken policy for the United States to give independence to the Philippines within a quarter of a century.

First. It would be an injustice to the Filipinos themselves. They need and deserve the tutoring and the defense which the United States has started so well.

Second. It would be an injustice to the United States, because (a) in our present standing internationally to give up the Philippines would add decidedly to the feeling already held by many nations that we are hopelessly weak and vacillating in our policies; (b) to give up the Philippines at this time would mean that the money and lives that have been spent in this service would have been spent in vain.

Third. It would be a mistake from the standpoint of the larger civilization. I am told by a recent careful observer that the American school system in the Philippines, and the American ideas and ideals as exemplified there, are becoming very rapidly the standards for the entire Orient, especially China.

Sincerely,

E. B. BRYAN,
Sometime Commissioner of Education in the Philippine Islands.

Another capable gentleman, now a member of the faculty of the Miami University, in Ohio, wrote me as follows:

DAYTON, OHIO, April 25, 1916.

MY DEAR DR. FESS: Your favor of the 21st has just reached me, and I hasten to write you a few words on the Philippine question, for I, too, am opposed to trying to give the Filipinos their independence. I use the word "trying" advisedly and with a purpose, for no matter how much we might desire to give the Filipinos independence at this time, it would be an impossibility. If we cut loose from over there we will be turning the government over to the half-cast caciques, the "shoe hombres," who will only impose upon the 90 per cent of ignorant Filipinos. It is easy enough for men like QUEZON to make smooth speeches here in America about the way they will conduct the government for the good of all if they are only given an opportunity, but everyone who knows the islands intimately knows just what treatment the Filipino tao (common man) will receive at their hands. By all that is good and right and just, I beg of you and your coworkers to save the Filipinos from this untimely fate.

I was in the islands from July, 1909, to October, 1913, as one of the 35 or 36 division superintendents of schools. I was a graduate of Indiana University before going out there, and had during my college course taken more than an average interest in the Philippine question. I was firmly convinced that it was wrong to hold them in subjection, and had often warmly supported that side of the question in debate. But four years, three of which were spent in Samar and on Panay among the real Filipinos and away from the political storm center at Manila, then one year in Manila seeing that side of their life, fully convinced me of my error and showed me just how foolish I had been in my former position.

The Filipinos have made splendid progress under the control and guidance of their strong foster father. Instead of 40 to 60 meager dialects and so many isolated, warring tribes, they have been given one good language, with a literature that is unexcelled. They have been "scrambled" and brought to know each other, and this has led to respect. Only a few days ago I clipped an item from a Manila paper by a Moro boy who had been educated in Silliman Institute up in Negros. He said he had become acquainted with the Filipinos in the school and he was inviting them to come to Mindanao and take up claims in the rich lands down there. The full significance of this only dawns upon you when you recall all those troublesome years of Spanish rule, when the Moros were forever out among the islands on their pirate expeditions, pouncing down upon a town, killing the men, carrying away the women, rice, cattle, etc. Also, you remember that the Moros served notice on Gov. Forbes, Secretary Dickinson, and others that they will never submit to Filipino rule. But a few generations of American schools and they will be mixed up with all tribes, intermarriage will have taken place, they will have a common language, and race prejudices will be forgotten.

Another thing: There is a stable government now in the islands, and every Filipino knows that if he grows rice, sugar cane, hemp, or some other crop, or if he has horses, caraboo or cattle, they will not be taken away from him without his consent. A Filipino one time called my attention to an item in a Manila paper in regard to the unsettled conditions then prevailing in Cuba, particularly to the fact that wandering bands of ladrones had destroyed crops and carried away live stock. Then he remarked, "I am very glad for the Stars and Stripes here, only I don't dare to say so out loud." I then asked him how many of the Filipinos felt as he did and he told me at least 90 to 95 per cent of them.

Another thing: The Filipinos are for the most part just children. They are doing splendidly under the guiding hand of Uncle Sam, and are some day going to be grown up, if we give them a chance. It is up to us. They may occasionally need the strong hand—most children do—and the sooner we come to recognize this the better off both will be. I could give you incidents by the score to show you what I mean by saying they are just children. I will bother you with but one: One evening, while living in San Jose, word was received that a merchant vessel had gone down on the west coast of Panay early that morning and that the masts were still visible. My sister and I got our ponies and rode up along the coast to take a look. The ship had run head-in into a small, rocky island off the shore. The only explanation given for the accident by those who escaped was that the steering gear had got out of order and they could not control the ship. But the Americans present, and the Filipino provincial treasurer, too, who was a very intelligent Chinese-Italian-Filipino, knew what had happened—the crew had gone to sleep.

Not long after this I was returning from a division superintendents' convention in Manila and had to change steamers at Iloilo for San Jose. The steamer on which I embarked from Iloilo was manned entirely by Filipinos of at least average, or possibly above the average, in intelligence on the part of the captain, chief engineer, first officer, and others of the crew.

We left Iloilo at 10 p. m. and were due around at San Jose at 5 a. m. the next day. I slept on a bench on the upper deck that night, for one never knew what might happen. About daylight the next morning I awoke and found everyone aboard asleep and the boat drifting 25 miles out of its course without a wheel turning. The fire was out in the boiler and the only indication of life anywhere on the boat was that manifest among the fighting cocks, which were beginning to awake and crow.

I aroused the chief engineer and told him to get up steam, then called the captain and helped him get up a big sail so we might steer away from the rocks which were near. We reached port 10 or 12 hours later.

The only explanation the captain and other officers had to offer for going to sleep was that they were sleepy. And I suppose that is excuse enough for children. But until the time comes when they can feel a greater responsibility than they do now it will be sheer folly to try to turn the government over to them.

There are almost no Filipino business men; they have not a score of men who could lead if they were given a place among the nations of the world; their whole government revenue for a year, if I am correctly informed, would not pay for one modern warship; and the fact that the Filipinos now are as independent as the citizens of Ohio, these and further facts indicate very clearly that the United States ought to continue the same policies which were in effect until October 7, 1913, when Francis Burton Harrison landed there.

If the above is anything like what you wanted I am glad for this opportunity to say a word in behalf of the 90 to 95 per cent of Filipinos among whom I lived and worked for four years and who treated me with the greatest kindness and consideration during the entire time.

Use any of this you choose. If convenient I would be glad to have copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing the speeches made on the Philippine Islands question, both in the House and Senate.

Yours, very truly,

GEORGE E. CARROTHERS, Oxford, Ohio.

Hon. S. D. FESS,
House of Representatives United States.

If we will but continue this system of education where these 500,000 children now in the schools are studying the English language and continue the policy for a generation or two, the people who now speak the English language will be greatly multiplied, and the English language will in due time become the universal language in the islands. [Applause.] And with this as the universal language, we will develop a national spirit in the islands. Without a universal communication the national spirit is impossible. This is the greatest problem that confronts us.

Now the question is, If we take away these requirements, what will these people do? Their unrest, their fretfulness now under the present régime but indicates that they would take the first opportunity to revert back to the dialects of their own people and their own habits. This is self-evident. It must be the work of generations, not of years.

The child in the ash heap loves the ash heap for years after you take it into the new environment and will continue to love it until through education you change his ideas and his ideals. It will get back. When the Dutch people who first came here, among them the father and mother of one of the most famous men that ever sang in America, lived on the outskirts of this Capital City, that mother fretted for months and years for a place back home where she could wear the wooden shoes, dress in the simple garments, and live in the simple way. Our conditions were not indigenous to her country and she could not accept them. There is no truth more apparent in the law of biology than that of Herbert Spencer, that when original types develop, evolving a new type under new conditions, it will revert to the old type as soon as you remove the environment under which the new type was developed. That is not only true in biology, it is true in every form of life, and is especially true in nation building. Are we ready to say that our presence in the islands and our work in the schools are nationally unjustified and to be condemned and that we will withdraw now and let it all be lost? If you keep those directions for another generation then it will continue, I think, to be the law of the islands.

That is not all. Out of this system of education has come the most marvelous campaign for sanitation that is known to man. The results of sanitation expressed in outward form is the hospital system of Manila and the marine work, especially in Manila and other places in the islands. The immediate results of science under this direction is to eliminate all smallpox, all bubonic plague, and all cholera. No greater work was ever done than that in Habana by Col. Gorgas, equaled only by that done in the Panama Zone by the same distinguished surgeon, unless it has been done in Manila and throughout the islands. Are you going to lose by leaving too soon the fruits of that remarkable achievement? Not only do you have it in sanitation but you have it in industrial education all through the islands, better industries under vocational training, better methods of dressing, clothing—the clothing of primitive life giving way to the modern methods.

If these things are wrong, then civilization is wrong. Men say to me, "You have no right to fasten upon the Filipinos our ideas." Then, if that be true, you have no right to interfere with slavery there; you have no right to interfere with peonage there; you have no right to interfere with polygamy there; you have no right to interfere with any of the things that have grown up under 300 years of domination by one of the countries of Europe. I say that we have a right, not because it helps us, but because we are developing the finest flower of civilization yet to be under our dominance yonder in the Orient that the oriental life knows. [Applause on the Republican side.] I was present at some of the hearings, and I have studied them carefully. The information is here. Not a man is recorded in these hearings who spoke for independence within the next two years—not one. They spoke for the preamble, a thing that I think is unwise; but, my God, the preamble does not hold a candle in its vicious criminalities to this Clarke amendment, for it is entirely different. The Clarke amendment is scuttle, and do it quickly. It is craven; it is cowardly; it is dishonorable; it is discreditable; it is shameful at this hour. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We have a suggestion of how the Filipinos regard modern methods in the building of the schoolhouses. It was objected to—or was, at least, in the hearings—and when it was asked why, they said, because they are too good; they are made of concrete. They wanted to go back to the ancient, primitive bamboo shack. There was too much expense connected with the building of the schoolhouse that would withstand the typhoons and the erosion of nature and stand forever; and that suggestion of opposition to the present régime indicates what they will do when restraints are removed. Back they will go to the ash heap—to the primitive life. We have built roads there, and the roads are objected to because they are too good. They say they are too expensive. In other words, they say they prefer to hold to the trail that perambulates from place to place; they want to take their time and not be hurried over a road that is built for all time.

The Chinaman originally objected to the first street cars that were built in China, and they literally upset the cars and said the reason was that they landed you at your destination too soon; that you did not have time to rest on the way. I am not giving you fiction; I am giving you what occurred in China, and to-day, under the American régime, in which the highest type of altruism ever displayed in the world is seen, and under the keenest and most discriminating leadership in nation building the world has ever known, these people are becoming modern, under a discipline that produces fretfulness, and when restraints are removed original customs will be resumed. Modern schoolhouses are being provided for them; they are becoming modern in education, modern in sanitation, modern in sewage, modern in pure water, modern in railroads, modern in roads, modern in the post office and in the postal savings banks and in telephones and telegraphs. As early as in 1907 more than 90 places were connected with Manila by telephone and telegraph. We are modernizing these people at an expense that they fret under a little, but which we believe pays, because it is not wholly for their convenience, but is for the next generation; and this fretfulness suggests to me what will take place when we remove the restraints of the American Government. The result is inevitable and is at once an act of enormity.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. For a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that many American communities might be found where if some foreign power came in and undertook to improve according to their methods and make the American native pay for it there would be resentment and restlessness?

Mr. FESS. Oh, yes; there are a good many things in our country that we ought not to have here and which we would like to improve.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is that any argument why we ought not to have the right to govern ourselves?

Mr. FESS. It is an argument, yes, because there are certain things existent that you believe we ought to remove. I know the gentleman does, because I know his standards, and the gentleman would not say that because it is a habit of theirs that has grown up in 300 years of a certain form of government that we should not change the habit, even though they do not want it changed.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is an argument against the gentleman's position, that no nation in the world can superimpose its standard of civilization on any other people in an entirely different climate and of an entirely different race.

Mr. FESS. The standard of civilization would be in regard to the form of government, the customs of the people, and so on. We have a right to see that no form of government that is for and by the few as against the many can exist under our rule. I would not say that we should superimpose any form of religion or anything of that kind any more than would the gentleman. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, Judge DICKINSON.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, 18 years ago the American flag went up in Manila. Eighteen years ago the American flag went up in Cuba, and came down, according to American promise. The Filipino people look to this country to perform its promise made to them that independence should be given them, as it was given to Cuba. Four times in the Democratic platforms in national convention the party to which I belong has pledged itself to give independence to these people, and these people, nearly 10,000,000 in population, look to-day for the fulfillment of that pledge. The Clarke amendment is complained of, which promises independence in four years, and yet in the Senate every Democrat voting on the passage of the bill finally voted for the Clarke amendment in the bill as it came from the Senate to the House, together with a number of Republican Senators—such is the record in the Senate on this bill. It is true some Senators of both parties failed to vote, and such is the record on the passage of every bill. This bill passed the Senate by a vote of more than two to one.

It comes here to-day with the Clarke amendment in it, and the Filipino people ask to-day for the fulfillment of that promise, and have indorsed this bill in its present shape, with the Clarke amendment in it.

On April 20, 1898, the Congress of the United States, by joint resolution, declared—

> That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent—

And further resolved—

> That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

Mark the language of the resolution relating to Cuba—occupation of Cuba merely for the purpose of pacification thereof. Our Republic has been opposed to a colonization policy. You would merely pacify Cuba. You would own and dominate and govern for all time the Philippine Islands, an alien people far remote, more numerous, and more intelligent and far more capable of self-government than the Cubans are.

If selfish business interests were not urging continued and permanent control of the Philippine Islands this bill would pass beyond any question. I will not impugn the motives of any Member here in this House. I know that many of you believe that we should extend our business relations everywhere. I believe in friendly commerce with all people, but I do not believe, with our ideals before us, that we should exploit any nation to the detriment of its people. Continue our control and refuse now to fix the date for independence for these people, and business reasons will grow stronger and stronger until, if they can have their way, those islands and lands will be exploited, and all that is worth anything in those islands will be in the possession and under the control of a foreign people. The aspirations and hopes of those people are the same kind of aspirations and hopes and love for freedom and desire for liberty and for independence that has been the heart throb and in the breast of every people since time began. It was in the breast of a majority of the people in the days of Greece when she was in the ascendency, and when in my youth I read Grecian history, my heart went out to those who begged for equality of opportunity, the same kind of equality of opportunity that you pleaded so strongly for years and was extended to the black people in this country.

I believe that even Mexico long ago would have been a splendid Republic and her people would have had a liberal government had it not been for the domination of foreign power in the past and the control by special interests and of the huge concessions to the few as against the wishes and prosperity of the many. [Applause.] The same heart throbs that have been in the breasts of the Irish people for four centuries against the domination by England are in the hearts of the Filipino people, who have the same natural desire for liberty and independence and who had been oppressed for four centuries by the cruel rule of Spain. [Applause.]

The Filipinos are not ours to own; their lands are not our possessions for permanent control. Those islands belong to them. The Philippine Islands are entitled to be independent of foreign control, the Filipino people to their freedom from foreign domination.

Nation building comes not from oppression nor by foreign control. Japan has grown great and strong without foreign domination. Let the Filipinos have the same opportunity to rise to high estate, unfettered by repressive influences from abroad. Let us keep our promises so often made by official and public utterances to grant to this people their independence when a stable government was established, now not denied. Why not fix a time for performance on our part? Let us not longer subject ourselves to the criticism of want of good faith in further postponing compliance with our plighted word.

You of the opposition party of all men should not stand in the way of freedom for this people. Freedom for the black race in this country gave birth to your party, and you rose to power and control of this Government by crying aloud against slavery of the black race. I will not unduly attack your motives now. But separate yourselves entirely from selfish interests and those who would exploit those lands and people for selfish purposes and quickly the faith of this Nation will be kept.

The Filipinos are a brave, courageous people, and make good soldiers. Gen. "Chinese" Gordon, as he was called, said of the Philippine troops who formed part of his forces in the Chinese war:

> They are a fine, sturdy body of fellows, faithful and long-suffering, bearing hardships without murmurs; plucky, and never losing heart in defeat, and considerably superior to the Japanese.

It is said that the Philippines are at present the richest undeveloped region in the world. Greedy commercialism seeks to exploit these islands and rob these people of their own blessed heritage. They have earned what they fought for in their struggle for independence.

The large majority of the American people desire that which the Filipinos hope and pray for and demand as their right. Keep the promise made. Will the Republican Party cease to proclaim that it is the champion of human rights and of equal opportunity for all men and people in its desire now to do the bidding of selfish greed, so that a few exploiters may reap great profits at the expense of a people appealing for independence and at the expense of the American people? It has been oft said in this debate that already there has been expended more than $700,000,000 in our control of these islands.

Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, one of the ablest Senators that ever sat in that great body, an eminent Republican, who opposed the acquisition of the Philippine Islands bitterly and vigorously, declared more than 10 years ago that the United States had expended up to that time the enormous sum of $600,000,000, and we have kept constantly on the islands a standing army of United States soldiers at great expense to our country. Shall this expense continue forever, and shall the hope of these people for independence be destroyed in order that the greed of commercial interests may indefinitely exploit those islands, or shall we fix an early and definite date for their independence, as provided in the Clarke amendment, so earnestly desired by those people?

Does the Republican minority here, representing a great party, that has always claimed to be especial champions of liberty for all people and all classes, and came into power by reason of its advocacy of freedom for the slaves of the South—will it lend its efforts now to defeat this resolution at the instance of special interests, who want to defeat independence for selfish reasons? How any Democrat can join the Republican minority in this effort is passing strange. For the time being he violates the most sacred principles of Democracy, which believes that no people, however enlightened, are good enough to govern another people without their consent.

You say this is mere sentiment and should be set aside for business reasons. In reply I will say that sentiment based upon common honesty between men and nations should rule the world, as against that kind of greed for power and conquest that involves the world in war and misery.

What becomes of our famous Monroe doctrine, whereby we seek to prevent the acquisition of additional territory on this continent by foreign nations, and yet we seek to retain possessions in the far-away Orient, in another hemisphere, against the protest of those people.

I have hoped this resolution would pass as it came from the Senate, and thus evidence to the world that love of liberty and justice was stronger with us than selfish greed, and that the exploitation of a helpless people by force would not be laid at our door by other nations, who are controlled by the doctrine of force and the hunger for other possessions.

The people of this country will draw the distinction sharply between the Democratic Party, standing for human rights everywhere, as against any party controlled by special interests; between the party that openly declares with honest purpose its intention to keep its plighted faith and promise for independence of these people as against the party that seeks to postpone indefinitely, for so-called business reasons, the time when the ambitions of these people may be realized, under the claim that the Filipinos are not yet capable of self-government.

If we should hold on to these lands, what a mistake we made when we failed to acquire permanently the island of Cuba, so near to our shores and so close to the Panama Canal, which we must and will protect. Much more logical to have sought permanent domination over Cuba, title to which we could have acquired and held, with better purpose than to have purchased from Spain title to her possessions in the Philippines for $20,000,000, which she owed Cuba and could not pay and which we assumed and paid in exchange for a title in the Philippines, which she could no longer defend.

The Filipinos had about won their fight against Spain. It was assured when Admiral Dewey sailed into Manila Bay and destroyed the Spanish fleet. It was the end of Spanish power in those islands. The Filipinos would soon have acquired that title by force of arms in their fight for freedom and independence against Spanish thralldom that had lasted for centuries. The twenty millions paid by the United States for Spain's title to her possessions in those islands was a mere gratuity to Spain, and we have taken the place of Spain and continue to our detriment to hold those islands and people as our possessions on the idea that they are not capable of self-government, when all high authorities familiar with both people admit they are far more intelligent and capable than the Cubans are.

What the American people desire, what the Filipinos by one voice ask for, what Francis Burton Harrison, Governor General of the Philippines, and President Woodrow Wilson both urge, should be done. What has been done by the American Senate by a vote of more than two to one should be done now by this House.

Far better take all the West Indies and round off our territory, as advocated by Thomas Jefferson; far better take Mexico and Central America, lying adjacent and south of us, and extend our dominion to the Panama Canal for the benefit of stable government in those countries and for business and other reasons, than to exploit under claims of right the Philippine Islands, in the far-away Orient, 8,000 miles away from our shores. We have more business interests in nearby Mexico, crying out for protection, than in the Philippines, and we are not seeking to extend our dominion over the countries south of us.

Let us be consistent. Let us be honest in purpose and keep faith with the American doctrine against the holding of colonies by this Republic. We have not held to the idea of acquiring additional territory without the ultimate purpose of granting statehood to the people thereof. Nobody expects or desires that the Philippine Islands shall ever become States of this Republic. Let us stay with our ideals. Let foreign nations hold to their ancient views of colonial possessions. They will break down in time and lose their colonies, as imperial governments in all the past have done. Such was the history of Greece and Rome. Such was the history of Spain. Lift the veil of the future, and such will be the fate of Great Britain and of Germany or any other imperial government that seeks to perpetuate its life by the domination of foreign lands and alien people. Let us not follow in the paths of those imperial governments, that in their eager desire to extend their power over foreign lands have destroyed not only the liberty of alien people but have brought ultimate injury and permanent loss to their own country. Let us not by any act of ours withhold independence from any friendly and foreign people on earth.

Let not human liberty and the spirit of independence be crushed or destroyed by the acts of this, the greatest of all Republics, but let the beacon light of a liberty-loving people blaze out so it can be seen as a living example to all the world, so that the people of every clime and country may look with admiration upon and behold with glad eyes the Republic of the United States standing as a strong man, with honest purpose, battling for the right and for justice and for liberty and for independence and the right of each distinct people to control their own affairs and to govern themselves. Stand for this high purpose and the Statue of Liberty, erected at the entrance to New York Harbor, crowned with a beacon light of liberty and bidding all to look and come to a country loving and standing for freedom and independence. Stand for these things and that great statue, with its beacon light of liberty enlightening the world, will not have been raised in vain.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the campaign that will be conducted this fall is going to be quite different from that of any campaign conducted in recent years. The American people are going to hold their public servants to strict account, and they are going to inquire just what their position is and has been upon issues that vitally affect the well-being of this Republic. They are going to want to know have you voted to remove dangers that threaten international complications and war, or have you voted for policies that sow dragon's teeth in the path of the Republic. To-day you have the opportunity to render signal service to this Nation. Are you for America and her highest and best interest or are you on the side of Shylock and his Philippine bonds? Choose ye this day whom you will serve. [Applause.] The Philippine Islands is our danger point. It hangs like a millstone about the neck of the Nation, and it means trouble and war some day for our people.

Whenever we think of a future foreign war in which we might be engaged we think of the Philippine Islands, and we say if we ever have war with any foreign power it will be caused by our occupancy of the Philippine Islands. It was a mistake to take the Philippine Islands in the first place, and now, since we realize that, our holding on to something that we ought not to have is a menace and a danger to our peace and happiness, it is right and the part of wisdom to do as we did in Cuba, give freedom to the Filipinos and withdraw from the field of conquest and imperialism. [Applause.] Do you believe that the patriots of America want you to vote against fixing a time when we can be rid of the dangers that threaten us on account of the Philippine Islands, 8,000 miles away? In spite of the fact that the Filipino 18 years ago was as well qualified for self-government as the Cuban, we have expended over there $900,000,000. That is money enough to build a wide road, a boulevard, across the Republic from east to west and another from the northern boundary line to the southern, and pay for our river and harbor appropriations for this Congress, and pay for carrying out our preparedness program for both the Army and the Navy, and then have money left. [Applause.] Every intelligent man admits that our occupancy of the Philippine Islands is the thing that invites attack and that it is the thing that annoys and worries our people, who are not willing to spend American money and sacrifice American lives to hold something that we do not need and should not have. But gentlemen on that side talk about not taking down the flag when once we have planted it on foreign soil. God grant that we may never lack for courage and patriotism to take it down if it be the righteous and honorable thing to do. [Applause.] No right-thinking, patriotic American is willing to commit us to the unpatriotic and un-American policy of remaining in the Philippine Islands when to do so may involve us in a foreign war at any time. Our occupancy of the islands is a source of annoyance and embarrassment to the President now. These are critical times. We are told that if we should be drawn into war with any foreign power that Japan would engage us in an effort to take the Philippine Islands; that Japan says, "the Filipino is a yellow race, as we are, and the Philippines is a tropical country, the home of the dark and the yellow race," and we know that climatic conditions are such that the white man can not live there any great length of time and retain his health. Diseases common to that country and climate have carried hundreds of our soldiers into insane asylums and to untimely graves. The great God of Nature and of the eternal fitness of things is showing us by these unmistakable signs that the Philippines is not a white man's country.

Mr. Chairman, what an opportunity is ours to-day. When the armies of kings and emperors are fighting to the death in the Old World, here is an opportunity for the head servant in the household of nations in the New World to remove the only danger that threatens her peace, prosperity, and happiness, and at the same time give freedom to the Filipino and bring into existence the Philippine republic. [Applause.] The percentage of illiteracy in the Philippine Islands is less than that of the Republic of Chile; less than that of Brazil. The chief justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands is a Filipino, and hundreds of Filipinos who hold office in the Philippine Islands got their places through the civil service. There are 500,000 Filipino children in the schools, and yet you talk about the people there not being capable of self-government. I am in favor of giving them their freedom, of coming out of the Philippine Islands and staying out. The immortal founders of this Government never intended that it should be so perverted from the ends of its institution as to fasten it on to a policy that would jeopardize its best interest and endanger the Republic. [Applause.] We can not defend the Monroe doctrine and say to foreign countries, "You shall not acquire territory and set up your authority on this continent" and at the same time go 8,000 miles into the Pacific Ocean, acquire territory, and set up American authority in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Chairman, we have come to the parting of the ways. We must decide whether we will give the Filipinos their independence and withdraw from the islands and stand by the Monroe doctrine and keep foreign powers out of territory on this continent or abandon the Monroe doctrine and by doing so tear down the mightiest bulwark of our liberties, and for the privilege of acquiring and holding territory abroad barter to foreign powers the privilege of acquiring and holding territory adjacent to us. This is the mighty problem involved in the proceedings here to-day. [Applause.]

But some gentlemen take the position that some Americans own Philippine bonds and others say that some of their constituents have invested money in the Philippine Islands.

I do not want to see any American lose a dollar on the Philippine bonds and I do not want to see any citizen of this country lose his investments in the Philippine Islands, but I am not willing, on account of a few men who went on their own accord and made these investments, to fasten upon a hundred millions of American people the colonial policy back of these gentlemen who oppose this measure to-day. In the four years between now and the time for granting independence to the Filipinos arrangements can be made about the bonds and Americans desiring to do so can arrange to leave the islands or stay, as they choose. I for one am for doing the wisest and best thing for the American people.

I am willing for the American boy to fight and, if need be, to die in protecting that flag and in defense of our country, but I am not willing to see a single American soldier sacrificed upon the unholy altar of the Philippine policy that un-American interests are calling for here to-day. [Applause.] The Democratic platform has declared time and again for the independence of the islands.

Speaking of these Americans who own Philippine bonds. Do you know what happened when the bonds were sold? The act of Congress required that they should not sell them under par, but they did it, anyhow. Did you know that they asked Mr. Taft and Mr. Root to guarantee those bonds and that both of them refused? Did you know that Mr. Taft and Admiral Dewey both said that the Filipinos were as well prepared for self-government as the Cubans? And you do know that we gave freedom to the Cubans and, strange to say, refused to give it to the Filipinos. Mr. Chairman, 18 years have gone; $900,000,000 have been expended; our soldiers are still on guard in the islands; and under our watchful care the Filipino is far better prepared for self-government than when Mr. Taft said that he was more capable of self-government than the Cuban. But Americans who have money invested in the islands and those who own Philippine bonds inspire more enthusiasm among Republicans than does giving liberty to the Filipino and providing for the safety and well-being of the Republic. You Republicans make speeches on that side and talk about Lincoln whenever you want to put over a deal for sinister interests. If Lincoln lived to-day he would certainly be for the freedom of the Philippine Islands. [Applause.] He believed in putting the man above the dollar, and you Republicans are voting to-day to put the dollar above human liberty and above the best interest of your own country.

You are voting against America's best interest and in the interest of Philippine bondholders, and I predict that for every Democrat that we lose to-day we will gain one in place of a Republican in the election this fall. Mark that prediction. Nine hundred million dollars have gone; $40,000,000 of American money a year spent in the Philippine Islands. Do you believe that the American people are willing to be taxed $40,000,000 a year in order to protect and safeguard $17,000,000 worth of Filipino railroad bonds?

I predict that in the next Congress we will have Democrats enough here from the great West and Northwest to register the judgment of the people on this question. [Laughter and applause.] "Who laughs last laughs best." Our time to laugh will come in November, when the voice of the people will be heard above that of the bondholders of the Philippine Islands. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHEELER. If all the predictions that you have made in the last three or four months come true, do you think we will have as many as two Members on this side of the House next fall?

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, if we do reduce the number to two Republicans, I shall be delighted to see my good friend here as one of them. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. How much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has consumed 2 hours and 5 minutes and the gentleman from Iowa 2 hours and 13 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not desire to use time now.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, 18 years ago to-day our great hero, Admiral Dewey, made history for the Republic. His victory in the harbor of Manila made us a world power. Congress is going to make history again on the 1st day of May for the United States. We are going to make it by the solid votes of the Republican Members and 30 splendid, red-blooded, American Democrats on the other side of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.] We are going to have a patriotic union here to defeat a bill the title of which should be changed to that of "the scuttle bill" [applause], a measure to present to Japan, our commercial and naval rival in the Pacific, an empire in the Orient, with a population of 8,000,000, and in extent as large as all New England and the Empire State (New York) combined, or larger than Italy, and nearly as large as England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales. We have been denouncing in the public press and in speeches the violation of the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium, but this movement here to-day on the part of the administration is to make absolutely worthless a sacred and binding treaty we negotiated with the Government of Spain.

We promised under the terms of that treaty we would guarantee religious freedom in the Philippine Islands and the protection of the property of the Spanish subjects in the islands.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to have you tell us how we violate that treaty?

Mr. AUSTIN. We promised under the terms of that treaty we would guarantee religious freedom in the Philippine Islands and the protection of the property of the Spanish subjects in the islands.

It is a treaty binding upon the honor and the conscience of honest people and upon an honest Government.

You are attempting to transfer a treaty obligation to a new government, a native government, and yet you dare not guarantee the integrity of the proposed government, although you promised to do so four times in your party platform. Many Members wish to turn these islands adrift because they are afraid. I would rather be dead than a coward. [Applause.] And the nation too cowardly to stand up for its rights, for its people, and its honestly acquired territory is not worth fighting for, living for, or dying for. [Applause.]

The following Democrats voted against the Clarke amendment in the Senate: Messrs. HITCHCOCK, LEE, LEWIS, MYERS, O'GORMAN, PHELAN, POMERENE, RANSDELL, REED, SAULSBURY, and WALSH. [Applause on the Republican side.]

President Taft, the first Governor General of the Philippine Islands; Gov. Gen. W. Cameron Forbes, of Massachusetts; and Gov. Gen. Luke E. Wright, of Tennessee, all assure us the Filipinos are not ready for self-government and that this bill should be defeated. Gen. Luke Wright is a citizen of the State I represent in part. He is as high a type of an American citizen as can be found in any State of the Union, while President Taft and Gov. Forbes also enjoy the respect and confidence of the American people. Prof. Thomas L. Blayney, of Houston, Tex., spent some time visiting the islands last year, and he corroborates the statements of the gentlemen I have mentioned, who presided over the Philippine government for a number of years with credit and honor. I challenge any Member of the Texas delegation to say that Prof. Blayney is not worthy of belief. We have a reliable Democratic witness from Florida in the person of Judge Arthur F. Odlin, of Arcadia, who served on the bench in the Philippine Islands. In a recent letter published in the New York Times he states the Filipinos are not prepared to conduct stable government. Our colleague, Mr. CLARK, tells me Judge Odlin stands high in Florida. President Wilson, the highest Democratic authority, has this to say about the Clarke amendment:

It is my judgment that the action embodied in the Clarke amendment in the bill, extending further self-government to the Philippines, is unwise at this time.

Are you going to attempt to commit the Democratic Party to legislation when the head of that organization, over his own signature, stated it was "unwise at this time"?

Mr. GALLAGHER. What document is that, I will ask the gentleman?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is an extract from a letter, written by President Wilson to his late Secretary of War, Mr. Garrison.

Mr. GALLAGHER. When was it written?

Mr. AUSTIN. On February 10, 1916. In that correspondence Secretary Garrison stated:

I consider the principle embodied in the Clarke amendment an abandonment of the duty of this Nation and a breach of trust toward the Filipinos; so believing, I can not accept it or acquiesce in its acceptance.

In addition to the views of the distinguished Republicans and Democrats I have quoted, it would not be out of order to state that the Republican and Democratic Parties in the Philippine Islands, composed exclusively of Americans, in convention assembled to send delegates to the Republican and Democratic national conventions next month, have passed resolutions condemning the pending bill, and protesting against its passage. The Merchants' Association of Manila, composed of American merchants and business men, and being the strongest organization of the kind in the Orient, has sent a vigorous protest to Congress against the Clarke amendment.

The American Cotton Manufacturers' Association, in its recent convention in the city of Atlanta, passed a resolution against this iniquitous bill and its members followed up that action by signing and transmitting to Congress a petition of protest bearing the names of the leading cotton manufacturers of the Southern States.

My good friend Mr. HEFLIN, of Alabama, says we are spending $40,000,000 a year there. The fact is, the islands are now practically self-sustaining. The gentleman from Alabama only missed it by about $33,000,000. The expense to our Government at this time is almost entirely in transporting the Army to and from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. How much is the cost?

Mr. AUSTIN. The testimony as shown in the discussion in the Senate on this bill is that the annual cost is from six and one-half to seven million dollars. If we take the Army out of the islands and turn all military work over to the native constabulary and scouts, we can maintain law and order and save this expense. But we have been keeping our Army over there not only to preserve order in the Philippine Islands, but to care for our interests in China and keep a watchful eye on Japan. [Applause.] If the Philippine people are prepared at this time to run an orderly, safe, and stable government, why doesn't President Wilson withdraw the Army now and use it in Mexico?

Now, let us see about some other matters. There are about 7,000 Americans in the Philippine Islands, hundreds of whom went there as soldiers, many of them from my own State. They fought to maintain our sovereignty and to plant our flag over the historic walls of Manila. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the Philippine Islands are American territory. So these Americans went there in good faith, 18 years ago, and built or purchased new homes and became interested in various business enterprises. They established wholesale and retail houses, opened mines and lumber camps, constructed mills and factories. Members of this House almost weep and cry over the Filipinos, but forget all about their own kith and kin, fellow Americans, in the Philippine Islands.

They would withdraw the Army and Navy; they would turn over the lives and property to the care and keeping of the natives without a pang and without hesitation. They would take the chances of giving the world another Mexico, Haiti, or San Domingo.

If the Members of this House could go there and meet those splendid Americans, they would be proud of them. They are longingly looking to Washington City for friendship, for protection, for justice from a country they have served in peace and in war. They have carried $150,000,000 there under an invitation of our Government and invested it and made these islands the marvel and the admiration of the world.

Their money, talent, energy, pluck, and courage have wrought wonders in the far-off Orient—higher wages, increased trade and commerce, countless blessings and opportunity, prosperity, progress, education, and happiness for the Filipinos.

American capital was used to build sewers and waterworks, to drive out Asiatic cholera and the plague, to give the natives health and strength. And now that these honest, courageous, and patriotic Americans, with their hard-earned American dollars, have gone there to build up, improve, and develop the islands; to bring to the natives health and modern sanitary conditions; to construct railroads and public utilities, you say, "Oh, let the bondholders go." Yet these very bonds were sold to men, women, and children in the United States. What will you do with the Tennessee soldier who went over as a member of the First Tennessee Regiment, which immortalized itself under the flag, who now has his little boot and shoe store in Manila? What will you do with Judge Ingersoll, from my State, who has his last dollar invested in a mining proposition? What will you do with the southern man from Georgia who has his every cent invested in a lumber enterprise? What will become of the other Americans, hailing from every State in the Union? Will you create another Mexico for them? Oh, no, my countrymen. Is there no sentiment, is there no sense of justice in the hearts of the Members of this House, that we can forget and desert our good, true, and tried Americans in the far Orient?

Mr. Chairman, I would feel disgraced, dishonored, to cast adrift the 7,000 Americans in the Philippines. If we do it, we will regret it the rest of our lives. Our children will blush for us long after we are gone. Are we wholly indifferent to the welfare, safety, and happiness of our fellow Americans in the Philippine Islands?

Something has been said about trade. When the Philippine Islands were under the Spanish Government we exported to the islands 8 per cent of all their imports. Just prior to the European war we exported to them 51 per cent of all they bought. Under the Spanish Government we sold American goods to the value of $120,000. In 1914 we sold them $27,000,000. We sold to them under the Spanish Government $325 worth of American cotton goods. Last year we sold them $6,900,000, very largely from the cotton mills of the South. Practically one-sixth of all the cotton goods exported from America to-day are sold in the Philippine Islands—five times more than we sell annually to the 400,000,000 people of China. We sold to our insular possessions—Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and the Hawaiian Islands—$7,500,000 under foreign flags. We sold $85,000,000 under the American flag in 1914. [Applause.]

Our sales in the Philippines for 1914 exceeded our exports to China for the same period, and was equal to half of the amount we disposed of in Japan and greater by $2,000,000 than the amount we shipped to all of the following countries in South America during 1914: Venezuela, Peru, Colombia, Uruguay, Bolivia, and Paraguay. Our trade in Chile and Peru combined fell a million and a half dollars behind the Philippine orders in 1914. Comparing our trade in the islands with some of our exports to European markets, we have the following: Our Philippine trade in 1914 exceeded by $3,000,000 all we sold to Greece, Portugal, Switzerland, and Turkey in Europe, and fell short only $3,000,000 in equaling our exports to Russia.

Raise the American flag, give Congress the right to pass trade and tariff laws, and we will increase our trade, which means work in the workshops, in the mills, and in the factories to the great army of deserving American wage earners. Are we going to abandon the Orient, when Manila can be America's Hongkong for the awakening trade of more than half the population of the entire world? The Philippine Islands are the richest, most fertile undeveloped islands in the world, and in a short time under our flag we can increase our trade there $200,000,000 a year. No, my countrymen. Let us go forward and not backward. Let us go on and not retreat. Let it never be written in the annals of American history that we are too cowardly to stand for our flag and to defend our possessions. [Applause.]

The chairman of the committee, Mr. JONES, says they are going to make some provision for the bondholders. What are you going to do about the merchants, the manufacturers, mine operators, and so forth? What are you going to do about the lawyers and professional men in Manila and elsewhere? What are you going to do with the Americans engaged in the wholesale and retail jobbing business? What are you going to do with the American business men in the hemp, coconut, and sugar industries, in the lumber and mining business? Are you going to single out the bankers and guarantee them against loss? Yet you forget the plain man, you forget the Spanish-American soldier, who has made Manila his home for the past 18 years. Where is his guaranty; his security? What would the guaranty given to the bondholder amount to, executed by a native government, where more than 80 per cent of the adults can neither read nor write, with a population of 8,000,000, of 800,000 non-Christian tribes, speaking 15 or 20 dialects, and with a total government income of less than $15,000,000, not enough to purchase a modern battleship. Such a guaranty would not be worth the paper it was written upon. It would be a gold-brick proposition, pure and simple. What else? Here is the only country in the Orient with a Christian religion. What is going to become of it if turned adrift? If this bill becomes a law, Japan will, in a short time, own these islands. Here is a San Francisco paper, with interviews with returning Americans, who tell how Japanese are buying up the public utilities, sugar lands, and so forth, and getting ready to take these islands over. Are you going to turn adrift, abandon the American missionaries with their churches, schools, and hospitals? Every one of them has appealed to Congress not to do this foolish thing. Catholics, Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists, Episcopalians, all sects enter their protests against this unwise legislation.

I know there has been some criticism of certain Democratic Members of Congress because they oppose this bill. I have criticized Tammany myself as a partisan Republican, but I say all honor to the representatives of Tammany Hall and their Democratic colleagues who have the courage to stand up in a Democratic Congress and fight for America. [Applause.]

I send to the Clerk's desk an article from a Manila paper containing an interview with one of the Filipino graduates from the University of the Philippines. I know the native public officeholders and native editors and politicians in the Philippine Islands are for this Clarke amendment. But you finish the educational training of the Filipino until he becomes a voter, and he would rather taken poison than have the United States withdraw its Army and Navy.

The Clerk read as follows:

The feet of the young men are leading them toward political office nowadays. A number of them are contestants in the race for membership of the municipal board, under the new city charter, and among these is Bienvenido A. Tan, a graduate of the University of the Philippines. He was interviewed by the Free Press as to his platform, and we make no apology for reproducing certain passages from the statement which he furnished. Said this young man:

"I have observed that most of the people do not understand the real situation in regard to the Jones bill. The politicians of the 'old school' tell the people, either intentionally or from ignorance, only about the advantages to be gotten from the Jones bill, but not the responsibilities that go with it. They tell the people that with the Jones bill we shall be a free people, have less taxation, and no worry about anything. Some of the people believe that with independence taxes will be abolished. This is the opinion I heard among representative people in my own Province. I explained to them that just the contrary will happen—that taxes will be doubled, for the expenses then will be greater.

"Most of the leading Filipino leaders do not understand the real truth; if they do, they are careful not to tell the people about it. * * *

"* * * I am not opposed to independence, but I do not want the premature independence promised now. I believe in stable, real independence; not the independence of one or two years, but a permanent independence based on economic independence. When I believe my country is ready, I shall be the first man to cry for independence. When the country is ready, I believe independence will fall like ripe fruit—you won't need to ask for it. To-day were a vote taken among the young men of the Manila High School on the Jones bill, I believe 90 per cent of them would vote against it. And they are just as good patriots as Osmena and QUEZON and Palma or anybody else." (Manila Free Press.)

Mr. AUSTIN. In conclusion, I challenge any man on that side of the House to name a single Democratic daily paper in the United States which has indorsed the Clarke amendment. From one end of this land to the other the daily press of this country, Republican, Independent, and Democratic, are opposed to that amendment. There are no editorials stronger against this "scuttle bill" than those contained in the New York World, an administration paper, and the strongest was published in that paper to-day. Public sentiment is against this unpatriotic measure. If this question could be submitted to a vote of the Democratic Party, that party would decide against it at the November election. It is not the pledge guaranteed in the Democratic national platform. You promised protection and that you would guarantee their independence until a neutrality treaty could be made. If you cut them adrift, if you scuttle them, if you withdraw the strong protecting arm of the American Army and Navy, if you lower our flag, you could not do a greater wrong or perpetrate a more lasting disaster upon the Filipino people than by the passage of the pending bill. [Applause.]

Grover Cleveland lowered our flag and deserted Americans in the Hawaiian Islands, and for the offense was punished at the first election. A similar political fate awaits Woodrow Wilson if he repeats the performance in the Philippine Islands.

I am a southern man. I have been in the Philippine Islands, and I say, without reflecting upon the Philippine people, who deserve credit and have made wonderful progress, that the American colored man is better qualified and better equipped for self-government to-day than are the Philippine people. And yet the men on the floor of this House who are advocating the so-called independence of the Filipinos, putting them over the Americans in the islands, would not dare vote to give the colored people in many of the Southern States the right of franchise.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman mean to convey the impression that he will never vote to grant independence to the Filipinos, or that he does not desire that result?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am too good an American to see the flag of my country lowered in a land that we purchased with American money and the blood of American soldiers. If you will educate these people, they will know the value of being protected by a strong Government like our own, and the very fact that they want to turn themselves adrift is the best evidence that they are not prepared for self-government. Besides, there is always ample independence, liberty, and justice beneath our flag and on our territory.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then the gentleman is not in favor of granting independence to Cuba, because it was purchased by American blood?

Mr. AUSTIN. We made a great mistake when we failed to hold Cuba. We have been sending our Army to Cuba to restore order, at our own expense, since she set up a government of her own. The United States ought to have Cuba and Mexico and on down to the Panama Canal. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Does not the bill give the Filipinos every right and privilege that Canada now enjoys?

Mr. AUSTIN. As much liberty and freedom and as much government as the British give to Canada, as the United States has given to any American territory, and far more than the people of Washington City and the District of Columbia enjoy. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON].

[Mr. QUEZON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee yields five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, it is almost trite that one who knows so little of the Philippine Islands should speak immediately after the Resident Commissioner of the islands, Mr. QUEZON, who knows so much of his own people and his own land and is so capable of presenting it here. [Applause.] If any doubt had ever lurked in my mind regarding our duty of granting independence to the Philippines, the speech of the Resident Commissioner, just delivered, has forever dissipated it. [Applause.] Each time as interruptions by the different Members were made, I almost held my breath to know if the Resident Commissioner would be able to so acquit himself that his speech and his conduct would commend both him and his people to us on this most important day; but as the replies fell from his lips I found him thoughtful, careful, and painstaking in diplomacy, capable, able, fearless, and courageous. I can not but pause and wonder if the speech of the gentleman just concluded does not for the moment break through the barriers of partisanship and tug at the heartstrings of the Republican Party, which is to-day, in unison and accord, standing in the pathway as an obstruction to Philippine independence, the thing these people most desire. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Ten million Filipino people, 10,000 miles away, occupying 3,000 islands of the sea, are through their accredited representatives in Congress this day asking for independence. I am proud of my party to-day as I have never been before, that it is striving to give them their one wish—that of independence.

It was 18 years ago to-day when Admiral Dewey triumphantly entered Manila Bay and forever banished Spanish rule from the Philippine Islands. It was a glorious victory then for our Navy, it was even a greater victory for the Philippines; and my only hope is that those two righteous victories may this day ripen into a more genuine one, that of liberty and freedom and home rule for these people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Our Government then, and at every intervening moment since then, has been well meaning and helpful to the Filipino people; but as every utterance and every brief and every understanding, both express and implied, has been toward the ultimate independence of the Philippine Islands, the time is now upon us to take a firm and positive stand and to actually fix the day at which our withdrawal may be expected and actually had. The great political party of which I am an humble member has not during the 18 years of Philippine occupancy been silent on this great question. The last four national conventions, beginning with 1900, again in 1904, again in 1908, and again in 1912, all promised plainly, emphatically, and without equivocation their intention to ultimately withdraw and deliver full independence to the Philippine Islands. Their several provisions dealing with this subject are as follows:

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM—1900.

We condemn and denounce the Philippine policy of the present administration. It has involved the Republic in unnecessary war, sacrificed the lives of many of our noblest sons, and placed the United States, previously known and applauded throughout the world as the champion of freedom, in the false and un-American position of crushing with military force the efforts of our former allies to achieve liberty and self-government. The Filipinos can not be citizens without endangering our civilization; they can not be subjects without imperiling our form of government; and as we are not willing to surrender our civilization nor to convert the Republic into an empire, we favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to give the Filipinos, first, a stable form of government; second, independence; and, third, protection from outside interference, such as has been given for nearly a century to the Republics of Central and South America.

The greedy commercialism which dictated the Philippine policy of the Republican administration attempts to justify it with the plea that it will pay, but even this sordid and unworthy plea fails when brought to the test of facts. The war of criminal aggression against the Filipinos, entailing an annual expense of many millions, has already cost more than any possible profit that could accrue from the entire Philippine trade for years to come. Furthermore, when trade is extended at the expense of liberty, the price is always too high.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM—1904.

We insist that we ought to do for the Filipinos what we have done already for the Cubans, and it is our duty to make that promise now and upon suitable guarantees of protection to citizens of our own and other countries resident there at the time of our withdrawal, set the Filipino people upon their feet, free and independent, to work out their own destiny.

The endeavor of the Secretary of War, by pledging the Government's indorsement for "promoters" in the Philippine Islands, to make the United States a partner in speculative legislation of the Archipelago, which was only temporarily held up by the opposition of the Democratic Senators in the last session will, if successful lead to entanglements from which it will be difficult to escape.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM—1908.

We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought us weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandoning a fundamental doctrine of self-government. We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us as we guarantee the independence of Cuba, until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers. In recognizing the independence of the Philippines our Government should retain such land as may be necessary for coaling stations and naval bases.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM—1912.

We reaffirm the position thrice announced by the Democracy in national convention assembled against a policy of imperialism and colonial exploitation in the Philippines or elsewhere. We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder, which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought us weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandonment of the fundamental doctrine of self-government. We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

In recognizing the independence of the Philippines our Government should retain such land as may be necessary for coaling stations and naval bases.

So far as I may speak for myself, so far as I am permitted to speak for my district, in the limited way that I may speak for my party, I hope on this eighteenth anniversary we will proceed to do the actual thing in office that we have promised to do while securing office. No member of the Democratic Party at all mindful of his platform pledge can read or hear read the planks in the platforms just presented without feeling and knowing and understanding that his full duty is to-day to vote for the Philippine independence bill and do it without equivocation, mental reservation, or purposes of evasion.

Every member of the Republican Party who has spoken on this subject to-day is opposed to even naming a day in the future at which they would promise to have our Government withdraw and grant independence to these people. Nearly, if not quite, all of the speakers on the Republican side have been interrogated on the subject, and each and every one of them has refused to name a day, however distant that may be. Can the Republican Party longer travel in the realm of hyprocrisy and assert that they are or ever will be for Philippine independence? Can the remnant of the Republican Party, that have in Illinois descended from Lincoln to Lorimer, in Ohio from McKinley to Taft, and who are still on the toboggan, longer even feign friendship for these people or hold out any hope looking toward the independence of a people who, first, have been promised it; second, are asking for it; and, third, who prize it as their one hope and desire?

We are told around the cloakrooms and corridors that some 28 or 30 Tammany Hall Democrats from New York will to-day join hands with the Republican Party and defeat the Philippine independence bill. I hope this may not be true; but if the Philippine independence bill must die this day, let it be well known and well understood that it was the combination and coalition of a solid Republican Party plus Tammany of which it was born.

Vague charges have been made that the pending bill does not protect capital invested in the islands. On this I enter an emphatic denial of fact; but if it were a fact, I shall not allow the greed of the dollar mark to interfere with or interrupt my efforts and the efforts of my party toward doing full-handed justice and granting full independence to a people whose one wish by day and by night is liberty, freedom, independence, and life. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The opponents of the bill—and I may add, with one exception, in the debate to-day, have all appeared from the Republican side of the Chamber—are saying that they are for independence and freedom for the Philippines "as soon as they are fit for it." This answer was the answer of King George to the American colonists in 1776 when they craved more liberty than they were allowed, when they asked more than they received. Such an answer is the answer that every monarch in power has made since time began to those without power. It shall not be my answer, nor the answer of my party on the eighteenth anniversary of the freedom of the islands from Spanish rule. To make such an answer as the opponents of Philippine independence make here to-day is a hollow mockery and a sham, is an insult to intelligence, is unworthy to be made in behalf of any great political party. To make such an answer is but to blight the glory of a Republic by resorting to stock phrases and practices of monarchies long since banished and destroyed.

We are told that a remnant of the party of Jefferson will to-day join the solid phalanx of the Republican Party and aid in the blasting of promises made and further break faith with a people unable to enforce justice at our hands, but I hope it is not true. We are told that certain of our party will turn deaf ears to the teachings of Jefferson and Lincoln and go groping with strange gods on strange missions in strange lands, but I am hoping that the Democratic Party will to-day on this occasion suffer no such disaster.

We are told by the opponents of Philippine independence from that side of the Chamber "that we shall not haul down the American flag." This is another stock phrase of standpatism borrowed from the monarchs of old and conceived by them, and intended to convey an idea of cowardice, lack of patriotism, or retrenchment from the position of a brave, courageous Republic. I resent such imputations and assert them to be as untrue as they are unfounded, that the Democratic Party or any part of it is lacking in patriotism, courage, bravery, or admiration of the American flag. To lower the flag in cases like this is in the interest of liberty, of justice, of freedom, and of generosity is as honorable as it is courageous. To leave aloft the flag in a foreign land 10,000 miles from the seat of this Government, 7,000 miles from our nearest seaport, to rule over a people unwilling to be governed by us, means imperialism and unwelcome aggression that ought to be unknown and unheard of in a Republic like ours. To allow the flag to remain up longer, after 18 years of earnest, solemn promises that we would withdraw is but the submarining of a Republic, the debauchment of our Constitution, and the derailment of earnest and honest intentions to fulfill every requirement of a republic. You opponents of the bill on the Republican side of the Chamber say, "It shall not be, it will not be; we will not haul down the flag." I answer you that we did haul down the flag in Cuba, and ask is there this day friend or foe who will gainsay the righteousness of our act in so doing?

I present here five brief letters between this Government and Cuba at the time we last "hauled down the flag":

FROM PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT TO PRESIDENT PALMA.

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., May 10, 1902.

To the PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS OF THE REPUBLIC OF CUBA.

SIRS: On the 20th of this month the military governor of Cuba will, by my direction, transfer to you the control and government of the island of Cuba, to be thenceforth exercised under the provisions of the constitution adopted by your constitutional convention as on that day promulgated; and he will thereupon declare the occupation of Cuba by the United States to be at an end.

At the same time I desire to express to you the sincere friendship and good wishes of the United States and our most earnest hopes for the stability and success of your Government, for the blessings of peace, justice, prosperity, and ordered freedom among your people, and for enduring friendship between the Republic of the United States and the Republic of Cuba.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States.

ACCEPTANCE OF THE GOVERNMENT BY PRESIDENT PALMA.

HABANA, May 20, 1902.

Hon. Gen. LEONARD WOOD.

SIR: As President of the Republic of Cuba, I hereby receive the government of the island of Cuba, which you transfer to me in compliance with orders communicated to you by the President of the United States, and take note that by this act the military occupation of Cuba ceases.

I take this solemn occasion, which marks the fulfillment of the honored promise of the Government and people of the United States in regard to the island of Cuba, and in which our country is made a ruling nation, to express to you, the worthy representative of that grand people, the immense gratitude which the people of Cuba feel toward the American Nation, toward its illustrious President, Theodore Roosevelt, and toward you for the efforts you have put forth for the successful accomplishment of such a precious ideal.

T. ESTRADA PALMA.

MESSAGE OF GRATITUDE FROM PRESIDENT PALMA TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

HABANA, May 20, 1902.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
President, Washington:

The government of the island having been just transferred, I, as Chief Magistrate of the Republic, faithfully interpreting the sentiments of the whole people of Cuba, have the honor to send you and the American people testimony of our profound gratitude and the assurance of an enduring friendship, with wishes and prayers to the Almighty for the welfare and prosperity of the United States.

T. ESTRADA PALMA.

FROM SECRETARY ROOT TO PRESIDENT PALMA.

WASHINGTON, May 20, 1902.

PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF CUBA:

Believe in my heartfelt congratulations upon the inauguration of the Republic which the people of Cuba and the people of the United States have fought and labored together to establish. With confidence in your unselfish patriotism and courage and in the substantial civic virtues of your people, I bid you God-speed, and on this happy day wish for Cuba for all time liberty and order, peace and prosperity.

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

FROM PRESIDENT PALMA TO SECRETARY ROOT.

HABANA, May 21, 1902.

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War, Washington:

I am deeply moved by your heartfelt message of congratulation on the inauguration of the Republic of Cuba, to the birth of which the people and the Government of the United States have contributed their blood and treasure. Rest assured that the Cuban people can never forget the debt of gratitude they owe the great Republic, with which we will always cultivate the closest relations of friendship and for the prosperity of which we pray to the Almighty.

T. ESTRADA PALMA.

I pause and ask here, Is there an American with soul so dead who can not and will not appreciate this brave record of magnanimity toward the Cubans and Cuba? Can the prattling words of mad imperialists, speaking for an imperialistic standpat party, dim the glory so justly earned in our brave dealings with Cuba? What glory would we deserve that we would not receive if we treated the Philippines, 10,000 miles away, as we treated Cuba, only a few miles away? What great change has been wrought that would make it a virtue and imperishable glory to haul down the flag in Cuba in 1902 that would make it hypocrisy, pusillanimous, and lacking in patriotism to haul it down in the Philippines to-day? [Applause.]

Again, we are told by you spokesmen of the Republican Party who are to-day fighting with all your might Philippine independence "that we will have another Mexico on our hands," but in all fairness and in all justice there can be no comparison and no analogy between the two. In Mexico less than 2 per cent of the population can read or write and more than 50 per cent are peons and savages, while in the Philippines more than 90 per cent are Christianized and civilized and more than 50 per cent are literate and educated. Between two such countries, I assert, there can be no comparison; between two such countries there can be no analogy. Perhaps an even better way to establish the dissimilarity may be found in the exercise of suffrage. In the Philippine Islands, with less than 10,000,000 people, there were cast at the last election 200,000 votes, while in Mexico, with 15,000,000 people, less than 20,000 votes were cast at the most popular election ever held, when the late Madero was elected President of the Republic of Mexico.

In the Philippines 500,000 children attend the public schools and are being taught the English language. Does that entitle them to be compared with Mexico? Does conduct like this banish their hopes to escape perpetual bondage? Will the Republican Party again turn its back on a people like this? Will you again go on the rocks of standpatism, reaction, and a hovering of big business and the interests? The burdens of conducting a great Government like ours during a world war have been fraught with care and responsibility. This has occasioned many, if not quite all, of the progressives to return to the Republican Party. Still, not waiting for their complete return under your banner, you are again to-day in solid phalanx, fighting liberty, fighting freedom, breaking promises, blasting hopes, and underminnig the most sacred principles of liberty, freedom, and independence of the Republic founded by our forefathers. Why so soon a return to standpatism; why so willing to again begin your efforts of plunder? Is it because your last President's name is seldom if ever spoken, and your preceeding President has even found it necessary to abdicate himself from the party whose commission you now hold? Patriotism, love of country, or duty to country, never was, is not now, or never shall be measured in dollars. Still, it is certainly worthy of a passing glance to observe it as an element in the economic side of this question. The Philippines have already cost this Government the snug sum of $900,000,000 and is costing us annually $50,000,000 more to maintain and uphold. For me and mine, this is the time and place to stop. The Philippines are asking it, and for my part they shall receive it. We have promised them independence for 16 years. I am in favor of doing in office what we promised to do while securing office.

You opponents of Philippine independence may quibble and construe, may falter and object, but I am in favor of doing something tangible, something real, and the passage of this bill through the House to-day, with a President willing to sign it, is an opportunity to really do the exact thing we promised to do. A vote for the Philippine independence bill to-day just as it stands will deliver to the Philippines their independence, the thing that they most desire, and will relieve us of further burdens, a thing the Republic most deserves.

It has been loosely, and I may say lavishly, asserted on this floor and elsewhere that the Philippines themselves do not desire independence. I can not for my own part think such an unfounded statement can be worthy of much serious argument in reply. Everywhere the proof of the falsity of this is so abundant. From the eloquent words of the Resident Commissioner of the islands, whose speech has just electrified this Chamber; from the pen and words of Gov. Gen. Francis Burton Harrison, now governor of the islands, and long an honored Member here; from the words, resolutions, and solemn actions of the Philippine Legislature, all in unison and accord asking for Philippine independence. All this, for my part, seems so sufficient, so convincing, that further comment upon it would seem unnecessary. But above and beyond any words that can be written or spoken stands the life's blood of the approximately 100,000 Filipinos who consecrated their hopes and ambitions and life's blood on the battle field for independence. The proof of their uniform desire for independence is everywhere abundant, is everywhere sufficient, and no Member of this House today can hide behind the flimsy wall of misinformation about it. No one class in the Philippines holds any monopoly of this one stalwart and unswerving desire. It is everywhere present, everywhere earnest, everywhere persistent. I repeat, the Philippines are 10,000 miles from our seat of Government and 7,000 miles from our nearest shore; they are not our kind of people; they are on the other side of the globe from us; their hopes and ambitions are not like ours. Annexation would never be feasible for a country so remotely situated; independence is their earnest desire; it is my opinion that the great bulk of the American people desire them to be independent, and alongside of that they desire to be free from the burden of protecting a country so unlike our own. Let us this day take the last step. Let us break down the last barrier. Let us once and for all do away with this mad quest for territorial aggrandizement and devote our attention to the problems of the Republic that confront us in America.

The opponents of Philippine independence have here to-day and elsewhere asserted that if we did withdraw we would have to maintain a watchful eye over them. I assert that inasmuch as our going would be at their request and solicitation, no longer would watchful care over them be due or expected from us. We could well and in good conscience withdraw our 12,500 soldiers from the islands and bring them home and set them about the task of our coast defense, Alaska, Hawaii, the Panama Canal, and any other problems that do or may confront us. These latter tasks are, for my part, the ones of first importance.

With a world war raging among all the first powers save our own, it is our abundant duty to sweep away the cobwebs of misunderstanding, of doubt, and of danger, and proceed along the same lines as did our fathers, who founded a greater Republic than they knew.

We are told that when the final vote will be taken to-day that every member of the Republican Party on this floor will cast his vote against this Philippine independence bill. We are even told that some 28 or 30 Democrats from New York will join hands with them and aid in the overthrow of the most sacred provision of the Declaration of Independence, wherein it says:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

The remnant of the once proud party of Lincoln may pursue this course to-day; the Tammany Hall Congressmen may turn their backs on their party and its teachings and perform this act of perfidy; but as one whose faith is so unbounded in the party of Jefferson and Wilson, I can not believe it will to-day lend aid and comfort to a policy that is against the first tenets of our Government; that is uneconomic, un-American, unwise; and that does not do even-handed justice from a strong Government to a weaker one! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TOWNER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, whether one is mistaken or not on such a question as this, justice to himself and justice to those who listen might well require more than 10 minutes. After all, however, at this stage of the session, with that which is in front of us, with a program that somebody outside of this House in the main lays down for this House, I am quite willing to rest on 10 minutes to refer to a few things—progress, the location of the Philippines, the population of the Philippines, the religion of the Philippines, the development of the Philippines.

I have no doubt that there are many bright men in the Philippines. I think the gentleman who has just addressed the House [Mr. QUEZON] is perhaps one of the brightest. If they could all be like him, and then if they had two parties there to watch each other, and an intelligent public opinion, I suppose they could get along; but I was down in the Hawaiian Islands about a year ago now, with many gentlemen upon that side and upon this side. Do you recollect what we saw down there in the convict camps? The specimens of the Filipinos that they had there? I have no doubt that there are some good Filipinos there, but what a chance they had if they had remained at home. They were not regarded as a success outside of a convict camp. I am not speaking disrespectfully of them. You recollect it, my Democratic friends who were there.

Gentlemen, I must simply touch and go. Let me reminisce a little bit touching this question. I was a Member of this House, with the present honored Speaker, when the war began, as was said, for the freedom of Cuba; and after it was over the present honored Speaker of this House said, "We Democrats took you Republicans by the scruff of the neck and the seat of the breeches and threw you into that war." [Laughter.] There you are! There was a public sentiment that you could not restrain. As McKinley said and as Reed said when the war commenced, no man could tell the end thereof. But the end came.

Now what happened? Oh, when the treaty of Paris was made and came up for ratification in the Senate of the United States, who ratified it? The Republicans did not have the necessary votes in the Senate. We lacked two of a majority. It took two-thirds to ratify the treaty. What happened? Well, Mr. William Jennings Bryan came to Washington in January, 1899, and secured the Democratic, Populist, and silver votes necessary to ratify that treaty. I will put the vote in the RECORD.

Mr. Gorman (for Mr. Vest) proposed the following amendments to the treaty:

> Article 3, strike out the words "cedes to the United States" and insert in lieu thereof the words "relinquishes all claim of sovereignty over and title to."
> Add at the end of article 3 the following:
> "The United States, desiring that the people of the Archipelago shall be enabled to establish a form of free government suitable to their condition and securing the rights of life, liberty, and property and the preservation of order and equal rights therein, assumes for the time being and to end aforesaid the control of the Archipelago, so far as such control shall be needful for the purposes above stated, and will provide that the privileges accorded to Spain by articles 4 and 5 of this treaty shall be enjoyed."

Those who voted in the affirmative were: Messrs. Bacon, Bate, Berry, Caffery, Chilton, Clay, Cockrell, Daniel, Gorman, Hale, Heitfeld, Hoar, Jones of Arkansas, Jones of Nevada, Kenney, McLaurin, Martin, Mills, Mitchell, Money, Murphy, Pasco, Pettigrew, Rawlins, Roach, Smith, Tillman, Turley, Turner, and Vest.

Those who voted in the negative were: Messrs. Aldrich Allen, Allison, Baker, Burrows, Butler, Carter, Chandler, Clark, Cullom, Davis, Deboe, Elkins, Fairbanks, Faulkner, Foraker, Frye, Gallinger, Gear, Gray, Hanna, Hansbrough, Harris, Hawley, Kyle, Lindsay, Lodge, McBride, McEnery, McMillan, Mantle, Mason, Morgan, Nelson, Penrose, Perkins, Pettus, Platt of Connecticut, Platt of New York, Pritchard, Quay, Ross, Sewell, Shoup, Simon, Spooner, Stewart, Sullivan, Teller, Thurston, Warren, Wellington, and Wolcott.

The vote on the ratification of the treaty was as follows:

Yeas: Messrs. Aldrich, Allen, Allison, Baker, Burrows, Butler, Carter, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Cullom, Davis, Deboe, Elkins, Fairbanks, Faulkner, Foraker, Frye, Gallinger, Gear, Gray, Hanna, Hansbrough, Harris, Hawley, Jones of Nevada, Kenney, Kyle, Lindsay, Lodge, McBride, McEnery, McLaurin, McMillan, Mantle, Mason, Morgan, Nelson, Penrose, Perkins, Pettus, Platt of Connecticut, Platt of New York, Pritchard, Quay, Ross, Sewell, Shoup, Simon, Spooner, Stewart, Sullivan, Teller, Thurston, Warren, Wellington, and Wolcott.

Nays: Bacon, Bate, Berry, Caffery, Chilton, Cockrell, Daniel, Gorman, Hale, Heitfeld, Hoar, Jones of Arkansas, Mallory, Martin, Mills, Mitchell, Money, Murphy, Pascoe, Pettigrew, Rawlins, Roach, Smith, Tillman, Turley, Turner, and Vest.

On neither vote did the Republicans have a majority of those voting. Thirty-nine Republicans, 8 Democrats, and 6 Populists and Silver Senators defeated the Vest amendment; 39 Republicans, 10 Democrats, and 8 Populists and Silver Senators ratified the treaty.

Senator Hoar and Senator Hale voted against it from beginning to end.

The Philippines were ceded to the United States. Porto Rico was ceded to the United States. The Treasury paid $20,000,000, and this Government made certain guaranties as to what it would do for the Philippines—the protection of property, freedom of religion, and so forth. When Senator Vest offered his amendment, which I put in the RECORD, he said, "We want you to relinquish," and that amendment to the treaty was to relinquish the Philippines, just as Spain relinquished Cuba. But Spain ceded the Philippines, and the United States paid Spain $20,000,000. We paid, not because we thought we were getting something valuable. We knew then that from the Equator up to 20° north of the Equator there were a people who were not homogeneous. We knew that they had slavery. We knew that they had polygamy. We knew that the Moro was there, and the Moro in cruelty and perhaps in fixity of character can give the Filipinos cards and spades and then win.

Well, there they are. What progress have they made? Our teachers went there. Our people of various churches went there. The United States sent the Army there. We sent our money there that we appropriated. We gave assistance from every standpoint, and I put it here and now to you gentlemen who have been in the Philippine Islands that there has been greater progress—you boast of your progress in education—there has been greater progress from a material standpoint in the development of the Philippines, in the building of roads and railroads, in commerce, and in production in 18 years since we acquired the Philippines than there had been in any previous century. If I recollect aright, Spain had possession there for nearly three centuries. Well, what are you kicking about? The lives of hundreds and thousands of men in our Army were sacrificed before we could get a chance to have a start. Was not Aguinaldo quite the equal of my friend Mr. QUEZON, the gentleman who made this eloquent speech a little while ago? I guess so. Some of his followers fought and fought and fought. I will ask my friend, and he may answer in his own time, or somebody for him, are you not glad that Aguinaldo was overthrown? Are you not glad that this progress has been made?

Well, but they say we want to go now. We want to go! Liberty, liberty, liberty! These words are misleading until you have a population that is so educated as to be capable of self-government; it takes several generations to obtain in an undeveloped country an average population that understands what liberty is. We have heard the same cry in Mexico—Liberty, liberty, liberty! Why, we can produce from Mexico, from Cuba, from the South American Republics—aye, I was going to say from Haiti—just as eloquent appeals for liberty. I suspect that Toussaint L'Ouverture——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Mr. Chairman, that was a very short 10 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. How much time would the gentleman like?

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to take time from anybody else.

Mr. TOWNER. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Bryan furnished the votes to ratify the treaty. What did he do then? That was in 1900. He wanted an issue, and he got it—imperialism. Twenty million dollars furnished the issue. Then he came out and wrote it into the platform—imperialism. Take your last platform of 1912. I wish you would read it. I will put it in the RECORD, for you have forgotten it, and if your cheeks do not mantle with shame when you propose to play scuttle in the Philippines, I will give you a certificate of hardened conscience. [Laughter and applause.]

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM, 1912.

THE PHILIPPINES.

We reaffirm the position thrice announced by the Democracy in national convention assembled against a policy of imperialism and colonial exploitation in the Philippines or elsewhere. We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought us weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandonment of the fundamental doctrine of self-government. We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

In recognizing the independence of the Philippines our Government should retain such land as may be necessary for coaling stations and naval bases.

I understood the commissioner to say that a Republic could not be successful in colonization. Well, we have done pretty well in this country. We have stretched across from one ocean to another, from 3,000,000 people to 100,000,000 people. We stretch from the northern boundary down to the Gulf, and we have half of the railway mileage of the world. We think we amount to considerable.

Say, are you braver and more intelligent on the average than the American Indian? The American Indians were brave people; some with Indian blood in their veins are now Members of this House. Are you more intelligent or braver than they? And yet failure, failure, failure. Great heavens, if bravery and intelligence were all that was necessary, the American Indian would be here yet occupying this country and we would not be here. [Laughter and applause.] Ajax defied the lightning. Well, if Ajax ever lived, he is dead. [Laughter.] The vocal cords contract and words come forth and then that side of the House cheers. [Laughter.]

Oh, gentlemen, do you propose to organize a republic? Does my friend from the Philippine Islands have ambition to be a monarch? If he has not, there are some other people that live in the Philippines that have. Does he want a privileged class? You have never had any in your political government until the United States went there. What progress did you make for three centuries? You had the disadvantage of being under the Tropics, not as good a place to develop and maintain a civilization as a republic 20° north has in the North and South Temperate Zones. And yet you say you want to cut loose.

There is one little clause here in the Clarke amendment, and what did you put it there for?

In any such settlement or adjustment so made in respect to the rights and property of the United States as against the said Philippines the President may reserve or acquire such lands and rights and privileges appurtenant thereto as may, in his judgment, be required by the United States for naval bases and coaling stations within the territory of said Philippines.

Does "may" mean "shall"? Let me turn to our own people, and by our own people I mean citizens of this Republic. Does it mean "shall": do you want it to mean "shall"? I would ask the Commissioner, representing, as he does so ably, the Philippine Islands. Does he approve of it? Do you want a great and powerful Republic with a naval station there? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the chairman of the committee, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT].

[Mr. DAVENPORT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I now yield on behalf of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this bill, including the Clarke amendment. Indeed, I have but one objection to the bill, and that is, that it does not provide for the immediate freedom of the Philippine Islands. If I had the power I would provide for the withdrawal of our sovereignty without a day's delay longer than is necessary to effect all the formalities. However, we can not all get just what we want in legislation, and inasmuch as this bill does fix a definite time for our withdrawal, I cordially approve it.

In my view we ought never to have taken over the islands. We ought never to have governed them as a colony, and we ought long ago to have given them their independence. Their retention as colonies is a blot upon our national history—a blot that has been mitigated by a benevolent rule, but a blot nevertheless, because our government of them without their consent is violative of the most sacred traditions of this country, and at the same time it is violative of every right of the Filipinos themselves.

SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Our Declaration of Independence provides, among other things:

That to secure these rights (the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness) governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government.

We established this right of self-government by the sword in our war for independence. We put it in our Constitution. We have enacted it into all our laws, and during a period of more than a hundred years of our history this principle of self-government was considered by all our people to be the most sacred right of civilized man. It has been the polestar, the guiding light of all our governmental institutions. It separated us from monarchy and the divine right of kings. It has been the watchword of our freedom. But for it we never would have become a great Nation. This principle of self-government, established by our forefathers, has given to humanity everywhere a new faith and a new hope. Other great nations have taken it up from time to time, and the principle has grown throughout the world. It ought never to die because it is right. Under the influence of this principle our country grew from a very few scattering colonies into one of the greatest nations of the earth. We committed an error in taking these islands. We committed an error in making a colony of them contrary to our principles and traditions. We made an error in keeping them as long as we have kept them; but let us correct now the error by restoring to them their freedom, and thus remove from our country's history that stain that has been placed upon it by their subjugation and retention.

HISTORY.

The resolution declaring war with Spain passed Congress on April 20, 1898. On April 16 Senator Teller, from Colorado, offered an amendment to the resolution, which was afterwards adopted, which amendment is as follows:

The United States hereby disclaims any disposition or inclination to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island—Cuba—except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control of the islands to its people.

At that time Congress was overwhelmingly Republican in both branches. Senator Teller was a Republican from Colorado. Of course, at that time it was not dreamed that the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico would be separated from Spain in the same manner that we separated Cuba, but the fortunes of war brought that about, and when the treaty of peace was finally adopted on February 6, 1899, and finally ratified by both Governments on April 11, 1899, Spain ceded Cuba, the Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico to the United States. A comparatively nominal sum paid for all three was $20,000,000. The consideration is only mentioned in the Philippine article, but everyone knows that Spain had no money, and the $20,000,000 in gold secured the whole treaty. We got the same title to Cuba that we got to the Philippines and to Porto Rico. The consideration was the same. We had to pacify all of the islands. As soon as Cuba was pacified, we restored it, because of the Teller resolution, but immediately the Republican Party took the position that the Philippines stood in a different attitude. Of course, everybody knows that the principle was exactly the same, and no one can doubt that if Congress had believed that the Philippines would fall into our hands as the result of the war, they, too, would have been included in the Teller resolution. Our taking possession of the Philippines was not peaceful. After Spain had yielded her sovereignty over the islands we found a revolution already going on. They had been fighting against Spain for some time for their independence, and they continued to fight us after the Spanish treaty, and it took several years for our troops to subjugate the islands.

The Philippines were at first governed by the military power of the United States. In the meantime a great controversy had arisen in this country over the disposition of the Philippines. The Democratic Party declared in favor of giving them their independence. The Republican Party opposed this proposition. The treaty of peace with Spain, by which we acquired the Philippines, was secured by the Republican Party with the help of eight Democrats. The Senate was overwhelmingly Republican, and the treaty received the votes of 49 Republicans and 8 Democrats. The noes were 24 Democrats and 3 Republicans. The reason for the position of the Democrats was they did not believe in taking over the Philippines. The fight became so warm that the Republican Party was unwilling to proclaim boldly its intention of permanently holding the islands. They wanted to do then just what they desire to do now, to postpone the matter with the hope of permanently retaining them without committing their party to that policy. Not long after the war closed a resolution of intention was passed the Republican Senate, thus committing the Republican Party in the Senate to such resolution. The resolution is as follows:

That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands in the citizenship of the United States, nor does it intend permanently to annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States; but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the needs and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands and to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interest of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands.

This resolution passed the Senate on February 14, 1899, but did not pass in the House. The Democrats in the Senate tried in vain to amend the above resolution so that the said islands should not be governed against the will of the people thereof, but all amendments were voted down by the Republicans, and the resolution passed the Senate as above stated.

On April 7, 1900, President McKinley appointed the Philippine Commission, consisting of five members. Mr. Taft was made the president of this commission, and Gen. Luke E. Wright, of Memphis, my warm personal friend, and one of the ablest men in the country, was one of the commissioners. When this commission first went to the Philippines its powers and authority was somewhat vague, the military power claiming precedence; but afterwards Mr. Taft was appointed civil governor and Gen. Wright vice governor, and the commission actually governed the island. Later on Filipinos were appointed on the commission, and during the administration of President Wilson changes in the commission have been made, so that now a majority of the commission are Filipinos. However, the Governor General is still an American and really rules for the United States. From time to time the Filipinos have been given larger powers in their own government. Congress gave them the right to have their own general assembly, and provided that the commission above named should be the higher branch of the Philippine Legislature, the commission, the Congress, and the President having the right of veto. Our Government has at all times kept a considerable body of troops, ordinarily ranging from 12,000 to 18,000, in the islands to protect them. In addition to the United States troops, Congress has established an organization known as the Philippine Scouts, amounting to about 5,700 in number, commanded for the most part by American officers, but the enlisted men made up of Filipinos, and all paid for by the United States.

From time to time Congress has authorized the issuance of bonds by the Philippine government, and it also authorized the Philippine government to guarantee certain railroad bonds for the building of certain railroads in the islands. All these bonds, I am informed, amount in the aggregate to $16,125,000. Many of these bonds are held in this country.

We derive no taxes from the Philippine Islands. We have spent many millions of dollars in fortifying their coasts and improving their harbors. We pay our soldiers, officers, and men large sums—20 per cent, as extra pay for services in those islands.

OUR RULE KINDLY AND BENEFICIAL TO THE FILIPINOS.

I am wholly opposed to the retention of the Philippine Islands, as I have before stated; but it is fair to say that for the most part our rule in the islands has been beneficent. We have been peculiarly fortunate in the selection of American commissioners to rule over the islands. Mr. Taft was first, and made much of his great reputation there as Governor General. Gen. Luke E. Wright was the second, and Americans and Filipinos still remember with pleasure and pride his firm but splendid rule in the islands. Much of our success in the control of the islands has been due to his kindly but firm, able and masterly conduct of our affairs there. Lately we have had as Governor General of the islands one of our former distinguished Members of this House, an able and delightful gentleman, the Hon. Burton Harrison.

During the 16 years we have held the islands we have restored order among them. We have given them a good government and an honest government. We have aided them in securing better methods of agriculture. We have aided them in building up their railroads and roads. We have aided them in building public buildings. We have aided them in building public schools. We have aided them in building public schoolhouses, and furnishing additional educational facilities. We have given them a good banking and currency system, and in a thousand different ways have added to the prosperity and happiness of the people of those islands. We have treated them well. We have treated them as the wards of the Nation, but still we have not given them their freedom. The Constitution does not follow our flag there. The right of local self-government is denied them. They do not have the right to govern themselves, and they want to be free and independent—just as we are—and I believe they are entitled to be free and independent.

ATTITUDE OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

The attitude of the Republican Party toward the islands has remained the same throughout. That party was in power when the United States took over the islands, subjugated them, and furnished them with a form of government that was not territorial but provincial. In other words, the Republican Party has governed them as a colony. In doing this it disregarded the principle of self-government, for which our forefathers fought and in which most Americans believe now. It has never taken a straight-out stand on this question. The heretofore-quoted resolution of the Senate was a subterfuge. It meant nothing and was not intended to mean anything. In its national platform of 1900 it provided that the Philippines should be given—

The just measure of self-government consistent with their welfare and our duties shall be secured to them by law.

In 1904 it laid down as one of the achievements of the party that it had taken possession of the Philippines and established law and order and had given a "large measure" of self-government to the people of these islands. In its platform of 1908 it provided:

The Philippine insurrection has been suppressed, law established, and life and property made secure. Education and practical experience are there advancing the capacity of the people for government, and the policy of McKinley and Roosevelt is leading the inhabitants step by step to an ever-increasing home rule.

In 1912 the Republican Party platform ratified its previous utterances on that subject. In other words, even the Republican Party has never declared in terms in favor of holding these islands and governing them as a colony. If we judge from the resolution of the Senate above referred to, the utterances of its leaders, and the platform of that party, its object has been at all times to prepare the Filipinos for self-government and give it to them, whenever they were capable of using it. That is that party's professed attitude. Its real attitude is to hold the islands indefinitely as colonies, and the only reason it does not come out and say so is because it fears the American people.

ATTITUDE OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

On the other hand, the Democratic Party has consistently stood for our historic traditions and principles. It has stood for the Constitution. It fought the taking over of the islands. It has opposed the keeping of the Philippines as a colony. It was opposed to the ratification of the treaty taking them over. It fought in vain to commit our Government to stand by the principles of local self-government in dealing with the islands. It opposed the bill which provided originally for their government, and even this bill, passed by a Republican House and a Republican Senate and signed by a Republican President, shows on its face that it was a "temporary" only. In its platform of 1900 it denounced the Philippine policy of the then Republican administration. It declared:

The Filipinos can not be citizens without endangering our civilization; they can not be subjects without imperiling our own form of government, and as we are not willing to surrender our civilization nor to convert the Republic into an Empire, we favor the immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to give the Filipinos, first, a stable form of government; second, independence; and, third, protection from outside interference.

In the Democratic platform of 1904 it again declared that—

We ought to do for the Philippines what we have already done for the Cubans and set the Filipino people upon their feet, free and independent to work out their own destiny.

In 1908 this position was again set forth. In 1912 it is provided in the Democratic platform:

We favor the immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

It will be thus seen that the attitude of the Democratic Party has always been, and still is, that we should make those islands free and allow them to govern themselves, just as Cuba governs itself.

Mr. Chairman, the time has come when we can establish a stable form of government in those islands. Every fair-minded man knows that. Those people are not a barbarous people. They are capable of governing themselves. It is time to quit our subterfuges. The Democratic Party at all events has made an agreement with the people of the United States to give the Filipinos their freedom. It is our solemn duty to carry out that agreement. We write ourselves down as insincere if we do not do it. For 16 or more years we have been charging our Republican friends with saying one thing and meaning another on this subject, and I believe our charges are true. But now that we are in power if we do not carry out our solemn pledges we put our own party in the same attitude as the Republican Party now sustains.

ARE THEY CAPABLE OF SELF-GOVERNMENT?

I have never been to the Philippines. Therefore I can not speak of my personal knowledge. The only ones that I know are those who have come over here, and I must say that these are very intelligent men. According to the census of 1903 the population of the islands was about 7,600,000. Of these, 6,900,000 were classified as civilized. In other words, there were a little less than 4 per cent of them savages. Of the civilized tribes more than 50 per cent of them above 10 years of age could read and write. In the Tagalog Provinces it is claimed that literacy is highest, and that there is something over 70 per cent of the population above 10 years of age who could read and write before the American occupation, and, of course, this percentage has been largely increased.

The University of St. Joseph and the University of St. Thomas, both in Manila, are universities of a high order, with a large number of students. As far back as 1866 the Spanish school statistics show there had been established 1,674 Government schools which were attended by over 230,000 boy and girl students. In that year there were 1,681 matriculates at the University of St. Thomas alone. Even then there were five colleges devoted to the education of women. There was an agricultural college, and a nautical college, and a school of painting, sculpture, and engraving, and a military academy, together with nine other colleges, and six high-grade latin schools located in various parts of the islands. Since the American occupation there has been a wonderful increase in educational facilities and in school attendance. For 10 years there has been a public-school enrollment of about 500,000. In 1911 this ran up to over 600,000. The total number of public schools last year was about 4,500 with over 9,000 teachers, of whom 8,400, or 92 per cent, were Filipinos.

It will thus be seen that from a standpoint of learning that these people are certainly capable of self-government. There is a wrong notion in the public mind over here in reference to this. We are wont to believe that they are a people, none of whom are more than partially civilized, and most of whom are barbarous. This is entirely incorrect.

While the Filipinos have been ruled as a subject people for more than 300 years by Spain, and since that time have been ruled by the United States, still, that of itself does not mean that they can not conduct their own affairs. There were Filipino representatives in the Spanish Cortes. There have been Filipino delegates to the American Congress, and surely these have conducted themselves in an able manner to the knowledge of us all. A majority of the present Philippine Commission is composed of Filipinos. The lower house of the Legislature of the Philippine government is composed mostly of Filipinos. Their judges, the heads of their municipalities, are mostly Filipinos. The fact that they have always been ruled as a province is no reason that they are not capable of ruling themselves. Who would say that Canada or Australia could not rule themselves, and yet they have been subject provinces for hundreds of years.

AMERICA FIRST.

But whatever our duties and responsibilities toward the Filipinos may be, our first duty is toward America. We have built up the greatest Government in the world, and we have the most remarkable people under the sun. We have strengthened our Government and increased the happiness and prosperity of our people by clinging with a death-like grip to certain immortal principles. One of these is the right of self-government. We won our independence on this principle from a nation that held us just like we now hold the Philippines. Ever since that eventful day when we secured our freedom the word "colony" has had a hateful meaning to us. It still has that meaning. Though the Republican Party took over the islands and has ruled them as a colony, still it has never defended the principle of colonization in its platforms. It has never dared to declare against local self-government. In the laws which they have put on the statute books about these people they have declared on the face of such laws that they were merely "temporary." All of which goes to show that, irrespective of party, the American people are opposed to colonies. Of course the Democratic Party has at all times opposed the making of colonies out of the Philippines. The Philippine Islands were taken by accident. The war was fought on account of Cuba. We took Cuba over, just like we did the Philippines. The Philippines were taken over merely as an incident to taking over Cuba. We gave Cuba her freedom after the formation of a stable government there, and we ought to have long ago done the same thing for the Philippines. I take it, however, that the only reason the Republican Party ever parted with Cuba was because of the celebrated resolution of Senator Teller, above referred to. Senator Teller was an independent Republican. By his resolution our country was pledged to restore Cuba to the Cubans. The pledge did not in words cover the Philippines, and though the principle was the same, the Republican Party held on to the Philippines. I doubt if there is a man in this country who would openly proclaim that he was in favor of forever keeping the Philippines. Many who are interested, directly or indirectly, say that they are in favor of holding them until such a time as they shall be ready for their freedom, and they are the judges as to when they will be ready. This is not living up to the American ideals and American traditions. Do not let us ever go back on these ideals and traditions. They have made us what we are. Let us stand by them in good faith. Already we have deferred the matter too long. We ought to act at the earliest possible moment, and the earlier the better.

COST TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

But leaving aside the questions of a policy of colonies, contrary to American traditions and ideals and human rights, let us look to the business side of this proposition.

What do they cost us, and what do we make out of them? Since we took the islands over our trade has increased with them. Prior to 1898 we did not sell to the Philippines much over $100,000 worth of goods per year. Since we took them we have largely increased our sales. The figures for the last 11 years are as follows:

1905	$6,000,000
1906	5,000,000
1907	8,000,000
1908	11,000,000
1909	11,000,000
1910	16,000,000
1911	19,000,000
1912	23,000,000
1913	25,000,000
1914	27,000,000
1915	24,000,000

Generally speaking, our imports from the islands were about the same.

Prior to 1898 our imports were about half what they have been since we took them over. I append the exact figures on this matter as a part of my remarks.

The profits on these goods could hardly be in excess of 10 per cent. In other words, the amount that the people of the United States make is $2,500,000 per year at the present time. However, taking the last 16 years that we have owned the islands, the amount would be much smaller and not average over a million dollars in profits per year. This is the credit side of the balance. What is the debit side?

It is hard to estimate. In 1902 Senator Hoar estimated that the islands had cost us up to that time something like $600,000,000 in all. My recollection is he produced a report from the Secretary of War, Mr. Root, showing that the cost in his department alone then amounted to some $132,000,000. So that the House may understand just what they cost us, I am going to mention a few items. The first is, we keep on the islands an average of 15,000 soldiers, officers and men. This amounts to about $18,000,000 a year, because, on an average, it costs a million dollars per thousand soldiers per year, and then 20 per cent increase for Philippine service. The appropriations for fortifications on the islands cost us about $1,000,000 per year. We have 5,700 Filipino troops over there, which is about $6,000,000 more. It is generally assumed that the cost of that part of our Naval Establishment used for the protection of the islands is equally as great or greater than the cost of our Army over there.

If these estimates are correct, the islands cost not a cent less than $50,000,000 a year. If Senator Hoar was correct in 1902 in his estimate of the cost at $600,000,000, and they have cost us $50,000,000 a year since that time, the islands up to this time have cost us $1,300,000,000 and have paid us not exceeding $16,000,000. The cost on the one side of the balance sheet, Mr. Chairman, is thirteen hundred million of dollars and on the credit side of the sheet only sixteen million—a ratio of 16 to 1,300. What a travesty on business. And yet our Republican friends say they only are business men. The result is, this is certainly a bad proposition we have got into and we ought to turn it loose at the earliest possible moment.

Let us take that $50,000,000 a year, and, if necessary, increase our Navy for our own protection at home, or build up roads, or build up the agricultural interests of our country.

Again, it is not believed by anyone that our trade will decrease a dollar because of our giving them their independence. The chances are that we will trade with them more than we have ever before. England does not own them, and yet England's trade with the Philippines amounts vastly to more than ours. We could expend this $50,000,000 a year much better by building a merchant marine to do business with them than we could by throwing it away upon governing them as colonies. With this $50,000,000 used in our own country we could do any one of several things that would be of vast interest to all our people.

First, we might build up a merchant marine. My recollection is Secretary McAdoo did not ask for this much in the merchant-marine bill that was offered last year.

Or, in the next place, we could establish a rural-credits system with Government aid through which the farmers could get their money at not exceeding 5 per cent.

Or, in the next place, we could build up a great system of highways. The bill that we have just passed in the House provides for only $25,000,000. We would be enabled to double that sum without an extra dollar of expense.

Or, in the next place, we could double the amount now appropriated for agriculture. The present Agricultural bill carries about $25,000,000. We could double that sum for the lasting good of the farmers of our country.

Or, with that sum we could build up a splendid system of national colleges by which the boys of our country could be given military training or vocational training to fit them for the needs of defense of our country and to fit them for the ordinary affairs of life.

Or, with one-third of that sum we could build a Government nitrate plant which would reduce the cost of fertilizer to all of our farmers.

A LIABILITY.

But the greatest objection to keeping the Philippines is that they are a constant menace to us. They are 8,000 miles away. They are so situated as to be an easy prey to any first-class country that we happened to get into trouble with. I do not mean to say that any first-class country could take them and keep them, for I do not believe that any nation under the sun could take them away from us and keep them unless we agree to it; and I for one would never be willing to let any nation take them away from us; but it would cost countless thousands of millions of dollars to regain them if they were taken, and, of course, every red-blooded American would fight to hold them, and then we would have a liability on our hands, just as we have now. They are the kind of people that could never become amalgamated with ours. They are not satisfied with our government, and in justice to them and in justice to ourselves we ought to pass this bill and give them their freedom.

THIS BILL.

This bill is, in short, a reenactment of our Constitution and the best of our laws for the benefit of the islands. They already have a legislative body like ours. This will enable them to have a senate like ours, and later on an executive like ours, and all of their own choosing. When we shall have passed this bill we will have done our full duty by the islands. We have established a stable government for them. We have educated them in a larger measure than they have been educated before. We have given them the advantages of American ideals and American institutions. We have shown them how to govern themselves. If they do it wisely and well, as I believe that they will, they have the opportunity of building up a great nation in these far-off islands. There is no reason why they should not do so, and, at any rate, we ought to give them the opportunity and bid them Godspeed.

Fifty years ago no man dreamed that the Japanese people would build up a great empire in that little islands off the coast of Asia, but when the came in contact with European and western civilization they came to themselves and have built up a great civilization of their own and a great empire of their own. The Filipinos are largely of the same stock, and there is no reason why, if given the opportunity, they can not do for themselves just what Japan has done for herself, and I sincerely hope they will.

EXPORTATION OF COTTON GOODS FROM UNITED STATES TO THE PHILIPPINES.

But it is argued that our cotton-goods trade would be injured by our withdrawal from the islands. The statistics show we have exported cotton goods to the islands for the past five years, as follows:

1911	$4,195,665
1912	6,613,682
1913	7,481,456
1914	6,481,734
1915	8,135,809

This is a considerable item, of course, but why should we lose any of this trade? Indeed, it should be added to rather than subtracted from by giving them their freedom. They would be all the more desirous of trading with us.

EXPORTATION OF COTTON GOODS FROM ENGLAND TO THE PHILIPPINES.

England sold cotton goods to the Philippines in the following amounts:

1909	$3,500,000
1910	3,500,000
1911	3,500,000
1912	2,300,000
1913	2,335,000
1914	2,325,000

These figures show that American exportation of cotton goods to the islands has increased and England has fallen off. Why? Not because of our sovereignty, but because the tariff was taken off of American cotton goods. If these islands were given their freedom, it would not interfere with this tariff law; but if the islands enacted a tariff law it will operate against England just as it will operate against this country. If they have no tariff on cotton goods, Americans will continue to sell the islands their cotton goods. It is a question of tariff and not a question of sovereignty.

ARMY AND NAVY COST.

But it is claimed that we ought not to consider the additional cost of Army and Navy because we would have and bear that cost any way. Of course this reasoning is fallacious. We only have need for an Army for defense. If the 15,000 soldiers now in the Philippines were here in the United States and did not have to defend the Philippine Islands, we would have just that much less need for increasing our Army. Indeed, we could get along with a much smaller Army because the Philippines is where we have the largest need for a standing army.

And so about our Navy. As long as we are obliged to keep a part of our Navy around the Philippine Islands to defend them we have just that much less Navy to defend our own country. The power of a Navy is its ability to mobilize quickly. So that, if it were possible to have all our Navy along the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast, where we could get through the Panama Canal from the one side to the other, our power on the seas would be much greater. As long as it is divided, one part in one hemisphere and a part in another hemisphere, we are vastly weakened. Nothing could add to the strength of our Navy like our having it around our own country.

BONDS.

It is claimed, however, that the government in the Philippines has been allowed to issue about $16,000,000 worth of bonds, and Americans have bought many of these bonds, and if the islands are turned loose the value of the bonds will be depreciated. In the first place, these bonds were bought by the investors with the statute staring them in the face that the government that issued them was "temporary." In the next place, I am informed that these bonds were bought, some of them, as low as 60 cents on the dollar. All our Government did was to guarantee the interest. There is a provision in the bill under which these matters can be adjusted, and no doubt they will be adjusted. Surely, however, these kinds of claims should not keep our Government from doing the right thing, the thing it is bound in honor to do, namely, to give the Filipinos their independence. It would be better for the United States Government to pay all of these bonds rather than to pay $49,000,000 expenses for keeping the islands. Of course the bondholders can not expect this Government to pay these bonds, but the Government ought to make the bondholders whole, and I have no doubt it will do so.

We made an express pledge to the Cubans and gave them their freedom, though only about 25 per cent of them were able to read and write when we gave them their government, and when they were not by nature as capable of government as the Filipinos. Our implied pledge to the Filipinos is just as strong. Let us carry it out like Americans. It will be best for Americans and best for the Filipinos.

NEUTRALIZATION OF THE ISLANDS.

Before these islands are turned over by the President I feel absolutely sure that treaties will be entered into with at least Japan, Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia guaranteeing the integrity of the islands. That is a matter for the treaty-making powers, and I have full confidence that it will be done. With this done and the good start we have already given them, there is no reason why these people should not soon become one of the great nations of the East.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR].

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I have already addressed the House upon this subject some few weeks ago, but being the only member of the Committee on Insular Affairs from the Pacific coast and knowing the feeling of the people of that section of the country, I feel that I would be remiss in my duty if I let this debate go by without raising my voice in protest against this Clarke amendment. That is the question that is before us, and in connection with this matter I wish to read into the RECORD a letter from Mr. Zera Snow, a distinguished attorney of my city, one of the leading members of the Oregon bar, and a lifelong Democrat—a man for whose opinion I have very great respect. Mr. Snow spent several months in the Orient last year, and I wrote him a few months ago asking his opinion on the question of Philippine independence. This is his reply:

PORTLAND, OREG., January 25, 1916.

DEAR MR. MCARTHUR: You have asked me to state my views on the Philippine question, including the proposition now before Congress to confer independence upon the Filipino people.

Whatever I may say on this question should be prefaced with the statement that personally I am and always have been in favor of abandoning the islands to the people of the Philippines, giving them absolute and uncontrolled sway, regardless of whether or not they made a success of the venture in self-government, whenever it can be known for a certainty that the majority of the people as a whole desire this. By the Filipino people I mean, of course, all the people inhabiting the islands—not alone the Tagalog race. The difficulty, of course, and this is the most serious question of the problem, is to determine whether a majority of the people desire such independence. One swallow never made a summer, and therefore because there may be among the people a desire to undertake the problem of self-government it does not follow by any means that a majority of the people desire this.

I visited the islands last September for pleasure and spent approximately one week at Manila. Both going and coming from the islands and while there I talked with anybody and everybody who would talk upon the question, but more particularly I talked with the American contingent, which it may be said is almost a unit against independence.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MCARTHUR. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. From whom is the gentleman quoting? I was not present when he began to read.

Mr. MCARTHUR. I am quoting Mr. Zera Snow, one of the leading Democratic lawyers of Oregon. His letter continues:

I do not hesitate to say that, in my opinion, the Filipino people are, on the whole, unable of successfully maintaining self-government in the islands, and I have very grave doubts whether the more educated classes, as a whole, really desire independence, nor have they very distinct views upon the question, or what independence may mean to them. I have no doubt that prior to the present European war there was quite a local sentiment among the people—I do not mean to say, by any means, a majority—for independence, but, in my opinion, the results of the European war have very greatly shaken their faith in the proposition for independence. In my opinion the people are much better off under the present system of government than they would be with the burden of self-government. When Mr. ——— remarked to me what his people wanted was more liberty, I stated to him that the people were having all the liberty which I had in my Territorial days, and unquestionably they have. If I were a Member of Congress called upon to vote upon this question to-day, I should unhesitatingly vote against independence, though whenever I became satisfied that the majority of the people desired it, I should give it to them; but at the present time I can not see that this is their desire, and for this reason I would not force it upon them. Independence would be an easy method of getting rid of a bad bargain, but at the same time a most shameful one under the present conditions.

I found great dissatisfaction existing with the course of the present local administration of the islands, arising in part, no doubt, by the unsettled condition of affairs which the project of possible independence has engendered, and in part by what is supposed to have been mistakes of Gov. Gen. Harrison. I did not learn the details of these supposed mistakes, but I attribute them very largely to the factional feeling arising between Republicans and Democrats. I can well understand how a new man in the islands might make mistakes. I would not visit the mistake, however, with the condemnation which I found the local American sentiment was inclined to impose upon the governor.

In closing I may say that the uncertainty of whether independence is or is not to be conferred is most injurious to the prosperity of the islands. The question should be settled once and for all immediately, and, being settled, should not be opened up again.

I am,

Very cordially, yours,

ZERA SNOW.

Hon. CLIFTON N. MCARTHUR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to note that the President has recently reversed his position on the question of Philippine independence. In a lecture on "Constitutional government in the United States," delivered before the students of Columbia University in 1908, Mr. Wilson said:

Self-government is not a mere form of institutions, to be had when desired if only proper pains be taken. It is a form of character. It follows upon the long discipline which gives a people self-possession, self-mastery, the habit of order and peace and common counsel, and a reverence for law which will not fail when they themselves become the makers of law—the steadiness and self-control of political maturity. And these things can not be had without long discipline.

We can give the Filipinos constitutional government, a government which they may count upon to be just, a government based upon some clear and equitable understanding, intended for their good and not for our aggrandizement; but we must for the present ourselves supply that government. * * * But we can not give them self-government. Self-government is not a thing that can be "given" to any people, because it is a form of character and not a form of constitution. No people can be "given" the self-control of maturity. Only a long apprenticeship of obedience can secure them the precious possession, a thing no more to be bought than given. * * *

We of all people in the world should know these fundamental things and should act upon them, if only to illustrate the mastery in politics which belongs to us of hereditary right. To ignore them would be not only to fail and fail miserably, but to fail ridiculously and to belie ourselves.

Mr. Chairman, the people of the Pacific coast are not in favor of this policy of scuttle as proposed by the Clarke amendment.

When the Spanish-American War broke out our regiments went to the Philippines and many of our soldiers were killed in battle. We have paid for the Philippines with our money and the blood of our soldiers, and I say that to turn them over to their own destruction now would be a course of national infamy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back five minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute of time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing an address made by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] on the unveiling of a tablet at Trenton, N. J., marking the site of the seventh capital of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WATSON). The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing an address delivered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] on the occasion referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I regard the Clarke amendment in exactly the same light that I would regard a proposition to give the Filipinos immediate independence. It is inconceivable that in two years' time, and especially after this legislation has become a law, the condition of the Philippine Islands will be seriously changed from what it is to-day. Even in four years' time I conceive that there will be no great difference in the conditions from what they are to-day. And so I shall consider this proposition as though it were a proposition for immediate independence.

Mr. Chairman, the United States of America acquired sovereignty over the Philippine Islands from the highest and most altruistic motives. Our war with Spain having destroyed the last vestige of the power of that country to protect or indeed to govern the islands, their helpless and unprotected condition so appealed to the big-hearted McKinley that by his special direction their cession to this country was provided for in the treaty of peace between this country and Spain.

It has never been the policy of this country to seize and hold conquered territory after a war without compensation. It was therefore agreed in the treaty that we should pay to Spain $20,000,000 for these islands. When the treaty with the bill providing for the appropriation of this money came up it was debated earnestly in both Houses of Congress, and the issue was by no means certain until William J. Bryan, then the undisputed leader of the Democratic Party, came to Washington and joined his voice with that of the immortal McKinley. Then by nonpartisan action of both Houses the islands were taken over and the $20,000,000 paid. Since then we have spent vast sums for the pacification and improvement of the islands, though for the past 10 years they have cost us nothing. In fact, during that time we have gotten more out of them than we have put into them. We have, therefore, a princely sum invested in these islands.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. HAYES. I will.

Mr. GORDON. Why do you say they cost us nothing in the past 10 years?

Mr. HAYES. Because it is true.

Mr. GORDON. How much do you figure the islands have cost us since we have had them?

Mr. HAYES. Nobody knows.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the gentleman know that Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, estimated the cost of the Philippine Islands, up to and including 1902, at $600,000,000?

Mr. HAYES. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. And does he remember that Secretary Root, who was Secretary of war at that time, estimated the cost of the War Department alone was $132,000,000?

Mr. HAYES. He estimated the entire cost of the maintenance of the soldiers there, and that is not a fair basis of estimate. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that we have a princely investment, and the gentleman wants to throw it away.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the contrary, we want to prevent these losses by getting out of there.

Mr. HAYES. There are no losses. For the last 10 years the Philippine Islands have cost us nothing.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the gentleman know that we paid $5,700,000 for the Philippine Scouts alone?

Mr. HAYES. I presume the gentleman is correct. Even if the gentleman is correct in his statement, I still maintain they are costing us nothing, because the trade we are getting from those islands more than compensates for the expenditure, and it has done so for some years.

It should be said that neither when they were acquired nor at any time since has there been any thought of their exploitation. It has been the thought of everybody connected with the Government—the thought, indeed, of the American people—that these islands were to be governed, developed, and managed primarily for the benefit of the Filipino people. It has been so governed, developed, and managed. It was the desire of McKinley, as it has been and still is of many lovers of their kind in this country, to see established right at the doors of oriental despotism an object lesson in liberty and free government that might come to light the whole of the great East. To see in time established in those islands justice, equality, intelligence, and liberty under law that would demonstrate to the world what the beneficent institutions of this country will accomplish for any people, no matter what their race or inheritance.

In the pursuit of this humane and exalted purpose we have sent some of our best blood to those islands to help them on the road that we laid out for them. These men have established there equality and justice. Peace, law, and order reign in the whole archipelago for the first time in its history. New schools were established and those there greatly enlarged, and teachers sent to them by the thousands to start their new educational system. Laws were passed to revive their slumbering industries. And to all of our efforts the Filipino people have responded nobly. They have made great strides in education. Their commerce, domestic and foreign, has doubled and trebled in the last 15 years. The heretofore savage aborigines have felt the civilizing influence of our domination and have ceased their head-hunting and their constant warfare and for the first time in their history have settled down to the arts of peace and are living in amity with their neighbors.

The Democratic Party can not claim that we have failed in the Philippine Islands and offer that as an excuse for now scuttling the ship and running away and leaving it to its fate. Our success there is the wonder and admiration of the world. And yet, in the light of that success, it is now proposed to throw away the millions that our Government has invested there; to run away from a duty to the Filipino people and to the world which we solemnly and voluntarily assumed when we took over the islands; to bring to naught all our efforts for the education and elevation of these people; to make it certain that the peace, order, and security which they now enjoy shall be in a few months succeeded by internecine warfare, bloodshed, and anarchy such as Mexico is now enjoying, and this sure soon to be followed by the domination of some powerful alien nation which will exploit them for the benefit of the people of such alien nation.

Now what excuse is offered for the perpetration of this crime?

1. It is claimed that it is costing us much money to keep them. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Philippines are costing us nothing, and for 10 years have cost us nothing. The people of the islands are paying and for some years have paid all the expenses of the government of the islands. We are paying the Filipino Scouts. It has been said that we pay for keeping the 10,000 or 15,000 soldiers who are quartered there. We do; but if they were not quartered there we would be paying for quartering them somewhere in this country, and I have no doubt they can be kept there cheaper than they can here. I have heard no one claiming that when we leave the islands we should reduce our present standing army by the number we now have there. There is absolutely nothing in the expense argument.

2. But it is said that the United States of America should not have colonies nor possessions and should not be trying to govern alien peoples without their consent. We have had the Declaration of Independence, Thomas Jefferson and all the changes on both rung in this debate ad nauseam. I do not hear these same shouters for the right of self-government, whether the people are capable of it or not, demanding the independence of Porto Rico. Indeed, I have not seen them making any great haste to give the right of self-government to the 400,000 of our own countrymen living in the District of Columbia or to bestow such right upon the people of Alaska.

The truth of the matter is that no people are entitled to self-government until they are capable of exercising it, and no people incapable of exercising it will have that right long as the world is to-day. I desire to impugn no man's motives or honesty in his attitude on this legislation, but I undertake to say that much, if not most, of this talk about the expense of maintaining our sovereignty over the Filipinos and the sacred rights of every people to govern themselves is pure cant and hypocrisy, and is intended to cover the real motive that lies behind this legislation. That motive is plain physical, ignoble cowardice.

It is claimed that if we keep the Philippine Islands it will be the cause of a war with some nation unnamed; or, should we be embroiled in war, that those islands will be a source of weakness, strategically, to us; and that, therefore, before they are taken away from us it is the part of wisdom to give them away and withdraw our claim of authority over them. In a few words, this seems to be the last argument of all, or nearly all, the proponents of this measure.

Could anything be more craven or more destructive of self-respect, or the respect of the world for our country, than a course so weak and ignoble as this? We are asked to throw away our vast investment in the Philippine Islands and the vast advantage they will be to us in maintaining ourselves commercially in the Pacific Ocean; asked to throw overboard those people who are depending upon us for protection, whether they realize it or not; asked to violate our obligations to the world as well as to the Filipinos, because, forsooth, we are afraid that some time in the future they are going to be a source of trouble to us.

In our national childhood, when we numbered 3,000,000—a poor and struggling people—we wrested our independence from the British Empire. Thirty years later, when we had 10,000,000 and had come to a vigorous youth, we again defied the British Empire. Can it be possible that from such a vigorous childhood and virile youth we have descended to be a lazy, rich, fat, overgrown, cowardly lubber that is making haste to give away his possessions lest somebody fall upon him and take them away from him? If it is true that we have descended to this condition of fear and weakness, the only cause for it that I can think of is the recent advent of the Democratic Party as the dominant party in this country. But, like the fears of nearly all cowards, these fears exist only in the fervid imagination of those who entertain them.

The Philippine Islands could never be a weakness to this country; on the contrary, in any emergency they would be a strength.

We have spent many millions of dollars already in fortifying a naval base there to which our ships can go for supplies and for repair and relief in case of attack, which will give us a hold in the Pacific more valuable than can be estimated in dollars. Should war come and the Philippine Islands be attacked, whatever energy the enemy bestows on the subjugation of the islands will not be bestowed upon us; and if we extend to them the rights and bestow upon them the blessings that I know all our people expect to extend and bestow as fast as they are capable of receiving them, it is inconceivable that they would not defend themselves and their homes against the common enemy to the very limit of their ability.

Many people said before the beginning of the present war in Europe that India would be a source of weakness to England. On the contrary, it is one of her great elements of strength, and the people of India are astonishingly loyal to Great Britain, and stand ready to fight not only for their own protection but have even joined the English upon the European front.

There is, therefore, nothing in this argument that the Philippine Islands are or ever will be a source of weakness to this country. At this time no country is objecting to our sovereignty over them. The whole world is entirely satisfied with the present status quo. Why, therefore, this sudden haste to pull down the Stars and Stripes where they have brought such blessings, enlightenment, and prosperity to make way for anarchy, internecine strife, and bloodshed? To even propose it is a dastardly, inexcusable, monstrous, cowardly crime. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, the first election after the Spanish-American War—that is, presidential election—was held in the year 1900, and at that time President McKinley was running for reelection on the Republican ticket; and on the Democratic ticket Mr. Bryan, of Nebraska, was running. In the Democratic platform was this clause as to the Philippine policy:

> We condemn and denounce the Philippine policy of the present administration

President McKinley went before the country that year and was elected by an electoral vote of 292 to 155. In 1904 and 1908 the Democratic platform had similar planks, as well as in 1912. But we see the majority Members of this House, in spite of the fact that the gentleman from Nebraska was repudiated, a few days ago permitting that gentleman to ride them through the House, because in 1900 when the issue first came before the country as to what we should do with the Philippines it was settled in a very conclusive manner by the electorate of the country.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I can not yield in five minutes.

We have been told here that to hold the Philippine Islands is holding the people in bondage and oppressing them. Do you call it holding them in bondage when we went our there and cleaned out the pesthouse that existed in the Philippine Islands prior to 1898? Do you call it holding them in bondage by improving their public works, by doing everything that we would do for our own people in our own country? If that is the way the majority side of the House look at it, I must say that they have completely lost their vision.

It has been said to-day that those of us on this side who vote against the Clarke amendment are doomed to political annihilation next year. I disagree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], and I thoroughly believe that if you put this bill through the House to-day it will take Democratic Members out of their seats and not Republicans. And if I was actuated by base political motives, I would like to see this bill go through, and then the gentleman could see how far his prediction would go.

But, gentlemen of the House, I am not actuated by those motives. I want to see the Clarke amendment voted out of the bill first, because, in my opinion, that is one of the most vicious amendments that has ever come on a bill from the Senate. Look what its author said in the Senate when he proposed it. He was not a member of the committee that reported out the bill. He said:

> I had no particular reason in introducing this amendment except that no one else would do it. * * * Either I or some one else had to do it. I am getting as much salary as anybody else and doing about as little.

With all due respect to that gentleman, he is a man of big deeds, but in my opinion this is one of the smallest things he ever did. I continue; he says:

> And I did not know but that I had better get busy right along that line.

That amendment was voted into the bill by a tie vote, which was broken by the vote of the Vice President. Eleven Democratic Senators voted against that amendment, and the 28 Democrats in this House who are going to stand with the minority party in upholding American rights to-day deserve every credit that the country can give them, together with the minority party in this House, that is furnishing the bulk of the vote, and we are proud to vote this amendment out of the bill.

The gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON] completely demolished, in my opinion, some of the strongest arguments that some of the Democrats on the other side have made about the Japanese bugbear in the Far East. As I listened to the Philippine Resident Commissioner in his argument, although I did not agree with him in what he said, I could not help but plainly see how his argument on this Japanese bugbear absolutely demolished the argument that his colleagues on the Democratic side have made on the floor of the House to-day on this question.

What if it does bring us into international complications with Japan? So long as that question has been raised, is that any reason why we should scuttle the ship of state and leave it? We understand that there is a submarine controversy going on with another Government to-day. I say that there is a controversy going on here in this House to-day in which we see one party trying to torpedo the ship of state in the Philippines, and a minority of the Democratic Party combining with the Republican minority of the House trying to save the interests of the country to-day.

Vote this amendment out of the bill, and let the House pass a Philippine bill which gives to the Philippines home rule under the control and protection of the United States. Without that they would not have existed since 1898. Without that May 1, 1898, would not be a day to be proud of in our history; and had we not gone into there 18 years ago to-day the Filipinos and the Philippine Islands would be undergoing the domination of Spain or else that of some other monarchial form of government which, as results have shown, did not work to the benefit of the people when it came to colonization.

Therefore, on the eighteenth anniversary of one of the greatest days in American history, we confidently hope on this side—and we are proud of it— that before adjournment comes to-day you will see this vicious Clarke amendment voted out of the bill, and then there will be some chance of passing a bill that will give some form of home rule to the Philippine Islands under this great Government. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if I have any time remaining, I yield it back.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. JONES. We have only one other speaker on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is further debate, the Clerk will read.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. That is all the time that I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allotted to me I am unable to discuss the pending bill with that thoroughness which I desire. It will be possible, however, to justify the action of those of my Democratic colleagues who, like myself, are unable to support the bill in its present shape.

I am unalterably opposed to section 34 of this bill, which is known as the Clarke amendment. In my opinion, it is a plain violation of the pledges made by the Democratic Party in its national platform; it is inconsistent with the action taken by the Democratic House in the last Congress; it is contrary to the position upon which I made my campaign for Congress in the congressional election for 1914; and it has not the approval of the great mass of the people.

The Democratic national platform of 1912 contained this declaration:

We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippines as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us as we guarantee the independence of Cuba, until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

Such a provision was contained in the Jones bill of 1902, and the attitude of the Democratic Party since that time has practically been unchanged.

My position regarding this question is not new nor of recent origin. In October, 1914, I had the distinction to preside at the Lake Mohonk conference on the Indian and other dependent peoples.

Among the prominent men who participated in that conference were the following: Rev. Ernst H. Abbott, The Outlook; Rev. Joseph Anderson, D. D., Woodmont, Conn.; Rev. E. Ashley, LL. D., general missionary, Episcopal Church, Aberdeen, S. Dak.; Rt. Rev. George Biller, jr., Sioux Falls, S. Dak.; S. M. Brosius, Indian Rights Association, 908 G Street NW., Washington, D. C.; Rev. Arthur J. Brown, D. D., 156 Fifth Avenue, New York; Elmer E. Brown, LL. D., New York University, New York; Rev. James M. Bruce, 201 West Fifty-fifth Street, New York; Rev. Thomas Chalmers, D. D., Manchester, N. H.; Rev. W. I. Chamberlain, Ph. D., secretary Board of Foreign Missions of Reformed Church, 25 East Twenty-second Street, New York; Rev. William B. Cooke, First Presbyterian Church, Manila, P. I.; Rev. Charles C. Creegan, D. D., Fargo College, Fargo, N. Dak.; Paul De Schweinitz, D. D., secretary of Missions of the Moravian Church in America, Bethlehem, Pa.; Edwin C. Dinwiddie, superintendent National Temperance Bureau, 30–33 Bliss Building, Washington, D. C.; H. Paul Douglass, D. D., American Missionary Association, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York; Rev. A. E. Dunning, D. D., The Congregationalist, Boston, Mass.; Rev. Carl E. Grammar, 1024 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, Pa.; Rev. R. D. Hall, secretary for Indian Work of International Committee of Young Men's Christian Association, 124 East Twenty-eighth Street, New York; James P. Lichtenberger, professor of Sociology University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.; Dr. Henry M. MacCracken, University Heights, New York, N. Y.; Mrs. E. E. Marean, The Christian Register, 272 Congress Street, Boston, Mass.; Charles F. Meserve, LL. D., Shaw University, Raleigh, N. C.; Rev. Thomas C. Moffett, D. D., 156 Fifth Avenue, New York; Delavan L. Pierson, The Missionary Review of the World, 354 Fourth Avenue, New York; Francis H. Rowley, D. D., 45 Milk Street, Boston, Mass; Doremus Scudder, M. D., D. D., editor The Friend, minister of Central Union Church, 910 Prospect Street, Honolulu, Hawaii; Charles L. Thompson, D. D., secretary Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.; Rt. Rev. Theodore Payne Thurston, D. D., bishop of eastern Oklahoma, 734 Terrace Boulevard, Muskogee, Okla.; Fennell P. Turner, general secretary Student Volunteer Movement, 25 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.; Rev. N. H. Van Arsdale, D. D., The Christian Intelligence, 149 Church Street, New York; Miss Lina J. Walk, The Christian Work, New York, N. Y.; Rev. G. A. Watermulder, Winnebago, Nebr.; Rev. Charles R. Watson, D. D., corresponding secretary United Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, Reformed Church Building, Philadelphia, Pa.; Rev. Arthur P. Wedge, traveling lecturer for the Propagating the Gospel among the Indians, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Rev. Charles L. White, D. D., associate corresponding secretary of American Baptist Home Mission Society, 23 East Twenty-sixth Street, New York, N. Y.; Rt. Rev. Frederick F. Johnson, St. Louis, Mo.

Those gentlemen represented every phase of religious thought in this country. In discussing at that conference the Jones bill, which was then under consideration and had just passed the House of Representatives, I made this statement:

Perhaps the provision in the previous bill which aroused the greatest antagonism was that one which provided that at the expiration of eight years the Filipinos should be granted their absolute independence. I for one was very gravely in doubt as to the wisdom of such a provision. With others, I did not believe it was wise or expedient for the United States to determine eight years in advance that the Filipinos would be ready for their independence, nor that the conditions would be such that the United States would be justified in granting their independence to them. And so, as the result of many conferences and much discussion, that provision was eliminated from the bill.

I also made this statement:

The desire of all, regardless of partisan considerations, is to have the Philippine people have a government which will be most conducive to their happiness and prosperity. The policy which is being carried out was formulated under the direct supervision of President Wilson. I am sure that no one believes that he has any desire to exploit the islands or to bring to the people discomfort or distress; and I am certain that the work, which heretofore with great difficulty and very successfully and with credit to the American people has been carried on, will continue to be done equally successfully, until eventually there is practically an agreement among our people that the time has arrived when the independence of the Philippine people should be granted. When that time comes independence will be granted in such a way that the civilized nations of the world will know that the United States is not casting them adrift to be the prey of some ambitious nation, but that it intends that their independence shall be maintained by all the power and resources of the United States.

The Hon. MANUEL L. QUEZON, the Resident Commissioner from the Philippines, speaking on the same occasion of the Jones bill, said:

One important end is accomplished by this bill. It will settle in the only practical and possible way the controversy regarding the capacity of the Filipino people for self-government. The bill is so framed that, while the Filipinos will have ample opportunity to demonstrate their wisdom and patriotism, the powers reserved to the United States are sufficient to prevent, in case of failure in this test, any serious harm to the people of the islands themselves or to the United States. For this reason alone, if for no other, this bill should have the unanimous support of every American who in good faith believes that no governmental powers should be withheld from the Filipinos that they can properly exercise; and in like manner those who assert that we are incapable of governing ourselves ought to welcome the proposed test as much as we who allege that we are fully capable of self-government, because it will show at once who is right. If they are correct in their views, the fact will be plainly demonstrated and the control of the Philippine government will be transferred to wiser men. If we are correct, a wrong which has already lasted too long will be righted.

That conference adopted, as had been the practice in former conferences, a declaration of principles or a platform, and upon the question of the Philippine Islands the following declaration was made:

The American people, having accepted the privilege and responsibility of fitting the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands for self-government, their undertaking should be prosecuted with conviction and fidelity by Government officials, by teachers in the schools, and by teachers of religion, in order that a moral basis may be secured on which a stable government can rest. The desire for self-government on the part of the Filipino people is a legitimate and praiseworthy ambition. It should not only be encouraged but it should be coupled with the endeavor to cultivate the essential virtues of a self-governing people. The object of our Government should be, not so much to hasten the time when it may be freed from responsibilities as to advance the time when the Philippine people shall be so fused in common purposes, a common language, common sentiments, and ideas and character, that they shall be clearly competent to determine their future relations with the United States. It appears from the Jones bill, now under discussion, that in view of the present Congress, as thus far indicated, a definite time can not yet be fixed when this momentous question of the status of the Philippines shall be finally decided. It is a view with which this conference is in full accord.

That gathering of representative men from all parts of the United States, typifying every phase of religious, political, and commercial thought, was unanimously in accord with the action of the Democratic House of Representatives, which had just passed a bill extending to a very large extent the control of their Government to the Philippine people, but refusing to declare any definite time at which they should be fitted for independence.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have a very limited time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I wanted to ask if that was the bill that had the preamble?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Jones bill had a preamble, which I regret is not in this bill.

That preamble was as follows:

Whereas it was never the intention of the people of the United States in the incipiency of the War with Spain to make it a war of conquest or for territorial aggrandizement; and

Whereas it is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein; and

Whereas for the speedy accomplishment of such purpose it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without, in the meantime, impairing the exercise of the rights of sovereignty by the people of the United States, in order that by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers, they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence.

That is an expression of what I believe to be practically the universal opinion of the people of the United States—that it is not the intention of the United States to hold the Filipinos forever in subjection, but that when, by reason of the opportunities afforded, they shall have demonstrated their capacity by the exercise of the powers of government not only to establish but to maintain and conduct a government that will secure the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to all of the Filipinos and be able to maintain their position as an independent people among the nations of the world, then the United States intends to give them their independence. But it also proposes, Mr. Chairman, according to my belief, that the islands shall not be cast adrift with the statement that they are free, and left, unaided and unsupported, to make the best of their opportunities. When they are freed it ought to be with the knowledge conveyed in unmistaken tones to the world that the United States intends to stand by them and to aid and to assist them to maintain the government that is established until they have attained a position which will enable them to stand alone. [Applause.] This bill, in my judgment, does not do what I believe the American people demand. It does not conform to the declaration upon which the Democratic Party appealed to the country in 1912 and again in 1914.

The so-called Clarke amendment, section 34 of the bill, is as follows:

SEC. 34. The President is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty now existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippines, and he shall on behalf of the United States fully recognize the independence of the said Philippines as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof, and full power to take the several steps necessary to institute such government is hereby conferred upon the said Philippines acting by and through governmental agencies created by this act. This transfer of possession, sovereignty, and governmental control shall be completed and become absolute not less than two years nor more than four years from the date of the approval of this act, under the terms and in the manner hereinafter prescribed: Provided, That if the President, prior to the expiration of the said period of four years, shall find that the condition of the internal or external affairs of said Philippines in respect to the stability or efficiency of the proposed government thereof is such as to warrant him in so doing, he is hereby further authorized, by proclamation duly made and published, to extend the said time to and including the date of the final adjournment of the session of Congress which shall convene next after the date of the expiration of the said period of four years, and thus afford the Congress an opportunity in its discretion to further consider the situation in the said Philippines; but any such extension of time by the President shall not otherwise suspend or nullify the operative force of this act, unless the Congress shall hereafter so direct. For the purpose of a complete and prompt compliance with this direction, the President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the said Philippines, and to cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States and of other countries resident or engaged in business in said Philippines or having property interests therein. In any such settlement or adjustment so made in respect to the rights and property of the United States as against the said Philippines the President may reserve or acquire such lands and rights and privileges appurtenant thereto as may, in his judgment, be required by the United States for naval bases and coaling stations within the territory of said Philippines.

The effect of that provision is to cast the Filipinos adrift, not less than two nor more than four years and a fraction from the approval of the bill. They are to be turned loose without ample opportunity to demonstrate their capacity to conduct and to maintain a stable government. There is to be no guaranty by the United States of their independence. They will have no right to look to us for the help and aid and encouragement to which they are entitled. There is to be no assurance that they will be protected from the designs of grasping and hostile powers. They are not to be secured by any declaration of protection by the United States pending the negotiation and ratification of treaties with the civilized powers that their independence will be recognized and protected.

I shall not criticize nor condemn those who advocate such a course. Sincere, able, conscientious, and patriotic men favor such action. I do not. I can not be a party to it. I shall not give my support to a measure to bring about such results.

The Jones bill passed the House of Representatives in 1914 by a vote of 211 to 59. That vote was representative of the matured public opinion of the country. That bill should be passed again by this House. It confers large powers of government upon the Philippine people. It will give them the opportunity to demonstrate their capacity for self-government. It will hasten rather than retard their independence. It conforms to the declaration of the Democratic Party contained in the national platform and expressed in legislative action. It harmonizes with my convictions, and it is in accord with the declarations upon which I appealed to my constituents in the last congressional campaign. [Applause.]

Under the leave to print, I append the address which I made in October, 1914, at the Lake Mohonk conference and from which I have quoted briefly during these remarks.

THE CONTENT OF THE JONES BILL.

[Address by Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD, M. C.]

There has been some discussion during the conference as to the advisability of the adoption of what might be designated as an American policy in dealing with the Philippine Islands. The purpose evidently is to have the United States initiate a policy for the control of the islands that shall not be discussed from a purely partisan standpoint, but that shall represent practically the sentiment of the people regardless of politics. During the present week the House of Representatives passed a bill that had been under consideration for several weeks. It is known as the Jones bill. Perhaps some misunderstanding has been occasioned because of the title of the bill and the fact that in a previous Congress proposed legislation bearing the same title was in many respects radically different from the bill considered at the present session by the House. Perhaps the provision in the previous bill which aroused the greatest antagonism was that one which provided that at the expiration of a period, if I recall correctly, of eight years, the Filipinos should be granted their absolute independence. I, for one, was very gravely in doubt as to the wisdom of such a provision. With many others, I did not believe that it was either wise or expedient for the United States to determine eight years in advance that the Filipinos would be ready for their independence, or that the conditions would be such that the United States would be justified in granting independence to them. And so, as the result of many conferences and much discussion, that provision was eliminated from the bill. The bill as passed by the House represents the matured policy of the present administration; it has the indorsement of the present administration. From the result in the House of Representatives I believe that it can be safely said that it expresses as nearly as can be expressed the American policy of dealing with the Philippine Islands in the future. Upon a recorded vote, taken upon the passage of the bill, 211 Representatives voted in favor of the bill and 59 in opposition to it. Any bill which passes the House of Representatives after extended controversy by a vote of practically 4 to 1 will come as nearly to representing the sentiment of the American people as any legislation that can be enacted. The portion of the bill which excited the greatest controversy and the most partisan contest, strange to say, was the preamble. The preamble is not a legislative act in the sense that is a law, but it is a method used of making a solemn declaration of the purpose by the Government in its future actions.

It is a declaration of policy upon the part of the Government. It is a declaration that was demanded by a very large and influential element of the Philippine people, and it is a declaration which is in complete accord with the platform of the dominant party now in the control of the Nation. I hope I may without offense to anyone present dissent from the view expressed here that in the language of olden days political platforms are "not meant to stand on, but to get in on." No public official can afford to assume any such position. A candidate for office or a political party which seeks power upon a declaration of principles and policies can not, after having invited and received the support of a majority of the electorate, assume that the policies favored and to be carried out in the event of success may be regarded as certain treaties, and be considered merely as "scraps of paper" to be disregarded when it was opportune for the party in power.

The Democratic platform, upon which the party was put in control of the executive and legislative branches of the Government, contains this very important and essential paragraph:

We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandoning a fundamental doctrine of self-government. We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippines as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us as we guarantee the independence of Cuba, until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

The preamble of the Jones bill is a very mild declaration of that provision of the platform, but it is not the declaration of the policy of the Democratic Party alone. It is merely putting into concrete expression the policy that has been enunciated and has been contemplated by the Republican Party in the years in which it was in control of the government of the Philippine Islands. I undertake to say that no influential group of men or no substantial body of men at any time in the United States has ever taken any other position than that the purpose of the United States is ultimately to grant to the Philippine people their independence. The only question upon which there has been any difference of opinion is the question as to the time when the Philippine people would be fitted to establish and to maintain an independent government. In 1908 Mr. Taft, as Secretary of War, was sent to the Philippine Islands, and upon his return he made a most voluminous report. In that report he called attention to the fact that many Filipinos desired that the American people should declare a definite policy as to the Philippines, so that they might be informed as to what that policy was to be. He said he did not believe any more definite statement of policy could be enunciated than the policy declared by President McKinley in his instructions to Secretary Root for the guidance of the Philippine Commission. It was practically incorporated in the organic act. "That policy," he said "is declared to be the extension of self-government to the Philippine Islands by gradual steps from time to time as the people of the islands shall show themselves fit to receive the additional responsibility."

It "necessarily involves in its ultimate conclusion, as the steps toward self-government become greater and greater, the ultimate independence of the islands."

In another portion of his report the Secretary, outlining the policy of the United States toward the Philippine Islands, said:

> Shortly stated, the national policy is to govern the Philippine Islands for the benefit and welfare and uplift of the people of the islands, and gradually to extend to them, as they shall show themselves fit to exercise it, a greater and greater measure of self-government.

And he added:

> When the Filipino people as a whole show themselves reasonably fit to conduct a popular self-government, maintaining law and order, and offering equal protection of the laws and civil rights to rich and poor, and desire complete independence of the United States, they shall be given it.

So that the preamble of the Jones bill merely puts in a formal way the uniform policy of the Government and the one intended from the very beginning by the American people, as expressed by the action and attitude of administrations of two opposite political parties. A stable government can not mean any other government than such a government as can maintain law and order, and can extend equal protection of the law to the rich and to the poor.

The treaty with Spain, by which the United States acquired the Philippine Islands, was ratified on the 11th of April, 1899. Until July 1, 1902, all military and civil power was exercised in the Philippine Islands by the President of the United States through such military and civil officers as he appointed. On the 1st of July, 1902, the organic act was enacted by Congress, and it was designated as an act for the temporary government of the Philippine Islands, which act has now been in force for 12 years, and the proposed law is designed to extend to the Filipinos a much larger measure of control and management in their own affairs. In contemplating the capacity of the Philippine people for self-government it must not be forgotten that more than a hundred years ago Filipino representatives sat in the Spanish Cortes in Spain, and at one time as many as 17 representatives of the Philippine people were members of the Spanish Parliament. Before Harvard existed the University of St. Joseph had been established at Manila, where the Filipino youth were educated in the higher branches of learning, in medicine and in law, in literature and philosophy, in science and in art, and an organized system of public schools existed throughout the islands, while for more than 300 years they have had the civilizing effects of the Christian religion. Three years ago more than one-half of the Christian inhabitants, constituting as they do more than nine-tenths of the total population of the Philippines, had learned to speak the English language, and to-day the proportion of those who speak English is much larger, since for several years past the annual attendance in the public schools of about 600,000 Philippine children, taught by about 9,000 teachers, at least 92 per cent of whom are Filipinos, has made possible the acquisition of the English language and the spread of learning to an extent we hardly appreciate. Since 1907 the Filipino Legislature has consisted of an appointive commission and an elective body—a commission of nine members appointed by the President of the United States, one of whom is the Governor General, an assembly composed of Filipinos, elected by the Filipinos themselves. Impartial observers express the belief that this assembly has done remarkable work in demonstrating the capacity of the people for self-government. Everyone does not agree with everything they do, but when we consider how much acrimonious controversy there is over the actions of the United States Congress and of our State legislatures, we can not expect that perfection of work from the Filipino Assembly that would result in complete acquiescence on the part of everyone in all of their actions. Under the present government the commission has equal authority with the Philippine Assembly in legislative matters over the Christian peoples of the Philippine Islands. It has exclusive executive power and exclusive control of legislation over the non-Christian portions of the islands. The result has been that the commission, responsible not to the Philippine people but to the President of the United States, has taken moneys raised by taxation from the Christian people and spent it at will in the non-Christian Provinces. One of the grievous complaints that the Philippine people have had has been the manner in which the commission has disbursed the public funds in the non-Christian portions of the territory. One of them was the expenditure of many millions of public revenues in the construction, maintenance, and upkeep of the Benguet automobile road in non-Christian territory, which has aroused the indignation of the Philippine people, and is a striking illustration of the necessity for the abolition of the Philippine Commission. This short road, some 22 miles in length, has already cost the Filipinos more than $100,000 a mile. Until recently the majority of the Filipino Commission have been Americans. President Wilson, however, inaugurated a new policy by appointing a majority of Filipinos. The effect was immediately noticeable. Although the commission and the assembly for three years were deadlocked upon the appropriation bill, and it was impossible to have the appropriation bill enacted in three meetings of the legislature, at the last session of the legislature, with a majority of Filipinos in the Philippine Commission, the appropriation bill was passed by a unanimous vote in both bodies—not only the Filipinos but the Americans united in supporting it. This is a somewhat striking illustration of their capacity to govern.

The Jones bill declares, first, who are and who may be citizens of the Philippine Islands. It enacts the Bill of Rights, substantially the personal and property guarantees of the Constitution of the United States. It provides that all the expenses incurred by the Philippine Government be defrayed by moneys raised by taxation in the Philippine Islands; that all the powers that are now conferred upon the Philippine Legislature and the Philippine Commission be exercised by the Philippine Legislature; it continues the laws that are now in force until they are changed by the new legislature or by Congress; transfers all the public domain to the Philippine government to be administered for the benefit of the Philippine people; empowers the legislature, in addition to the usual powers, to legislate on tariff, currency, and coinage, but all laws affecting these subjects as well as timber, public lands, and mines must be approved by the President of the United States before they become effective. It retains in Congress the control of the trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands; it creates a legislature of two bodies—a senate and house of representatives. The islands are to be divided into 12 senate districts and 90 representative districts, each senate district to elect two senators, each representative district one representative. The Governor General of the islands, without restriction upon residence, is empowered to appoint the two senators and nine representatives from the non-Christian portions of the islands. One senate district is comprised of those Provinces which are not now organized. But the other 22 Senators and 81 representatives are to be elected by the people of the Philippine Islands themselves. The right of suffrage is extended to all who can read and write in any native language. At present it is restricted to those who can read or write in English or Spanish. The Governor General is to be appointed by the President of the United States, as are the justices of the supreme court. The Governor General is to appoint all of the officials in the islands, subject to confirmation by the Philippine senate. The Governor General has a qualified veto over the legislation enacted by the legislature. His veto can be overruled by two-thirds vote of both houses, but if such action be taken the bill must be transmitted to the President of the United States, and unless he approves it it will not become a law. The right is reserved to the Congress of the United States to annul any legislative action taken by the Philippine Legislature.

That is a comprehensive outline of the provisions of the bill. Its purpose is to give to the Philippine people the fullest measure of control over their own affairs, and to retain at the same time such control in the President and in the Congress as will insure protection against hasty, ill-advised, or unjustifiable legislation. There has been some criticism of the present administration of the Philippine Islands. It has not been voiced at this conference, and I do not believe it is justified when the facts are actually known. The present administration has been "Philippinizing"—to use a word that has recently come into vogue—by placing Filipinos in positions which heretofore have been occupied by American citizens. There has been considerable criticism of such action on the part of the American citizens who have lost the lucrative positions which they have been occupying for some time. And yet it must be apparent to everyone that if the Filipinos are ever to administer their own affairs, they must be placed in control of them. Action has not been taken at random, but changes have been made with care and deliberation in compliance with the civil-service laws, and wholly in the interest of the public service. As the result of this Philippinizing of the Philippine service the Philippine government has reduced its expenditures a million dollars in a year, and it is now arranged to curtail those expenditures $2,500,000 more. The present administration under Gov. Gen. Harrison has repealed the law which permitted the sale of friar lands in excess of the area fixed in the organic act. It has created a public-utilities commission to prevent the exploitation of the islands and to protect the people against exorbitant charges. It has enacted a pure food and drugs act, in line with the progressive sentiment of this country. The judiciary has been reorganized in order more quickly and efficiently to punish offenders against the law. It has substituted civil officials for military in the Moro Province, and despite the fears of those who looked upon such action with alarm there is order, peace, intelligent and progressive work being done in the Moro Province under the civilian officials. The bureau of navigation, maintained at a very high cost, with a number of high-salaried officials, for the purpose of supervising a governmental fleet used largely for official purposes by the officials of the Philippine government, was abolished. Considerable criticism has come from this action by those who have lost lucrative positions in that bureau.

It seems to me that this review of what has been done in the Philippine Islands and a proper understanding of the purpose of Congress leave no doubt that the will of the American people is being expressed in the administration of the islands and in the legislation for them. The desire of all, regardless of partisan considerations, is to have the Philippine people have a government which will be most conducive to their happiness and prosperity. The policy that is being carried out was formulated under the direct supervision of President Wilson. I am sure no one believes that he has any desire to exploit the islands or to bring to the people discomfort or distress; and I am certain that the work, which heretofore with great difficulty and very successfully and with credit to the American people has been carried on, will continue to be done equally successfully, until eventually there is practically an agreement among our people that the time has arrived when the independence of the Philippine people should be granted. When that time comes independence will be granted in such a way that the civilized nations of the world will know that the United States is not casting them adrift to be the prey of some ambitious nation, but that it intends that their independence shall be maintained by all the power and resources of the United States.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] if he has exhausted the debate on his side?

Mr. TOWNER. I have.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] the time remaining to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] is recognized for nine minutes.

Mr. JONES. I understood from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], who has had charge of the time, that there were 24 minutes remaining to us. That is the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands from the Clerk at the desk that the time remaining to the gentleman from Virginia is nine minutes.

Mr. JONES. I can not understand that, Mr. Chairman, because it has been understood that we had 24 minutes. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has gone to his dinner, and I think there must be some mistake about the count of the time. We have all understood that it was 24 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman is correct in that understanding.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] confirms my statement that it is 24 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the Chairman that that is my understanding.

Mr. JONES. The time has been parceled out with that understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the record kept at the desk shows that there are nine minutes remaining to the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. The understanding was that the debate was to close at half past 6 o'clock.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I should like to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the debate began at 11.30, and that by agreement reached this afternoon between the two sides it has been limited to seven hours. That would certainly conclude the debate until 6.30, and, of course, a little time has been lost in yielding, so that the gentleman's contention must be correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, has no record of his own as to the time consumed, but the record that has been kept by the Clerk at the desk shows that 3 hours and 21 minutes have been consumed by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] be permitted to speak for 24 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] be permitted to proceed for 24 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Reserving the right to object, I ask that this side be given an equal amount of time.

Mr. JONES. Your side have had their time.

Mr. AUSTIN. And according to the statement of the Chairman your side has had the same amount of time.

Mr. JONES. There is no question about your having had three hours and a half.

Mr. AUSTIN. And the Chair says you have had all of yours except nine minutes.

Mr. JONES. The Chair is mistaken about that. As the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] has stated, we started at half past 11, and seven hours would certainly bring us to half past 6. It is now 10 minutes after 6.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] will not insist on his objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not objecting. I just withheld my consent to see if we could not make an agreement which I think would be fair.

Mr. TOWNER. I think there is some mistake about it. I think the gentlemen over there are entitled to the time. So I hope no one will object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been over the record book here and it seems to be correct.

Mr. JONES. I will ask the Chair to submit the request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] be permitted to proceed for 24 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I desire to thank the House for this courtesy in extending my time at this late hour at the end of this long day of debate.

I appreciate the responsibility as well as the honor of closing the debate for the majority side of the House on this bill dealing with the great question of Philippine independence—a question of such immense magnitude that it affects the future of 9,000,000 people in the Orient and likewise affects the future policy of the Government of the United States, and thereby affects the destiny of mankind in the ages to be.

THE GENERAL PURPOSE AND INTENT OF THE PHILIPPINE BILL TO DO THE RIGHT THING AND BE TRUE TO OUR TRADITIONS.

I expect to use the most of my time in telling you something about my personal observations in the Philippine Islands during the last summer. I want to make just this statement before beginning that part of the discussion: I believe a careful study of the Philippine bill as formerly passed by the House in the Sixty-third Congress, and as now before us modified by the Senate, will convince any candid investigator that this bill now under discussion is one of the most important measures ever presented to any legislative body for the government, uplift, and advancement of any people, in any age or any land.

The framers and sponsors of this bill in all its stages, its friends and supporters everywhere, have had in mind always the one desire to formulate and pass such a measure as would be alike fair, just, and honorable to the great Republic of the United States and to the people of the Philippine Islands, whose friends and well-wishers we are and always have been. Our first care and concern has been to do that which would show that we were willing to do the right thing, the fair thing, the just thing, and to do it in line with, and in memory of, all our best traditions of the past.

The passage of this bill will prove to the world, I think, that we are still guided by the teachings of the fathers, the wisest and purest of our statesmen, from Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln to the present time; that we are not to be led astray from the path of freedom and the ideals on which our Republic was founded, by the glamour of conquest, the greed of gain, or to covet the God-given rights and possessions of others; but as a people grateful to God for liberty and a free, independent form of government we are willing to grant to others the priceless heritage we enjoy ourselves. [Applause.]

PERSONAL OBSERVATIONS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

I had the good fortune to be able to travel from May to October last year in that part of the world, visiting Hawaii, Guam, China, Japan, Chosen, and the Port Arthur country.

I had the great pleasure of spending 35 delightful days in the Philippine Islands. We traveled in automobiles over the various islands, for they have many good roads in most of the inhabitable islands. The Philippines are alive with automobiles everywhere.

With American officials, Philippine members of the legislature, and leading Moros, we traveled together more than 2,000 miles by water among the various islands and tribes. Everywhere the people received us with great kindness and hospitality. I desire to take this opportunity to express my thanks and great appreciation to the people of the Philippine Islands for their great hospitality and the constant courtesies showered upon us. They almost killed us with good things to eat, and almost smothered us to death with kind attentions.

I wish I had the opportunity to tell you a little about their beautiful, fertile country, their farming, crops, roads, bridges, schools, churches, homes, and the people themselves, their unfailing kindness and hospitality, and their conception of civil government.

Everywhere among the Filipinos in all the islands we found the people expressing gratitude to the American people for the services rendered them, while at the same time expressing the hope that the great American Republic would keep faith with them and assist them to set up a republican form of government, so that there would be in the Orient the United States of the Philippines, a republic modeled after our own. [Applause.]

This hope is a passion with them everywhere. Being the only Christian people in all the Orient I found them, as a mass, the keenest, most capable, and best fitted for self-government of all the people of all the Orient.

TRIBUTE TO OUR SOLDIERS, TEACHERS, AND AMERICANS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. Chairman, I can not but pause before entering upon a further discussion of this question to pay a tribute to our soldiers, teachers, and Americans in the Philippines. We can be proud of them all. In this connection I want to insert the printed report of a speech delivered by me July 4, 1915, printed in the Manila Times of that date. Speaking to a large audience of Filipinos and Americans, I said:

"I desire to be understood as to my position in regard to past American occupation in these islands. I am proud of the record. No finer body of soldiers has ever served any country anywhere; no better soldiers on our planet to-day than our boys in the Philippines.

"I am extremely proud of the great work of our American teachers in the Philippines—a noble body of men and women, who have led the Filipino youth up the rugged heights to a purer air and a broader view. With these I also include those American residents who have lived and labored in the professions and in business in no selfish manner to develop the best things in the Philippines. Everywhere I go I see the best evidences of the good influences of all these, my countrymen, and I desire to state my appreciation of their good work. All these things can make mightily for the future. Those who, if any such, would turn all this in the end to their own self-aggrandizement or self-greed or spoliation of the Filipino people seem to me to be untrue to American ideals. All those who labor for the uplift and common good of the people of the islands deserve the praise of all good men and the smile of heaven upon their labors.

"In regard to our present government in the Philippine Islands I want to say that I believe all our Governors General in the past have been good and patriotic men, doing that which they believed for the best at all times. I have no word of criticism to offer concerning the administration of any of them. For the present Governor General, the Hon. Francis Burton Harrison, I want to say that those of us who have known him respect and honor him; those of us who have known him as a fellow member of Congress and know by daily contact of his fidelity to duty, his keen sense of justice, his industry and ability, feel very confident that his administration will prove equal to any of the past and will set a new high-water mark of efficiency and service which will be alike honorable and beneficial to all. Gov. Gen. Harrison has succeeded in doing that which has rarely ever been accomplished in history—that of being the official ruler over a foreign alien people and being universally loved and popular with the people over whom he rules.

THE MORO PROBLEM.

"While I have been a member of the Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives and have for years been a student of the Philippine problem, still I recognize the fact that only information and observation gained at first hand can convey any adequate grasp of the needs and problems of the Filipino people. To properly understand another people is the work of time and long association, based upon mutual regard and consideration of each others rights and convictions.

TRIP THROUGH THE MORO COUNTRY.

"Our Southern Island trip of 15 days has been replete with information and absorbing interest. Here, it seems to me, is about all that is left of the real Philippine problem, and the problem is being solved. I want to congratulate, without stint or limit, Gov. Gen. Harrison and the fine men under him, who are solving this greatest of Philippine problems, upon which hangs the future happiness of 9,000,000 souls and 50,000,000 souls to be. I can only speak in words of highest commendation of the magnificent work of Gov. Carpenter and his marvelous success, and also of the fine men helping him—Gov. Gilsheuser, Gov. Rohrer, Gov. Bryant, and Col. Traub, and also the faithful common soldiers and the native scouts and constabulary. I have never seen a finer body of men devoted to a high and sacred duty. Nothing finer or better or nobler has yet been conceived by the mind of man regarding this work than Gov. Gen. Harrison's project at Momungan or Gov. Carpenter's colonization of Filipino colonists in the Moro country. While some critics for self-interest criticize, still the work goes on, and Gov. Gen. Harrison and Gov. Carpenter and their fine helpers are patriotically solving the great Philippine problem.

"Before I went to the Moro country I had great fears about the Moro problem. I think we can dismiss the Moro bugaboo and destroy the straw-man scarecrow Moro problem. We saw in the very heart of the darkest part of Moroland Filipino families living peaceably and friendly with Moros all about them. We saw the 8 different Filipino colonies, each colony numbering over 100 families and each colony numbering from 800 to 2,000 Filipino people, scattered over 150 miles of Moro country, surrounded by late Moro enemies, and living in peace and friendship together. We heard Moro leaders speak in English and ask for more Filipino teachers. We heard the datos speak in praise and love of their Filipino neighbors. We saw colonies where the president was a Filipino and the assistant a Moro dato. It did not look to us as though 300,000 Moros—poor, ignorant, and unarmed, except with primitive bolos—were going to overpower our 6,000 splendidly armed scouts and constabulary down there and come 700 miles through the territory of several million Filipinos to eat blood raw the people of Luzon or any other island, and much less did it look as though they had any desire to do so.

"It did in all fairness look as though the good and noble work of Gov. Carpenter, in making Filipinos and Moros friends and fellow citizens, had been too long delayed, and that in the past Moro prejudices had been played up and played upon for a purpose as an argument against home and native rule at any time in the future. At least very little advantage was ever taken in the past of a most glorious and sacred opportunity to fraternalize Moros and Filipinos and make past enemies future friends. True, there may occur in the future race hatred, clashes, outbreak, and strife among these people. All these things have happened and still happen in the United States, but no one uses it as an argument to discontinue a republican form of government. The truth is that even the ignorant, savage Moro feels the influence of the greatest of all powers on this earth—the power of friendship and love—and this influence is solving the problem better than those politicians who oppose home rule have thought it possible to solve it.

THE JONES BILL.

"There appears to be very much misunderstanding about the Jones bill. It should be remembered that this bill passed the House by about 4 to 1, and, had it been voted upon, would have passed the Senate by a large majority. Only filibustering tactics in the Senate prevented a vote upon it. Many Republicans in the House and almost all the Progressives, or third-party men, voted for it, and many Republican Senators in the Senate avowed their intention of voting for it. Anyone who reads the bill will ascertain that it is a bill of good faith, in line with the best policies of the past, and is a natural step forward. It is alike honorable to both the American people and American ideals, and also to the best interests of the Filipino people. It does not commit the United States Government to immediate independence to-morrow or next year; it simply leaves us free to do and to go as far as the Filipino people may be able to prove to us that they are able to so govern themselves that it makes it advisable and sensible to go. Would any just man anywhere want it otherwise? The bill, above all else, removes all doubt as to our ultimate purpose in these islands. It does specifically state that the United States, as soon as reasonable and possible, at the time best for all concerned, will grant full and complete independence to the Philippine Islands, and thus, as I hope and pray, be the means of helping you build up in the Orient 'the United States of the Philippines,' a republic that shall honor you and honor us and endure for all time to come. [Applause.]

WE CAN SAFELY FOLLOW PRESIDENT WILSON.

"I want to say to all that we can trust President Wilson. No greater President has ever sat in the presidential chair. The future historian, I believe, will speak of four greatest Presidents—Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Wilson. As time goes by the people will appreciate more and more the man who, regardless of clamor, held the rudder true and kept his country and also Hawaii and the Philippines unstained by blood. No folly of his has caused the angel of death to take the first born of every home a sacrifice in war. No President ever met so many and so great world-wide, perplexing problems in so short a time. He has met them with supreme faith and courage, meeting every delicate emergency with consummate tact and ability, and all the while his fine courage, sense of justice and patriotism have led the thought of the entire world to higher plains and better things. The faith of the American people in his wisdom and statesmanship can not be shaken; it grows stronger all the while. [Applause.]

FUTURE POLICY OF UNITED STATES.

"I have been frequently asked, What is to be the future policy in the meantime of the United States toward the Philippines? Why should anyone who reads the newspapers ask that question? The President stated the policy in his speech to Congress, speaking to a joint meeting of the House and Senate December 2, 1913. I know of no one who could state it so well. Personally I want to say that the President's speech meets with my hearty approval, and I think correctly states the true purposes of the Jones bill and the true policy of the American people toward the future of the Philippine Islands.

"The President said:

"'Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines are ours, indeed, but not ours to do as we please with. Such Territories, once regarded as mere possessions, are to be no longer selfishly exploited; they are part of the domain of public conscience and of serviceable and enlightened statesmanship. We must administer them for the people who live in them and with the same sense of responsibility to them as toward our own people in domestic affairs. No doubt we shall successfully enough bind Porto Rico and the Hawaiian Islands to ourselves by ties of justice, interest, and affection, but the performance of our duty toward the Philippines is a difficult and debatable matter. We can satisfy the obligations of generous justice toward the people of Porto Rico by giving them the ample and familiar rights and privileges accorded our own citizens in our own territory, and our obligations toward the people of Hawaii by perfecting the provisions of self-government already granted them, but in the Philippines we must go further. We must hold steadily in view their ultimate independence, and we must move toward the time of that independence as steadily as the way can be cleared and the foundations thoughtfully and permanently laid. * * *

"'Acting under the authority conferred upon the President by Congress, I have already accorded the people of the islands a majority in both houses of their legislative body by appointing five instead of four native citizens to the membership of the commission. I believe that in this way we shall make proof of their capacity in counsel and their sense of responsibility in the exercise of political power and that the success of this step will be sure to clear our view for the steps which are to follow. Step by step we should extend and perfect the system of self-government in the islands, making test of them and modifying them as experience discloses their success and their failure. We should more and more put under control of the native citizens of the archipelago the essential instruments of self-government, their schools, and all the common interests of their communities, and so by counsel and experience set up a government which all the world will see to be suitable to a people whose affairs are under their own control. At last, I hope and believe, we are beginning to gain the confidence of the Filipino peoples. By their counsel and experience rather than our own we shall learn how best to serve them and how soon it will be possible and wise to withdraw our supervision. Let us once find the path and set out with firm and confident tread upon it and we shall not wander from it or linger upon it.'

"The above from the President is surely in line with President McKinley's attitude and with President Taft's speech at Iloilo in his declaration of the 'Philippines for the Filipinos.' The words of our President are the words of a great statesman who loves justice, a patriot who seeks the common good of the American and the Filipino people. His words should be applauded and sustained by all those who love to see the spread of democratic principles and by all those who have at heart the best interests of their fellow man in all lands. The great Philippine problem is solving itself and will solve itsef in due course of time. With the poet we can paraphrase and say: 'The Philippine problem is moving forward out of darkness into light; it is daybreak everywhere.'

"The President's statement above quoted in regard to the attitude of the United States toward the Philippine problem is in line with the Sermon on the Mount, the Declaration of Independence, and the principles of the Golden Rule." [Applause.]

A WORD ABOUT THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS AND THE PHILIPPINE PEOPLE.

The Philippine Islands are a tropical country, located entirely in the northern Torrid Zone, between 6° and 14° north latitude. The Philippines contain from two to three thousand islands, scattered over 1,000 miles through southern tropical seas. The entire area is about 120,000 square miles, or three States like Ohio. More than nine-tenths of the area is contained in the large islands—Luzon, Mindanao, Cebu, Samar, Mindoro, Leyte, Panay, Bohol, and Jolo. The remainder of the islands are mostly small, rocky, uninhabited islands from 1 to 20 acres in area. To start from any one city and visit the principal islands and return to the place of starting it is necessary to travel more than 2,000 miles in various southern seas. Luzon in area is about as large as Ohio and contains more than one-half as many people. Mindanao is almost as large as Luzon and is principally inhabited by Moros. The entire population of Moros in all the islands, as given by the census of 1903, was 277,547. Cebu is the most densely populated island in the Philippines. The city of Cebu—20,000 population—was discovered by Magellan the same year as the founding of St. Augustine, Fla.

The country is very beautiful and the most fertile tropical country in the world. The mountainous and hilly part of the islands are covered with valuable timber, ebony and mahogany being the most valuable. About one-third of the area is in timber.

PRODUCTS OF THE ISLANDS.

Rice: Rice is the staff of life and raised everywhere. The little rice patties or rice farms are found in all the islands, in the valleys and up the mountain slopes. They have a perfect system of farm irrigation. Rice is used for food, alcohol, beer, and wine.

Hemp: The Philippines is the greatest hemp country in the world. The Manila make of ropes, or manila rope, is known all over the world. They raise about $100 worth of hemp per acre.

Tobacco: The Philippines is the finest tobacco country in the world. The Cagayan River Valley produces the finest tobacco in the known world. There are 40 factories and 40,000 workers in the tobacco factories in the Philippine Islands. In 1913 the islands exported more than 6,000,000 cigars, more than one and one-half million being exported to the United States.

Gold: In 1914 there was mined $1,125,000 in gold ore from placer and lode-rock mines.

Coal is not found in the Philippines.

Coconut: The islands produce 150,000,000 coconuts yearly. They are used for food, drink, and copra or dried fruit.

Nipa palm: Twenty thousand acres of low marshy lands are in Nipa palm. The sap from Nipa palm produces sugar and alcohol. Ten per cent of Nipa palm alcohol mixed with gasoline prduces a good substitute for gasoline for automobiles and other uses. In 1913 the Nipa palm produced more than two and one-half million gallons of alcohol.

Cement: There is shipped into the Philippines more than 500,000 barrels of cement yearly, the duty on cement being 30 cents per barrel. Cement sells at $2.25 to $2.75 per barrel in the Philippines.

There are two railroads on the island of Luzon, and one railroad running through the island of Cebu. A great navigable river runs through the great island of Mindanao. The country is well supplied with rivers and springs and country roads.

In 1913 the total imports were more than $56,000,000; the total exports more than $51,000,000.

PHILIPPINE PEOPLE.

The Philippine people, whether educated or uneducated, whether Filipino or Moro, are naturally a bright, keen, quick-witted people. They are not of the dull, thick-headed kind. There are several dialects, but whether Filipino or Moro they all spring from the Malay race. Magellan, who discovered the islands, found them a keen, virile, patriotic, and brave people, even at that time, and they put up a brave fight before they were conquered. They have their mythology and their history. Spain subdued them, but throughout her entire history with them they struggled to throw off the yoke of Spain, and when Dewey landed at Manila Bay, in May of 1898, they were engaged in a revolution against Spain and had overthrown the Spanish authority in all parts of islands except in and around the city of Manila.

Manila, a city of about 150,000, is a thoroughly cosmopolitan city, with all the conveniences of life found in an up-to-date American city, containing beautiful stores of all kinds, good hotels, and is alive with mercantile and manufacturing interests.

Cebu, the capitol of the island of Cebu, a city of 20,000 people, the home of Speaker Osmenia, is the second city of the Philippine Islands. San Pablo, Anti Polo, Baguio, Surigao, Cagayan, Camp Overton, Iligan, Jolo, Zamborango, and Iloilo are all prosperous towns in the various islands having a population of two to ten thousand people. Most of the cities have waterworks, electric lights, and drainage. We visited all of these islands and cities and found the people very hospitable everywhere. They insisted on serving us from four to six banquets a day. Everywhere were parades, speeches, and banners asking for independence.

LAKE LANAO AND BAGUIO.

While the country is very hot all the year, still they have two remarkable summer resorts. Every night in the year and part of the day it is cool and pleasant at Lake Lanao, in the heart of the island of Mindanao, within 6 degrees of the Equator. At Baguio, on the island of Luzon, you ascend 5,000 feet in 20 miles, and every night of the year you can rest in comfort at the hotel seated by a blazing log fire.

The Baguio Road from the lowlands up the mountains running with the Bued River and crossing it many times is said to be the most wonderful piece of mountain road building in the world. The United States spent $2,000,000 in gold in building this 20 miles of road only to find that we had nothing in the end but the experience. The narrow pass in the mountains slid together and banked up 150 feet of the Bued River. Across this river were some 200 iron bridges, where this road had crossed from side to side in going up the mountain. When the river broke loose it carried away all these bridges and twisted the iron and scattered them along its course like a twisted cotton string.

CAMP JOHN HAY AND NATIVE SOLDIERS.

At Camp John Hay, at Baguio, we saw more than 5,000 Igorotes scout soldiers, a fine body of native soldiers. These are the same Igorotes that traveling showmen take through the United States with rings in their noses, giving a false conception of the country and the people. These soldiers could obey and execute every command, speak English, dressed like our soldiers, lived like our soldiers, and American officers testified to their intelligence and worth.

Ten miles out from Zamboango we find the finest model penal farm of the world at San Ramon and at that place is located the largest and most beautiful coconut grove in the world. Christiana Falls of the Agus River, in Mindanao, is 225 feet high and one of the most beautiful falls in the world.

THE MOMUNGAN COLONY.

On the island of Mindanao is located the settlement of families called squawmen, white men who have married Filipino women. The Philippine Government advanced each family ₱1,200 ($600) to buy 16 hectors, or 40 acres, of land and to put up a home and purchase implements for farming. In Mindanao, also, are eight different Filipino colonies scattered over 100 miles of Moro country. Filipinos and Moros are visiting each other, and the time is thought to be soon at hand when the Moros will elect members to the Philippine Legislature.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

In all parts of the islands are many old parochial schools and many old, beautiful churches. They have a college in Manila older than Harvard, and to prove to the world that they are not semisavages but educated people, with spirit and ambition ready for self-government, every member of the Philippine Legislature is a college graduate.

THE PHILIPPINE PEOPLE AS DEWEY FOUND THEM IN 1898.

They have many able scholars, business men, and professional men. We should understand that they had 300 years of Spanish education and Christian education and parochial schools before we came among them. When Dewey sailed into Manila Bay, May, 1898, what kind of people did he find in the Philippine Islands? Admiral Dewey, in his communication to the Secretary of the Navy on the 29th day of August, said:

> The population of Luzon is reported to be something over 3,000,000, mostly natives. These are gentle, docile, and, under just laws and with the benefits of popular education, would soon make good citizens.
> In a telegram sent to the department on June 23 I expressed the opinion that "these people are far superior in intelligence and more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba, and I am familiar with both races. Further intercourse with them has confirmed me in this opinion."

The United States consul general at Hongkong, China, writing to the State Department at Washington, July, 1898, said:

> The Philippine Malays are a superior race to many other Asiatic peoples. I have lived among the Malays of the Straits Settlements and have been an honored guest of the different sultanates. I have watched their system of government and have admired their intelligence. The natives of the Philippine Islands belong to the Malay race, and while there are very few pure Malays among their leaders, I think their stock has rather been improved than debased by admixture. I consider the 40 or 50 Philippine leaders, with whose fortunes I have been very closely connected, both the superiors of the Malays and the Cubans.
> In conclusion, I wish to put myself on record as stating that the insurgent government of the Philippine Islands can not be dealt with as though they were North American Indians, willing to be removed from one reservation to another at the whim of their masters. If the United States decides not to retain the Philippine Islands, its 10,000,000 people will demand independence, and the attempt of any foreign nation to obtain territory or coaling stations will be resisted with the same spirit with which they fought the Spaniards.

The Philippine people when we first knew them were what the above authorities state they were. They have had 18 years of our assistance, more than $700,000,000 of our money, and the benefit of our teachers and missionaries. They print and read many papers and books, and yet we find those among us who still declare that these people are totally unfit for self-government, regardless of the fact that we have some few sections in the United States that have a larger percentage of illiteracy than is to be found in some sections in the Philippine Islands. I found them everywhere in all islands a musical, sentimental, home-loving, keen, quick-thinking, brave, and patriotic people. An Army officer's wife told me that she had often ridden all day with a single Igorrote guide in the mountains among the Igorrote tribes. If they know that you come in peace, as a friend, then everywhere you are safe and will be received with utmost native kindness.

ARGUMENTS USED AGAINST INDEPENDENCE FOR THE PHILIPPINES.

I desire to notice a few of the arguments used against withdrawing from the Philippines and granting independence to the Philippine people.

THE MISSIONARY ARGUMENT.

We used to hear the religious argument advanced—the missionary argument. My observation was that the Filipinos needed missionaries less than any country in the Orient; being a Christian people, these missionaries are needed in every land that I visited more than in the Philippines.

THE SCHOOL ARGUMENT.

We used to hear a good deal on the school question. We have followed the policy inaugurated by McKinley, followed by Taft and Roosevelt, and followed by the present administration, of substituting native teachers for American teachers. We have more than 8,000 native teachers in the schoolrooms in the Philippine Islands. The school question has about solved itself. We have about completed our work. Gentlemen may differ with me on that proposition. I do not believe the Philpine Islands will ever become an English-speaking country. I said to a teacher: "Do these children speak English on the playgrounds?" She said: "No; as soon as they get on the playground they talk in their own native tongue." "Do you try to get them to speak English?" "Yes," said she, "sometimes I threaten to punish them; but you know it is rather a cruel thing to punish a child for speaking in its mother tongue."

If you go into a schoolroom—and gentlemen say we have 600,000 children speaking English—if you go into a schoolroom and happen to know what they are talking about, you will follow them fairly well. They are doing the best they can about learning English. Possibly they are doing as well as we could do in learning their language. Three times we have set a date on which English would be used in court and every time we have revoked the act. But, gentlemen, we need and can use all these splendid American teachers in the United States. Many of them told me that their real work was completed, because they had developed sufficient native Filipino teachers to take their places. Two years ago I had the pleasure to attend a splendid meeting in the interest of and for the benefit of Berea College, held in the beautiful D. A. R. Hall in this city. The president of Berea College and other noted speakers made most pathetic appeals, and if what the president of the college and others from that locality said about the needs and conditions in the mountainous sections of the Southland be true, then, gentlemen, we can well use all these American teachers now in the Philippines to good advantage in our own land, in a territory larger than the territory of all the Philippines, populated by good, liberty-loving, fine, brave, pure-blooded Americans, who, we were informed, were needing our financial assistance and were most sorely in need of the opportunities of education.

THE TRADE ARGUMENT.

We used to hear a good deal about the trade argument. We spent 23 days going westward on the Pacific Ocean from Hawaii, and we passed one sailing trade steamer. The trail of that old trade argument has been through all the history of the past. Trade is all right when it comes naturally and legitimately, but overanxiety for trade has caused men to rob and murder their fellow men, and has caused nations to do the same thing. Once there was a famous orator who began and ended every speech with the trade argument of his day and age, "Carthage delenda est," and some people would carry the trade idea so far as to make it mean Filipino liberatum delenda est. Our trade will be greater with the Filipinos as our friends than our enemies.

THE ARGUMENT ABOUT AMERICAN INVESTMENTS.

We hear the argument concerning American interests in the Philippine Islands as a reason for not granting independence. Gentlemen, candidly, it is my opinion that it is not so much the bonds that are as the bonds that are to be about which some people are so anxious as to American interests in the Philippine Islands.

THE OLD MORO ARGUMENT.

We used to hear the argument used extensively that we do not hear any more, that if we withdrew our soldiers the Moro element would master the Filipino element—that is, that about 300,000 Moros would kill off 8,000,000 Filipinos. I passed through the entire Moro country.

Mr. Carpenter, a New York gentleman and a splendid man, a Republican whom Gov. Gen. Harrison, a Democrat, has appointed governor of the Moro country, has colonized eight colonies over 100 miles of Moro country in the island of Mindanao, each colony containing from 500 to 2,000 souls. When he first mentioned the proposition to do this everyone said, "Oh, the Moros will massacre the entire population the first night"; but the project was made, and there they live in peace together. I saw their children in their schools together; we met them in mass meetings together; they are living in peace together, working out the great Moro problem.

We had a fine meeting at Dato Piang's place. The dato is second in command under the Sultan of Sulu. The dato's son, whom a Texas lumberman brought to this country, gained a good knowledge of English in six months, and made a remarkable speech in English. I obtained a typewritten copy. I wish I had time to read it to you. I will insert it in my speech.

At Lake Lanao we met several datos with their tribes. We had a great mass meeting together. They all wanted to make speeches to us. While they could not read a word of English, still they showed fine emotion and fine sentiments of feeling.

WAR IS A CURSE; PEACE IS A BLESSING.

I remember the speech of one old dato. He got up and said to Mr. QUEZON, "We are glad you Filipinos are down here; we are glad to see you. The Spanish for hundreds of years have had us fighting each other, and we should not have done it. We are all of one skin; we are all of one race. See, our skin is all the same color. We want you to come amongst us, to live in peace and farm and raise rice." And then he said a remarkable thing: "The greatest disease"—and the word "disease" typifies everything that is horrible in that country—"the greatest disease that can happen to any nation, to any people, is war; the greatest good that can come to any people is peace. We want to live in peace together." And, Mr. Chairman, they will live in peace together if designing men do not go through that country haranguing them and exciting enmity in their hearts against one another. I want to say in passing that these people, all of them, whether Filipino or Moro, are people of great native ability. This is the universal verdict of travelers who are familiar with and have studied conditions in many lands.

I have remarked that both Filipino and Moro are people of great native ability—capable of great development in learning as they are already developed in agriculture and in many of the mechanical arts. As proof of this I herewith insert the speech of the young Moro referred to above—a speech delivered in fairly good English:

SPEECH OF DATU ABDULA PIANG (SON OF DATU PIANG) DELIVERED AT DULAUAN, COTABATO, JUNE 26, 1915, ON THE OCCASION OF THE VISIT OF THE CONGRESSIONAL PARTY TO THAT PLACE.

"Honorable gentlemen, it is a great honor to me to be permitted to address you here in behalf of my people. The Mindanao people are very poor, because they have no schools and have not yet learned the necessity of cultivating the soil in order to grow crops for sale. I have seen many very fine schoolhouses in the northern islands, but we do not have them here because we have no money to build them. We hope that the government will furnish us more money for more schools so that the Mindanao children may be educated. Myself and eight of my brothers have finished the primary school and we can easily see the advantage of education. We realize that the future development of our country depends upon the young people who are now growing up, and we feel the need of education, especially agricultural education. The Mindanao boy is not lazy, but he is exceedingly industrious and very quick to learn. With more schools we promise you rapid development in this valley. There has never been trouble between the Christian colonies and Mindanao colonies since they lived here in Cotabato. We are glad to see them cultivate the land here in Cotabato, as it will increase the amount of rice to be raised here and make greater business for this country. The Christian can learn something from the Mindanao which may be of benefit to him. The Mindanao can also learn things from the Christian which will help him. In this way the two classes of people are better fitted by being brought together. There is much land here in Cotabato which nobody works on. We want to see this land occupied so that it may be of some value. We want each Mindanao family to have enough land to live on, and the other land that is not occupied can be settled by Christians."

This speech was taken down by Gov. Carpenter's stenographer. It is a speech of a young Moro with six months' study of English. The Moros are classed as the most illiterate of all the Philippine people.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman's opinion whether he thinks it is necessary for us to keep the Army over there any longer to maintain peace, or could we recall the Army now and save that expense?

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. I think we could recall almost the entire Army. The native scouts could take care of the situation.

THE JAPANESE QUESTION.

Reference has been made to the Japanese question. We traveled through Japan from end to end. I talked with all the Japanese officials who would talk to me on the question. There may have been a time when Japan would have liked to have possessed the Philippines. There are not as many Japanese in the Philippines now as formerly. Why? Because they have found, as we have found, that it is not a white man's country or a country for people of the Temperate Zone. It is a Torrid Zone country, intended by the Creator for the home of a Torrid Zone people. As soon as they can earn a little money they get out and go on to the Hawaiian Islands, and as soon as they can earn a little money there they get out and go on to the United States, because the climate is too hot for them in the Philippines. Japan wants us to recognize a Monroe doctrine in the Orient. We do not want Japan to build up a strong nation in Mexico on our border. Our borders on the Orient, the northern islands of the Philippines, are within 100 miles of the southern coast of Japan's possession, Formosa, and Japan does not want us to build up a strong nation in the Orient. That is the entire interest that Japan has in this problem, in my estimation.

One Japanese official stated that the United States would have to pay them a large sum of money to have them relieve us of the Philippine Islands. He reasoned that control of the Philippines for them would mean keeping a large body of soldiers there, and for this the United States would have to compensate them.

THE SMALL AND WEAK NATION ARGUMENT.

The argument is sometimes advanced against giving the Philippine Islands independence that if they were given independence, to use the language so often employed, some stronger nation would gobble them up. If this argument were a valid argument against the founding of a Republic, then there would be no Republic on the face of the earth to-day. The Filipinos are now 9,000,000 strong. In 20 years from to-day they will have in the islands possibly 18,000,000 people. When the Republic of the United States was organized we were but 3,000,000 strong. Why is it necessary to suppose that some stronger nation or several stronger nations will unite to crush the Philippines? Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Switzerland,

Belgium, and several South American Republics are all weaker nations than the Republic of the Philippines would be and are situated geographically in far more dangerous positions to invite attack from stronger nations, besides Japan and Russia will not permit any European nation to overthrow the Philippines, and neither would England for like reasons permit any Asiatic nation to overthrow the Philippines. This argument so ofttimes used is an excuse rather than an argument. A republic is a growth—they must be given a chance to begin some time. Why not soon?

THE DIFFERENT RACES AND DIFFERENT LANGUAGES ARGUMENT.

We sometimes hear the argument used that the Philippines could not set up a Republic because of the different races and different languages in the Philippines. This again is an excuse rather than an argument against independence. When we established our own Republic we had many races of people and many different languages and we have found them all to be useful rather than detrimental to our Republic, and out of it has grown the typical American citizen, the most verile, strongest, and best citizenship in the world. This is an unfair argument and is not used against any other nation or people. The island of Great Britain has four distinct races and four distinct languages, and Great Britain has many races and many languages in her foreign possessions. Little Switzerland has a half dozen different races and half dozen different languages. Mexico by our very border has 41 languages and 51 dialects, yet no one uses this as an argument against a Republic in Mexico.

If we must wait until a country has a common language before setting up a republic, then no country on earth ever could or ever can set up a republic. While there are some 30 different dialects in the Philippine Islands there exists, however, three great languages—Spanish, Visayan, and Tagalog. Three-fourths of all the 9,000,000 people in the islands speak Visayan or Tagalog, while the Spanish is the language of the courts. More than 500,000 children are learning English in the schools. Has any nation in the past ever presented a better language situation at the time of founding a republic than the Philippines do at this very moment? The language argument also is an excuse rather than an argument against independence.

PULLING-DOWN-THE-FLAG ARGUMENT.

Of all the unfair arguments advanced toward granting independence to the Philippines the pulling-down-the-flag argument is the most unfair. Those who use this argument forget what our flag stands for. Our flag stands for an undissolvable union of indestructible States. Whenever we make it a sign and symbol of authority for anything but a republican form of government and raise it over anything but a free and independent people, we pull it down from the high level of humanity on which the blood of our fathers planted it to the low level of conquest and subjugation. That grand old man from Massachusetts, Senator Hoar, put it this way:

When you raise the flag over the Philippine Islands as an emblem of dominion and acquisition, you take it down from Independence Hall.

Do those who use this argument mean to imply that anywhere and everywhere the flag is raised for any purpose whatsoever any body of men can gather around it and use it for their own purposes of speculation, and hide behind it with the cry that we shall never pull down the flag? Wherever the American people want that glorious flag raised, they will raise it, and every drop of our blood will be spent, if necessary, to defend it; and when the American people want it taken down, they will take it down in honor and glory. All this they have done in the past many, many times. We raised that flag in Canada in 1812, and we hauled it down in honor. We raised that flag in Mexico in 1848, and planted it upon Chapultepec, and also upon the wall of the homes of the Montezumas, and we hauled it down again in honor. Gen. Lee raised the flag in Cuba and hauled it down again in honor. Decatur raised that flag over the walls of Tripoli, and took it down again in honor. It floated in the breeze of China, and we hauled it down in honor. Wherever it has floated its meaning has been liberty and a republican form of government. I would sooner see it taken down in honor by the American Nation, knowing that its principles had set up another Republic in the earth, than to see the principles of liberty and independence, for which it has always stood, hauled down. Those who use the flag argument have no argument and simply beg the question.

The flag stands for the principles of the Declaration of Independence, and that is what Lincoln said it stood for when he raised it over Independence Hall in 1861. The principles of the Declaration of Independence have circled the earth and changed the destiny of mankind. These principles have thrown down kings, overthrown monarchies, and set up republics all over the face of the earth. I have always believed that our flag and our Declaration of Independence were one and the same thing. One puts in language what the other stands for. I have always proudly believed that our mission among the people of the earth was to encourage nations to set up republics rather than to suppress that God-given desire. No, my friends, let that flag float on ever and always all over the earth, the sign and symbol of liberty and a republican form of government, so that any downtrodden people seeing our glorious banner may know what it stands for and lift up their heads into the sunlight of hope and thank God and take on new courage. [Applause.]

DO THE FILIPINOS WANT INDEPENDENCE?

Gentlemen have asked me, Do the Philippine people really want independence or is it just simply a desire on the part of designing politicians? Let the history of the struggle of 200 years in that country answer that question. In all the history of the past three centuries they have made revolution after revolution in that country and sacrificed blood and treasures to throw off the Spanish yoke.

In 1872 three priests—Burgos, Zamosa, and Gomez—professors in the Manila College, led a revolution of more than 20,000 people against Spanish authority. Spain promised to give them local self-government. After tricking them, on February 15, 1872, they took these three good men out and shot them to death at sunrise. Their school histories, that the boys read in the public schools of the Philippines, state that after this peace was only maintained in the islands at the cannon's mouth.

RIZAL.

They have produced a remarkable character in that country who is the Jefferson of all that country—Rizal. His great writings on liberty and the rights of man remind you of the great writings of Paine, Franklin, and Jefferson during the Revolutionary War. He was educated at the Manila University, also in France, Spain, Germany, and several foreign countries. He led a great movement, a great patriotic society, the Sons of Liberty, sprung up in that country. They tricked Rizal to Manila, and on December 30, 1896, they shot him to death at the spot where his monument now stands. He died with these words on his lips:

What is death to me? I have sown the seed. Others will reap.

THE DESIRE FOR LIBERTY A PASSION WITH THEM.

I visited a schoolroom where a teacher called up a class of boys and girls from 14 to 16 years of age, and that class did something that I do not believe a schoolroom in the United States can do to-day. They recited in concert Lincoln's speech at Gettysburg. I said to her, "Why do the children take to this sort of thing?" She said, "These people have few books. Sentiments about liberty, independence, and the rights of man appeal to these children and all of these people, and they memorize such sentiments and can tell you about these noble ideas. They can tell you what Thomas Jefferson said about the inalienable rights of man. It is a passion with them, inherited from their fathers; they are natural orators and speakers and they long for those things."

Mr. Chairman, I do not have it in my heart to condemn any people who have it in their hearts to long for liberty, who want to lift up their heads in the sunlight of hope, and who have the courage to come out and die for liberty as these men have who have died by the thousands in the struggles of the past. I simply want to allude to one circumstance. When our good ex-President, Mr. Taft, then Governor General of the islands, went to Iloilo and made his memorable speech, "The Philippines for the Filipinos," although we had had at one time 30,000 soldiers in those islands, we had not at that time entirely subdued them, and when he made that speech these people came in and brought in 40,000 Mauser rifles and laid them down, and said: "We are through fighting if that is the proposition we can expect for the future. We do not care much just how long you stay, so that we know that this country is to be ours some time." The Philippine people are the only Christian people in all the world who have never had a chance. Why not give them a chance now? Why not let them know that now for them the sun of liberty and independence is rising out of the long dark night of tyranny and oppression, and that for them the daydawn of freedom is breaking. [Applause.]

A MISREPRESENTED PEOPLE.

I do not know of any people in the history of the world who who have been so maligned and so misunderstood and misrepresented as the Filipino people. People speak of them as savages. Why, at evening parties in the Philippines you will find Filipino ladies in evening dress and Filipino gentlemen in evening dress. They speak two or three different languages, and they sometimes wonder at the extent of our education when we speak but one. They read what you Republicans say about us Democrats being unable to rule our country successfully, and they read what we Democrats say about you. They read about our burning cities and even men at the stake, and they think that we are a cruel people. They are very kind and hospitable among themselves, and they wonder at last just what we mean by our ideas of civilizing them.

At an evening party a Filipino gentleman gave me this illustration. This gentleman said to me: "Now, we are grateful for what you have done for us here, but let me illustrate my thought. We can not help but be suspicious. We know the number of times we have been tricked by the Spaniards. We can not but be suspicious when we see you making foolish expenditures of money here."

Let me illustrate, said he: Half the human race live in houses made of bamboo wood. Now, if some man came along and wanted to build me a better house, that would be very kind of him, but if, when he had built for me a better house he thereby thought he owned my home and wanted me to move on because he built it, and therefore claimed to own it, then I would have preferred not to have had his help or his kindness, because I was satisfied; and so he said, "When we see you building these fortifications here we wonder what you are going to do with them; and if you intend to leave, why you build them."

THE INALIENABLE RIGHTS OF LIBERTY.

May it not be proper to inquire what rights the Filipinos have even under our Constitution?

We can not deny to a competent people the right to rule their own affairs. The Filipino people, like other races, have the inalienable right of liberty. A republic can have no subjects. Under our Constitution there can be no subjects. I want to repeat what I said to a mass meeting of Filipinos and Americans held on the public square in Cebu June 18, 1915. I said to them: "If we keep faith with the Filipinos we must give you an independent form of government, if you desire it. To my mind it makes little difference whether you can establish a government entirely based on the ideals and theories of the American people; but you should be given an opportunity, if you desire it, to work out your own destiny according to your own ideals and the peculiar conditions that confront you. For your success or failure the Filipino people must be ready to assume the entire responsibility. You must understand what liberty really is. The true republic must be founded on education and on the principle that all people are equal before the eyes of the law, high and low, rich and poor alike. Naturally, you long for your independence; and the most sincere flattery you can give us is your desire to form a republic modeled after our own." [Applause.]

THEIR ABILITY TO MAINTAIN A SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Some have asked about their ability to maintain self-government. Gentlemen must remember that under Spanish rule they held local office, and that they understood how to elect a presidente of their community and local officers. Under United States control we first began by giving them members of the legislature; then the entire legislature; then members of the senate and of the supreme court; and now they have a majority of all the members of the legislature and of the supreme court. And one significant thing, gentlemen, of all the laws they have passed in the Philippine Legislature not one of them has ever been pronounced unconstitutional by the supreme court. The chief justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippines is a Filipino who would grace the supreme court of any land. Judge Johnson, of the Philippine Supreme Court, a former professor of law at Ann Arbor, Mich., told me that this chief justice was one of the greatest legal minds he had ever met anywhere. My friend and traveling companion, Senator SHAFROTH of Colorado, and myself thoroughly agreed in regard to the ability of the Filipino people to maintain an independent form of government.

In view of conditions surrounding the seizure of the Philippine Islands the argument that their people will be satisfied because we have given and will continue to give them better government than they can give themselves, even if possible, becomes untenable and opposed to the impulse of every liberty-loving people.

THE PEOPLE THEMSELVES.

The assistant director of education told me that in Manila alone there were more than 600 efficient native stenographers, who could take dictation in both English and Spanish, and that there were thousands who daily did good work as typewriters.

Native electrical engineers, civil engineers, public accountants, architects, dentists, pharmacists, and all the professions have increased in large numbers.

The census of 1903 showed that of the males 21 years of age and over 32.2 per cent at that time could read and write Spanish, English, or some other language. Gen. Frank McIntyre, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, before the Senate committee estimated that now 50 per cent could either read or write some language. The increase represents commendable progress.

IN THE SCHOOLS.

There are in the islands 700 American and between 7,000 and 8,000 native school-teachers, all instructing the children in all the branches of education in English. How many of our teachers could conduct all the classes in the various grades of schools in a foreign language? Of course, they could acquire it, but it would take work and ability. Why not concede that the Filipino teachers are civilized and possess education and ability which fits them for citizenship in any country?

It should be remembered that every cent for education, including the cost of all school buildings, has been paid by the Filipino people in taxes laid upon their property for the payment of appropriations cheerfully voted by their general assembly. There is no likelihood that such appropriations would cease with independence or that education would lapse. Even the Aguinaldo constitution of January 20, 1899, provided that "popular education shall be obligatory and gratuitous in the schools of the nation."

There is an intense desire for education upon the part of the Filipino children. There is no compulsory education law in the islands, but 600,000 children are now enrolled, and fully as many more would be in attendance if there were sufficient schoolhouses. In my recent trip to the islands I visited a number of schools, but never found any vacant rooms or unoccupied seats. At Jolo the Moro children were attending school in large numbers, and there was a demand for 60 more schools on that island. They were being taught in English, and a Moro boy delivered the address of welcome to our party in that language.

IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE.

There are now in the Philippine government classified service 2,218 Americans and 7,710 Filipino officers. These were appointed under civil-service examinations. There is no suggestion that these Filipinos are incapable or do not discharge their duties as well and faithfully as the Americans. Would they not be equally as capable and efficient under a government of their own?

The chief justice of the supreme court of the Philippines is a native, and three of the seven members of that court are natives, all of them recognized as able and learned judges.

Of the judges of the courts of the first instance, 22 are Filipinos and 14 are Americans. The municipal courts are presided over almost entirely by Filipinos. The attorney general and nearly all his staff are Filipinos. Of the 9 commissioners who now constitute the upper house of the legislature, 5 are natives and 4 are Americans. Is it possible that these capable, efficient native officers, as soon as their appointment or election were provided for by their own government, would become incapable or inefficient?

The Filipino people for many years have been electing the governors of their Provinces. There has been no contention that the governors selected were not good and capable men, or that their administrations did not compare favorably with those of similar officers anywhere.

In visiting the southern islands I traveled for two weeks with a committee of the general assembly, consisting of the speaker, Mr. Osmenia, and 13 members. They were intelligent, dignified men, and all were fine public speakers. Is it possible that men of such education and learning are incapable of enacting laws to govern themselves? What presumption it is on the part of many of our citizens to contend that such a body in the Philippines can not legislate wisely for their own people.

WHY WE SHOULD GIVE THEM INDEPENDENCE.

I want to give you some reasons why I favor independence for the Philippine Islands and why I think we should state that this is our ultimate purpose. I think we have done our duty by them. If we should go out in 4 years, we will have been there 22 years. We will have spent about $800,000,000 for them. I think we will have done our duty by them. Ex-President Roosevelt has well stated the argument in his recent book, which I shall quote later.

PHILIPPINE MILITARY WEAKNESS.

All of us must recognize the great military weakness that these islands are to us. They would enable any great power in war with us to obtain an easy victory over us. The Philippines are just halfway around the world from where we sit to-day, about 12,000 miles from this Capitol, and 7,500 miles from our western shores. How are we going to get coal there from our West Virginia and Pennsylvania fields? We do not have coal sufficient in our ships, with all the tenders accompanying, to keep a battleship going when we get there, and our ships would be picked off one by one while trying to get to the Philippines.

Coal being a contraband of war, no neutral nation would have a right to sell it to us.

WE NEED CORREGIDORS AT HOME.

At Corregidor, in Manila Bay, we have spent $7,000,000 for one great fortification. We need those Corregidors at San Francisco, New York, Baltimore, and at other places along our shores, instead of 8,000 miles away from home in Manila Bay.

YEARLY EXPENSE TO UNITED STATES.

There has been a dispute about the yearly expense of the islands. I went to the military bookkeeper, as it were, of the islands and the figures he gave me show that we spend $12,000,000 in gold in that country for the Navy and $13,000,000 in gold for the Army. And we have other expenses also. If you will divide the total yearly expenses by 435—the number of congressional districts in the United States—you will find that in each congressional district in the United States the taxpayers are asked to contribute about $60,000 in gold yearly for the expenses in the Philippines. Should we do this for all time to come for the benefit and pleasure of the few Americans in the Philippines and American investors in the Philippines?

Mr. AUSTIN. And do we not have to send that money to the Navy whether in the Philippine Islands or in the Pacific or not?

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. But we would have the Army and Navy at home where we need it and where it ought to be, and it would result to the taxpayers in a saving exactly to the amount we spend in the Philippines—that is, about $30,000,000. Thirty million dollars yearly.

NOT A WHITE MAN'S COUNTRY.

The Philippines is not a white man's country. The United States Government recognizes that fact. White men can not live in the sun and work there. They live in the shade with all the servants they have there. Even our American animals, horses, and cattle can not live there. Every ship that comes home has its iron cages bringing our soldiers that have become insane with the heat. The Government recognized that fact when they passed an act so that the soldiers could come back in two years rather than stay there three years, and only 20 per cent of the United States officers there elected to stay in the Philippine Islands the three-year limit.

Gentlemen ask will they have trouble among themselves if we withdraw. Possibly. Every Republic is a growth. We had lots of trouble in this country after the Revolutionary War. We set up and broke down with one form of government. We had six rulers before Washington was elected President. One government entirely broke down. We had 10 distinct attempts at nullification and secession, one armed rebellion, and 3 assassinations of Presidents, and we have even burned cities and men at the stake. I presume these people in their development will have trouble. Nothing more horrible will happen, I think, in the development of their affairs than has happened in our own country, I am sorry to say.

Now, some one has asked can they take care of themselves if we leave them. They have about 6,000 fine native soldiers. They are fine, strong, well-trained men. And besides they had a good many men drilled in the art of war while Spain held control. They will be able to give a good account of themselves if attacked by any foe. Besides they have proven many times that they are a brave people who will die for their country and their liberty.

THE HIGHER OBLIGATION DEMANDS THAT WE KEEP FAITH.

But, above all other considerations, we should give the Philippines independence because of the higher obligation we owe to our honor and to ourselves to keep faith with our promises, expressed and implied.

The true honor of a nation is found only in deeds of justice and strict adherence to the principles upon which it was founded. Whenever a nation departs from the fundamental principles upon which it was established or forgets its ideals it is embarking upon a perilous sea without chart or compass to guide its course.

All true Democrats believe that dependence is the greatest curse that can befall any people; that only a free and independent people can build up a great nation. In order to be strong the people must be self-reliant, self-ruled, and self-sustained. The dependence of one people upon another is destructive of every element which could make them great or prosperous. Such a nation will neither accumulate wealth nor win character; it will neither benefit mankind by the enterprise of its merchants nor instruct mankind by the example of its statesmen. As Americans we are inheritors and conservators of national freedom. Let us, while others are seeking it in restlessness and fear, be a steady shining light to guide their course, and not a wandering ignis fatuus to bewilder and mislead them. Let us not force our habits, customs, and laws upon the Filipino people against their will. Leave them to live their own lives, cherishing their own aspirations, making and meeting their own destiny. This is just, it is right, and it is, under all of the circumstances, the only honorable course to pursue.

I approve and want to insert a part of an editorial appearing in the Ohio State Journal, the oldest Republican newspaper in the State of Ohio. The editorial is from the pen of a Civil War veteran, the able editorial editor of that paper, Col. E. L. Wilson, whose noted review of President Wilson's able leadership, printed in the same paper in 1914, was used as the opening article on the first leaf of the National Democratic Campaign Yearbook for that year:

"This great Republic should grant self-government for the Filipinos, because they want it, if for no other reason. They are as much entitled to govern themselves as we are. Our sole reason for holding back this right to the Philippines is altruistic, which is not a sound reason. It is very easy to assume this superiority and not always as easy to show it. Besides, it is not fair to spend millions of money belonging to the taxpayers of this country to impose upon another people a government they don't want. The greatest good we can render that people is to let them take care of themselves. The very effort is an evolution toward a nobler destiny. We don't want the Filipinos to be Americanized. They belong to a different place in the sun and should be allowed to make the most of it."

THE CONSTITUTION AND THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

We should give the Philippine Islands independence because we can not keep the Philippines and also keep the ideals upon which the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States were founded. I prefer to keep these ideals and let the Philippines go. We can not keep the Philippines and retain the Monroe doctrine. I prefer to keep the Monroe doctrine and let the Philippines go. [Applause.]

WHY NOT KEEP THE FAITH?

We went to war with Spain to free Cuba. Congress solemnly so declared. Did we have in our hearts any other motive toward the Philippines?

Could the Philippine people forget the words of President McKinley at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, when he said: "Forcible annexation can not be thought of; that, according to the American code of morals, is criminal aggression"?

From those words would not the Filipino people have a right to understand that forcibly to annex their islands would be criminal aggression? Would they have aided us in conquering Spain if they had dreamed it was our purpose to subjugate them?

In order to comprehend the feeling and point of view of the Filipino people it must be remembered that we are in the islands by virtue of conquest, that their people had never committed hostile acts against us, but on the other hand when we were at war with Spain, in their struggle for independence they furnished us soldiers to be used against our enemy.

It must be remembered that they had issued a declaration of independence and that on July 4, 1898, Gen. Anderson, then in command of our troops, wrote to the commander of the Filipino forces: "I desire to have the most amicable relations with you and to have you and your people cooperate with us in military operations against the Spanish forces," and again on July 23, 1898, in a letter to Aguinaldo he stated: "When I came here three weeks ago I requested your excellency to give what assistance you could to procure means of transportation for the American Army, as it was to fight in the cause of your people."

GRATEFUL TO AMERICA.

And soon thereafter Gen. Aguinaldo issued a proclamation to the Filipinos in which he said: "Die rather than be ungrateful to our American liberators. When you see the American flag flying, assemble in numbers. They are our redeemers."

It must be remembered that the Philippine Army drove from the islands or captured every Spanish soldier except those in the walled city of Manila, and at the time of the surrender of that city their armies occupied nine-tenths of surrounding firing line.

Taking into consideration the circumstances attending the occupation of the islands, our principles of government, and what was said at the time and afterwards by those in authority, it seems to me no one can doubt but that the natives understood that they were to have their independence.

Even Mr. LODGE, a Republican Senator from Massachusetts, said: "We are there because we represent the spirit of liberty and the spirit of the new time, and Spain is over against us because she is medieval, cruel, and dying. We have grasped no man's territory, we have taken no man's property, we have invaded no man's rights. We do not ask their lands."

Mr. Cleveland aptly expressed the views of the Democracy of America when he said: "The Government of a remote and alien people should have no permanent place in the purposes of our national life."

Democrats believe with John Jay, the eminent American statesman, in his observation: "When a nation led to greatness by the hand of liberty, and possessed of all the glory that heroism, munificence, and humanity can bestow, descends to the ungrateful task of subjecting an alien people to its domination and control, instead of giving support to freedom, turns advocate for conquest and subjection, there is reason to suppose she has either ceased to be virtuous or been extremely negligent in the selection of her rulers."

THE SUPREME REASON FOR GRANTING INDEPENDENCE—GOD-GIVEN RIGHT TO ALL RACES.

But the one supreme reason above all others why we should give independence to the Philippines is that freedom and independence is a God-given right to every race of people. The Creator of all men has planted in the breast of every man of every race and every clime the desire for liberty and freedom and independence for his country. I marvel at the conflicting emotions that must come to the honest heart and candid man who in this debate vehemently declares for freedom for some particular people in some particular part of the world, as some Democrats have done to-day. Is it their conception that the Creator and Common Father of all men has intended freedom for some races of men in some certain places of the earth? Their votes and speeches to-day would seem to indicate that that was their conception of the God-given boon of freedom and liberty.

For myself I have a different conviction, and years ago, when a member of the legislature of my native State, I expressed that conviction at the time when the little Republic of the gallant Boers were making one of the bravest and most tragic fights in all the history of mankind for the maintenance of their republic form of government, their homes and firesides, and the graves where sleep their dead. I said then and I say now that I believe in English liberty for Englishmen, German liberty for Germans, French liberty for Frenchmen, American liberty for Americans, Irish liberty for Irishmen, Boer liberty for the Boers, and Filipino liberty for the Filipinos.

When I see men vehementing, orating, and demanding liberty exclusively for their race of people and their fatherland country and then voting against liberty for other races and other countries, I am reminded of the selfish man who prayed thus:

O Lord, bless me and my wife,
My son John and his wife;
Us four and no more.

The very nature of the case would show that such a prayer could not be answered, and the very nature of the other case casts upon it the blighting curse of insincerity and selfish inhumanity. [Applause.]

WHEN SHALL WE GRANT THEM INDEPENDENCE?

When shall we grant them their independence? This is significant. If with a Democratic House and Senate and a Democratic President and with a few investments and bonds there we can not give them independence, will we ever be able to do it when we have hundreds of millions of bonds and when American industries are scattered over all the islands? [Applause.]

ROOSEVELT'S POSITION.

I desire to quote and approve what that great President and statesman, ex-President Roosevelt, recently said on this subject.

Ex-President Roosevelt, in his last publication—1916—entitled "Fear God and Take Your Own Part," at page 226, uses this language:

"This administration was elected on the specific promise to give freedom to the Philippines. The United States must keep its promises. No greater service has been rendered by any people to another during the past 100 years than we have rendered to the Philippines and than we have rendered to Cuba.

"Above all, we have promised the Filipinos independence in terms which were inevitably understood to be independence in the immediate future.

"Such indecision in international conduct shows that this people ought not to undertake the government of a distant dependency, and this both from military reasons and because of the need of keeping promises that have been made. Let us, then, as speedily as possible, leave the Philippines; and, as the Filipinos desire us to leave, we would be quit of all moral obligations for them and would under no circumstances be obliged to defend them from other nations."

Lord Macaulay says: "Many politicians of our time are in the habit of laying it down as a self-evident proposition that no people ought to be free till they are fit to use their freedom. The maxim is worthy of the fool in the old story who resolved not to go into the water till he had learned to swim. If men are to wait for liberty till they become wise and good in slavery, they may, indeed, wait forever." [Applause.]

WHY THE PREAMBLE TO THE BILL AND EXPLICIT PROMISE OF INDEPENDENCE IS NECESSARY.

We who have insisted that the preamble to the independence bill should be explicit and certain in regard to the promise for independence to the Philippines wanted to so fix this entire matter so that in the future the Nation would not be led by false sophistry and commercial greed to violate its sacred promises so often made or be false to our ideals of liberty. In short, to paraphrase that great truism first uttered by a great Democrat and later made immortal by Lincoln, we wanted to make it sure and certain, so that the hope of a free government of the Philippine people, for the Philippine people, and by the Philippine people will not perish from the earth. [Applause.]

THOU SHALT NOT COVET.

The speaker who would set himself to the task to adequately reply to the arguments advanced against granting independence to the Philippines might very properly take for his text the words of that divine personality who was more than man, the Savior of all men, these words: "Thou shalt not covet." And in these words are wrapped up the very essence of the opposition to Philippine independence. I could go through the pages of history, had I the time to do so, and show how those nations of the past that have disregarded this divine injunction have perished from the face of the earth.

The Boer Republic of South Africa and its government were safe until gold and diamonds were discovered there. The thought and declaration of all our statesmen at the beginning and the official words of President McKinley at that time were for Philippine independence, and no reversal of this position was put forth until the fine soil, fine timber, and fine opportunities, and fine official position, argument, and talk became so broadspread over this country. In the United States there are men and in this House possibly there are men who will vote on this bill affecting the destiny of 9,000,000 of people who are coveting the Philippine Islands, not to go there and work there, live and die there as citizens of the Philippines, but to go there and hold high offices of honor, living in splendor with servants and servitude, like Warren Hastings of old, coveting the Philippines for themselves and their friends.

There are business men in the Philippine Islands who went there as soldiers or were sent there as public officials who covet the opportunities and pleasures of political life there or the great profit of being in business in Manila, where $30,000,000 of American gold, American taxpayers' money, yearly sent to the Philippines must necessarily largely filter through their channels of business, thus enabling them, as some have admitted to me, to make three dollars to one, more than they could make in any other place on earth. The purchasing power of our money is double in the Philippine Islands. They can employ the best of servants in the world, the native Filipinos, to run their automobiles, to do their cooking, and to serve them for personal comfort at ₱5, or $2.50 in gold, per month. None of them will or can work in the sun, and they have all the pleasures and comforts of the palmy, tropical Philippines. The most of these men forget all about the rights of men, the Declaration of Independence, the teachings of Jefferson and Lincoln, and when you mention these things in your speeches in their presence in the Philippines, they curtly tell you to cut out all such punk, as they term it; and the most of them will tell you that the Filipino people will not be ready for self-government for 50 years to come, or at least for their lifetime and the lifetime of their children. Some of them told me they had already made all the money they wanted, and when the United States Government left they were ready to leave. Most of them, of course, are opposed to Filipino independence and want to see the stream of gold from the United States Government keep on flowing and the $60,000 yearly from every congressional district in the United States of the taxpayers' money keep on coming to the Philippine Islands.

We are told not to covet our neighbor's house and lands, and the same Divine Authority explains to us just who our neighbors are. [Applause.]

SHALL THE UNITED STATES RULE THE PHILIPPINES OR THE PHILIPPINES RULE THE UNITED STATES?

When the treaty of peace had been signed one of the Spanish commissioners is said to have made this remark to the United States commissioners: "Gentlemen, I thank you for defeating us; our defeat will prove to be our victory; your victory will prove to be your defeat."

We entertain the delusion that the United States is ruling the Philippines. In a much graver sense the facts are that the Philippines are ruling and changing the Government of the United States. Already the Philippine question has been a deciding factor in two presidential elections in the United States. No such question should enter into the presidential campaigns of the United States. Questions affecting conditions in the Philippines will govern the motives and votes of Members of the Congress of the United States as long as we retain those islands. This unnatural situation for a Republic is neither best for the people of the United States nor for the people of the Philippine Islands.

WHY SHOULD NOT THIS GREAT NATION AND THE AMERICAN PEOPLE BE FAIR IF THEY CAN NOT BE GENEROUS IN REGARD TO THE ABILITY AND ADVANCEMENT OF THE FILIPINO PEOPLE?

World-wide travelers have told us after their investigation that the Filipino people were the most able, apt, keen, and quick-witted of all the people of the Orient, further advanced in education and civilization than the Cubans and some South American Republics are, and far superior to all the other island people of the tropical Indian Seas. Admiral Dewey gave this testimoney and American consuls in the Orient have on file in State Department of our Government testimony to the same effect.

I found the common farming country people in the Philippines more intelligent, more humane, and superior in every way to the farming country people in China, Chosen, or Japan, and yet we are supposed to have been sympathizing with the establishment of a Republic in China.

These people have a natural desire for education and information. They publish daily papers in all parts of the islands, they have many authors of great books, they are natural orators and have a fondness for public life which is to be no more condemned in that country than in this. They have many able public men. We are acquainted with the fine ability of their Representative in this Congress, Hon. MANUEL L. QUEZON, who has so well and ably represented his country here, and his colleague Hon. Manuel Earnshaw, while the speaker of their House of Representatives, Speaker Osmenia is a man of great ability who could preside with credit to himself and country over any legislative body in the world, but this, as some gentlemen would have you believe, does not exhaust their list of great men. They have many educated, intelligent, finely equipped men ready for public duties in all parts of the islands. They have a college older than Harvard, and other fine institutions of learning. I was impressed with the splendid ability of their young men between 18 and 25. Many of them are fine speakers in two or three different languages and quite a number of them are authors of books of merit.

They have textbook writers in law, medicine, philosophy, and science whose works are used all over that part of the world, and they even have some millionaires who are philanthropists. Mr. Theodoro R. Yangco subscribed and paid 20,000 pesos to the new Young Men's Christian Association building in Manila, a most beautiful and splendid building, in which I had the pleasure of making an address to a fine, intelligent body of citizens of Manila. In that delicate and intricate science the knowledge of which foretells the storms and disaster on the ocean as our Weather Bureau foretells like storms and disaster on the land, a Filipino professor rules the ships and commerce of the world, and yet some American gentlemen with monumental self-esteem, often men who can barely read and write, assume to tell us that their living among these people and having control over them would be a sort of a divine help and benefit to them.

HAS 300 YEARS OF CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION, EDUCATION, AND CONTROL LEFT THEM SO LOW IN THE SCALE OF DEVELOPMENT?

Do gentlemen here to-day who are opposed to Philippine independence mean to say and affirm that more than 300 years of Christian preaching, teaching, education, and control has been so impotent and barren of results as to leave the Filipino people at this date in a semicivilized condition and unfit to set up and maintain among themselves a decent, self-respecting self-government suited to the needs and conditions that confront them? I deny it and do not believe it. Christian preaching, teaching, education, and control have made them what they are to-day—the only Christian people in the Orient. It is my belief, based upon travel and observation among them, that they can set up and maintain a better republic than one-half the republics in the world to-day.

THEIR MARTYRS AND SACRED SPOTS OF FREEDOM.

Moreover, gentlemen, these people have struggled and shed their blood for liberty for 200 years against Spanish tyranny and oppression in a way and with a spirit that should challenge your admiration. They have had their Joseph Warren, Paul Revere, and Nathan Hale of glorious memory; their Bunker Hill, Lexington, and Valley Forge of sacred history; their Jefferson and Lincoln of immortal fame. [Applause.]

NO NATION CAN ENDURE WITHOUT A COMMON SPIRIT OF NATIONAL PATRIOTISM.

Gentlemen of the House, I want to lay down a proposition—a truism in government—which, if I am in error about, I wish some gentleman would controvert. It is this: No nation can endure without a common spirit of national patriotism.

In most nations this common spirit of national patriotism rests upon a common race blood and in some, in addition, upon a common race or state religion. In this sense we speak of the English Nation, the French Nation, the German Nation, the Italian Nation, the Jewish Nation, the Greek Nation, and the Russian Nation.

In the United States we have no common race blood and we have no common or state religion. Here the mingling of all the best blood of all the races has produced the typical American citizen, the best citizenship of the world.

IN THE UNITED STATES.

In the United States our common spirit of national patriotism rests neither upon a common race blood nor a common religion or state religion. Upon what, then, does it rest? Gentlemen, it rests upon this, and this alone: It rests upon our common ideals of liberty and the rights of man as set forth in the Declaration of Independence and as promulgated into law in the Constitution of our country. He who would weaken or destroy these ideals for any purpose whatsoever weakens and destroys the permanency of this Republic, pulls out the very foundation stones upon which our temple of liberty is builded; and the question I want to put to the heart and conscience of every man is this: How does the principle of permanently holding the Philippine Islands and the Filipino people against their will, should they desire an independent republican form of government, square itself with the principles found in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, the principles which we must observe and cherish if our Republic is to endure? [Applause.]

OUR UNNATURAL AND DANGEROUS POSITION.

To those who want to see the United States adopt the course and follow the colonization policy of Great Britain I want to quote what Gladstone said. Gladstone pointed out that under the theory and genius of our Constitution and Government, the United States could never adopt the British colonizational system without surrendering the foundation principles of the Republic, because in a Republic the central thought and essence is equality, while in a monarchy the recognized and accepted thought is classes and inequality. The British Government recognizes and rules her possessions and people accordingly, and it is the only way that a monarchy and colonial possessions can exist.

It is well known that when our commissioners were sent abroad to arrange a treaty with Spain at the close of the Spanish War President McKinley instructed them under no circumstances to take over the Philippine Islands, but merely arrange for a coaling station there. The way the radical change was consummated is related by the well-known British publicist, Mr. Stead, in the British Saturday Review. I quote him verbatim. He says:

"The diplomatic agents of Great Britain, however, insisted that the United States take these islands to preserve the balance of police power. The United States gets its territory in the east by the assistance of the moral power of Great Britain. Let us be frank and say outright that we expect mutual gain and material interests in this arrangement. The Americans are making their bargain under the protecting naval strength of England."

Thus we entered upon the British colonization system which Gladstone tells us we can not maintain without destroying the ideals upon which our Government rests. [Applause.]

THE NATION'S GREATEST STATESMEN HAVE BEEN CHAMPIONS FOR PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE.

Some speakers here to-day have assumed to affect and impress the country with the idea that the demand for Philippine independence is a premature impulse. Who are the men in the past who have uttered burning words of living truth for Philippine independence? To mention their names is to call the roll of the Nation's greatest statesmen, living and dead, in the past quarter of a century. I wish I had space to give a quotation from each of them. Their ability and patriotism can not be quesioned and their argument and appeal has never been answered.

To those Democrats, and Republicans as well, who are speaking against Philippine independence to-day I respectfully recommend a study of the speeches of this great roll of names, to call the roll of which is to name the Nation's immortals, the Nation's immortals dead, and the Nation's greatest living statesmen in the last fifty years. A partial list included such patriots, orators, and statesmen as Grover Cleveland, William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, William J. Bryan, and President Wilson; Senators George F. Hoar, George G. Vest, John G. Carlisle, John W. Daniels, George F. Edmunds, A. O. Bacon, A. S. Clay, BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN, William E. Mason, Arthur P. Gorman, Carl Schurz, Stephen M. White, William V. Allen, Henry M. Teller, John Sherman, and others. In the House, Speaker CHAMP CLARK, DeArmond, OSCAR UNDERWOOD, and many others; Andrew Carnegie; Samuel Gompers; David Starr Jordan; Charles F. Adams; Henry Van Dyke; Bishops Spaulding and Potter; Theodore Cuyler; Patrick A. Collins; Rev. Dr. Thomas J. Conaty; and a notable list too long to enumerate.

Is there any gentleman in this House so great in his own estimation and so fatuous with self-importance that he would not consider himself complimented, elevated, and honored to find himself in fellowship with this roll of American scholars, orators, statesmen, and patriots? [Applause.]

SIGNS OF WARNING IN THE SKY OF FREEDOM.

Gentlemen of the House, I am deeply moved and impressed with the importance of this hour. No greater question, of more far-reaching importance, has challenged the attention of Congress in 50 years. I want to, if I can, epitomize this entire proposition as it affects our country's welfare by a few quotations that seem to me to stand out like burning signs of warning on the sky of freedom.

CAUSE OF THE DOWNFALL OF THE ROMAN REPUBLIC.

Froude in his Life of Cæsar says that the Roman Republic's downfall dates from the time when the Roman people developed a desire to rule over and possess the country of alien people. God keep our beloved Republic from entering upon that course that has been the downfall of every other republic in the history of the world.

THOMAS JEFFERSON'S ADVICE AND WARNING TO THE YOUNG REPUBLIC.

Thomas Jefferson, the greatest political lawgiver and apostle of liberty the world has seen since Moses, warned the young Republic of the United States never to acquire any territory that was not contiguous, practically uninhabited, and which could not be developed by American citizens into future States of the American Union.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S ADVICE AND WARNING TO THE REPUBLIC.

That great pupil of Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, the great martyr and apostle of liberty, said:

"No man is good enough to govern another without the other's consent."

"He who refuses liberty to another deserves it not himself, and under the dispensation of a just God can not long retain it."

[Applause.]

PERICLES.

Pericles gave his countrymen good advice, and it is good advice to-day:

"Safeguard and defend your boundaries; do not extend them; do not let seas divide them."

THE VERDICT OF HISTORY.

Creasy, in his great work, says:

"There has never been a republic yet in history to acquire dominion over another nation that did not rule it selfishly and oppressively."

When I think of the course in which our ship of state is sailing, these messages of liberty sound like the alarm of fire bells in the night—voices like Joan of Arc heard ring down out of the skies.

LEST WE FORGET.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have observed the course of this debate with the deepest solicitude.

The arguments used here to-day by some of our Republican friends against independence for the Philippines, stripped of its mask and verbiage, means, if it means anything, that you are opposed to ever granting independence to these people.

THE LINCOLN ORATORS OF THIS HOUSE NOT QUOTING LINCOLN, JEFFERSON, AND THE DECLARATION TO-DAY.

I have observed and it has been noted that the Lincoln orators of this House, who quote Lincoln on every occasion, have not referred to him or mentioned his name in this debate. Is it not passing strange that there is a side to a debate dealing with the government and future of 9,000,000 people where the orators on that side can not appropriately quote from Lincoln, Jefferson, the Declaration of Independence, Whittier, Lowell, Wendell Phillips, or William Lloyd Garrison; can not quote from any great epic, oration, poem, or poet of liberty or from any battle hymn or song of freedom?

A GREAT DEMOCRATIC OPPORTUNITY.

I want to warn my Democratic friends that if we fail now in this crisis we will have missed the most glorious opportunity that has come to us in 50 years. Republicans have proudly boasted of freeing 3,000,000 colored men. They have claimed that credit, regardless of the fact that as many Democratic bones bleach on the battle fields and as much blood and treasure was poured out from northern Democratic homes as Republican homes to purchase that freedom. Here we as a party have the God-given opportunity to lead in the movement to give freedom to 9,000,000 people, and it saddens my heart to see that there are those among us who claim to be the followers of Jefferson who can not hear the heart beats of humanity above the clinking of the coin.

Our brethren deceived themselves with excuses, but these excuses will not excuse them.

THE INEVITABLE CONFLICT.

Since the beginning of time there has been an irrepressible conflict between the spirit of race ownership and the spirit of race independence. Education and government of one race by another are irrepressible and irreconcilable influences. One must fail, one must conquer. Let not gentlemen deceive themselves. If we continue to educate the Filipino people, they, like all other races since the dawn of history, will some day strike for an independent form of government, and your action in defeating a promise of independence will simply mean to say to the people of the United States that there are schoolboys now swinging their buckets to and from country homes to country schools who will be called upon in the future some time to fight and die in the Philippines. It will simply mean that men of another race and another clime, 12,000 miles removed from our Capitol, will be stood up and shot down, like in Ireland to-day, because they dare to desire to set up an independent form of government in their own land and to put in practice the principles of liberty and rights of man which our very education has instilled into them. And what is your answer for all this—business, business, business. Business purchased at such a price would be criminal folly.

Across this path I want to place the common-sense signboard of

"STOP, LOOK, AND LISTEN!"

Three and a half centuries ago Charles V boasted that the sun never set upon the dominions which Spain maintained by wars in Europe, Africa, America, and the islands of the sea. Where now is that magnificent empire? Gone; forever vanished. Not enough left to cast a shadow. England boasts to-day, as did Charles V, that the sun never sets upon the Empire that, like Spain, she has maintained with unceasing wars. And, like Spain, she, too, in time may see a dismal wreck and ruin, wrought by the natural blight incident to colonial possessions.

Macaulay says:

"We venture to say that colonial empire has been one of the greatest curses to modern Europe. What nation has it ever strengthened? What nation has it ever enriched? What have been its fruits? Wars of frequent occurrence and enormous cost, fettered trade, lavish expenditure, clashing jurisdiction, and indigence among the people."

I want to end this warning with the words of Lincoln, who said:

"He who refuses liberty to another deserves it not himself, and under the dispensation of a just God can not long retain it."

And the words of Thomas Jefferson, speaking of race ownership, who said:

"When I remember that God is just, I tremble for my country."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wish you could indulge me for five minutes longer. But I will not take the time if anybody else wants it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask in behalf of my colleague from Ohio for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. I thank my friend and colleague and the House for this kindness.

OUR COUNTRY'S WELFARE FIRST.

Gentlemen, the preservation of the ideals on which our Declaration of Independence and our Constitution are based is the biggest thing in all this universe to me in the government of mankind. Nothing in the government of human affairs equals this in all the sweep of time. [Applause.]

WHAT LINCOLN SAID.

On his memorable trip to the Capital to be inaugurated President of the United States, Abraham Lincoln stopped at Philadelphia and was asked by the multitude to raise the flag over Independence Hall. In the speech which Lincoln delivered on that occasion he said that he never entertained any political principle or doctrine not found in the Declaration of Independence. I have often been amazed at the men who will deliver orations of eulogy on Lincoln and then vote against the most sacred principle for which Lincoln lived and for which Lincoln died—the principle of individual human freedom and human liberty.

DO NOT CHANGE THE BATTLE HYMN OF THE REPUBLIC.

I do not want to see the United States change that beautiful line in the Battle Hymn of the Republic which reads:

As He died to make men holy
So we'll die to make men free.

So that for empire, trade, and gain it must read:

So we'll die to prevent men from being free.

I want to see the star of our Republic that rose in the government of mankind like the star of Bethlehem remain the star of hope and liberty to all mankind, and not throw its parting rays on a republic turned to an empire stained with the blood of conquered subjects.

I believe the Declaration of Independence is of Divine inspiration. It is the Sermon on the Mount and the Golden Rule translated into the government and the affairs of men. On the observance of its sacred principles this Nation will live or fall.

Everyone who believes in education and development must admit that we can not always hold the Filipino people against their will, because it would not be just and right to so hold them. Why not let them go now before God comes again walking in the pages of history saying in wrath "Let these people go." Will we be so foolish as to try and put between them and their longing for liberty a Red Sea of oppression and human blood? If we do, I fear ours will be the repeated lesson of history; for through all governments God has stretched his electric live wire of truth and justice, and nations as well as men reach out in greed and avarice and touch that wire and die.

I want to see my country remain a land of benedictions to all mankind, to so act that the foot of Him who hath led us in triumph in 1776 through the wilderness of foreign oppression and in safety in 1861 through our Red Sea of civil strife may not falter nor the light of His countenance be turned away.

Then shall our glorious banner float on forever, every star flashing out the light of liberty and justice to all people all over the earth until their rays of blessing mingle in the light of the millenial dawn. Then for us always shall liberty and justice flourish out of the earth and righteousness and peace smile on us down out of the skies. ' [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order made by the House, section 34, known as the Clarke amendment, will first be considered. The Clerk will report the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 34. The President is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty now existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippines, and he shall on behalf of the United States fully recognize the independence of the said Philippines as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof, and full power to take the several steps necessary to institute such government is hereby conferred upon the said Philippines acting by and through governmental agencies created by this act. This transfer of possession, sovereignty, and governmental control shall be completed and become absolute not less than two years nor more than four years from the date of the approval of this act, under the terms and in the manner hereinafter prescribed: Provided, That if the President, prior to the expiration of the said period of four years, shall find that the condition of the internal or external affairs of said Philippines in respect to the stability or efficiency of the proposed government thereof is such as to warrant him in so doing, he is hereby further authorized, by proclamation duly made and published, to extend the said time to and including the date of the final adjournment of the session of Congress which shall convene next after the date of the expiration of the said period of four years, and thus afford the Congress an opportunity in its discretion to further consider the situation in the said Philippines; but any such extension of time by the President shall not otherwise suspend or nullify the operative force of this act, unless the Congress shall hereafter so direct. For the purpose of a complete and prompt compliance with this direction, the President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the said Philippines, and to cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States and of other countries resident or engaged in business in said Philippines or having property interests therein. In any such settlement or adjustment so made in respect to the rights and property of the United States as against the said Philippines the President may reserve or acquire such lands and rights and privileges appurtenant thereto as may, in his judgment, be required by the United States for naval bases and coaling stations within the territory of said Philippines.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TOWNER moves to strike out the section, being all of section 34 of the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an agreement, if I can, with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] regarding the time for closing the debate on this motion.

Mr. JONES. What would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. TOWNER. It was the understanding that the debate would close at 8 o'clock, and I suggest that that be ordered and that the time be equally divided between the gentleman from Virginia and myself.

Mr. JONES. That would be 1 hour and 10 minutes from now. That would be 35 minutes on a side.

Mr. TOWNER. On the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. JONES. Yes; all amendments thereto.

Mr. TOWNER. I would suggest to the gentleman that, if he will make the offer, it shall include the right during that time, if gentlemen have amendments to offer, that all of them shall be debated, and that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close at that time.

Mr. JONES. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that, while it has been agreed that this amendment should be voted on first, I overlooked the fact—and other gentlemen did—that there is one other proposition in the bill which gentlemen desire to discuss, and as to which they will want to offer amendments, and that is the proposition in regard to prohibition. Would the gentleman object to having this hour and 10 minutes devoted to the discussion of that amendment, and to change the agreement so as to permit the vote on the prohibition amendment first?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I will object to that.

Mr. TOWNER. I could not agree to that, because it has been stated to so many on this side what the understanding is. I will say to the gentleman that we will have no trouble, I think, in agreeing to any subsequent matter.

Mr. JONES. I do not think there will be any trouble, but a number of gentlemen have suggested to me that they would like to offer amendments to that provision, and I would like to give them an opportunity to do so if they desire it.

Mr. TOWNER. They will have that opportunity, of course, and we will not seek to deprive them of that opportunity. Will the gentleman make that suggestion as to unanimous consent?

Mr. JONES. I made this suggestion in good faith to the gentleman. I understand he objects to changing the adopted order, so that I will not make it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman has the right to reserve his objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have done so. Why not give up this time to the discussion of the prohibition, which has not been discussed? Why indulge in an hour and 10 minutes more of discussion on a paragraph that has been discussed for eight hours already?

Mr. TOWNER. So far as this side is concerned, we have 35 or 40 gentlemen who desired to discuss the Clarke amendment but who were not afforded the opportunity. They did not have opportunity in general debate.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I wanted to say something myself, but had no opportunity to do so. Still I would rather have the proceedings varied a little now by having a discussion of the prohibition amendment. It is getting late, and I am getting dry and hungry. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, we are losing time, and so far as I am concerned I will offer no objection to voting upon this and all other amendments at 8 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Will one of the gentlemen submit the request?

Mr. JONES. That is the request.

Mr. MANN. Make it 35 minutes on a side.

Mr. JONES. Well, 35 minutes on a side—that we vote on this amendment, then, at 5 minutes after 8 o'clock, the time to be equally divided.

Mr. TOWNER. I will suggest that the agreement include this amendment and all amendments to this section.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to limit it to that. We will vote on this amendment, and there may be other amendments to offer. If this amendment prevails there will probably be other amendments offered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There can not be any other amendments offered if this prevails.

Mr. MANN. To this section.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman that while I understand that no amendment could be offered to a section that had gone out of the bill, still the section might be offered in a different form. A new section might be offered to the bill, and I do not want to enter into any agreement that would preclude further consideration of this subject of Philippine independence. I hope the gentleman does not desire that we adopt a rule that would mean that if his motion prevails we will have no other opportunity to provide, in some form, at some time, for the independence of the Filipinos.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that certainly he will have ample opportunity to do whatever is parliamentary; but so far as section 34 is concerned, it has been our understanding that there was at least a tentative agreement between the parties that we should determine the thirty-fourth section by this debate and this action.

Mr. JONES. I simply want it understood that if this amendment should prevail and this section should go out, it does not mean that we could not offer another section to the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman must understand that if this section goes out, there will be objection raised to offering as a new section any provision that should have been offered as an amendment to this section. We wish to know now what the plan is to be. We do not want to have an understanding and then find that we have not any.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, if that be so, if what the gentleman from New York states is to be the position of the opposition, then I can not consent to any agreement as to time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not care anything about that.

Mr. JONES. Because we do not propose to put ourselves in a position, if these gentlemen vote out this section, that gentlemen on that side who say that this Clarke amendment is not entirely satisfactory to them, but that something else would be, shall not have an opportunity to vote for a proposition satisfactory to them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman understands that the parliamentary rule is that gentlemen should perfect their provision, and then let the House pass on the question whether it shall remain in the bill or not. If the gentleman from Virginia wishes us to reverse that proposition, so that if it goes out he can then try to put it back in a different form, as far as I am concerned I do not care to have that done if I can prevent it, and I think I know how to prevent it. We want to know what the plan is to be before we vote on the question whether this provision goes in or out of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I can not consent to any agreement about fixing the time——

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is immaterial to me.

Mr. JONES. I do not want it understood that we on this side agree that if this section is voted out we, under the parliamentary rules that govern the House, can not offer some other proposition—not, of course, an amendment to a section that is no longer in the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman refer to something extraneous, that would not be proper to offer as an amendment to this? It occurs to me that everything that is proper to be submitted as an amendment to this ought to be included in this agreement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are going to insist on our rights, and we want to know what the gentleman is going to do.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order that is raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there has been no point of order raised.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It has been suggested by the gentleman from New York that after you have struck out a section nothing that could be offered as an amendment to that section will be in order. I agree with the gentleman from New York about that entirely. To attempt to do that would only take up the time of the House. Gentlemen ought to perfect their measure first before we vote on the motion to strike it out.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if he is willing to take a vote at 8 o'clock?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman make that request, to close debate on this amendment at 8 o'clock?

Mr. TOWNER. And all amendments thereto.

Mr. KITCHIN. And all amendments thereto.

Mr. TOWNER. All amendments to this section.

Mr. JONES. I will make no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, will some gentleman state the request?

Mr. TOWNER. As I understand it the request is this, that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close at 8 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. Make it 30 minutes on a side, because that is the way to do it.

Mr. TOWNER. Thirty minutes on a side, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and one-half by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending section and all amendments thereto be limited to one hour, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia and one-half by the gentleman from Iowa. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I have five minutes?

Mr. JONES. I think so. I am leaving this very much to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. FOSTER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order. Is there objection to the request submitted by the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I favor giving the Philippine people a greater liberty and allow them every possible opportunity to assimilate the blessings of good government. When the Jones bill came before the House, in the Sixty-third Congress, I voted for it, but I am opposed to the Clarke amendment, the effect of which is to set the Philippine Islands adrift without the performance of our covenants.

At the close of the Spanish War we found ourselves in possession of the Philippine Islands. This possession has brought for us great problems respecting our duty and our obligations to the Philippine people. The result of this war made us an involuntary trustee, a custodian of the rights and liberties of these people. At the time we occupied the city of Manila we found these people engaged in a rebellion against the mother country with which we were then in war. We destroyed the governmental power that ruled over them and substituted our own sovereignty over these people. We undertook to establish for the Philippine citizens a stable government. We accepted the trust, assumed the responsibility, and we can not now shirk this duty nor run away from our responsibility. Every citizen should be proud of the achievements we have accomplished in these islands. Down to this very hour we have faithfully fulfilled every covenant made to Spain and to the Philippine people. Since our occupancy of these islands we have crushed out insurrection, suppressed internal strife, established law and order, and have lead these people into industrial pursuits; through our activities, hospitals and homes have been constructed for the sick, schoolhouses and churches have been built for the educational and moral training of the people; we have eradicated diseases, established sanitation in their homes and public places, establish stable currency and equitable system of taxation, tripled their commerce, improved labor conditions, and paved the way for the true standard of living; improved their harbors, built railroads, public roads, bridges, telephones, and telegraph lines; we have sent them our teachers, our missionaries, and gave them the foundation principles upon which they could rear a country dedicated to liberty, justice, and equality. Our conduct with these people is above reproach and has been one of the brighest pages of our history, unselfish and unsullied. This bill, with the Clarke amendment, now calls for a dishonorable retreat from the islands and abandonment of all of our achievements; it places broken promises above faithful fulfillment. The rights of Spain, the rights of the American Government, the rights of the Philippine people are all safely guarded and protected by the Paris treaty of December 10, 1898. For 17 years we have faithfully complied with the terms of the treaty, but now we seek to repudiate it by proclaiming to the world that this treaty is a mere scrap of paper and no longer binding on the heart and conscience of our people.

The articles of capitulation of the city of Manila on the 13th of August, 1898, concluded with these words:

> This city, its inhabitants, its churches and religious worship, its educational establishments, and its private property of all descriptions are placed under the special safeguard of the faith and honor of the American Army.

William McKinley's message to the Philippine Commission concludes in these words:

> I believe that this pledge has been faithfully kept. As high and sacred an obligation rests upon the Government of the United States to give protection for property and life, civil and religious freedom, and wise, firm, and unselfish guidance in the paths of peace and prosperity to all the people of the Philippine Islands. I charge this commission to labor for the full performance of this obligation, which concerns the honor and conscience of this country, in the firm hope that through their labors all the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands may come to look back with gratitude to the day when God gave victory to American arms at Manila and set their land under the sovereignty and the protection of the people of the United States.

If this sacred obligation rested upon us then, it rests upon us now. If we were right then, we are not wrong now. This city, its inhabitants, its churches, its religious freedom, its educational establishments, its private property are all safely guarded by the faith and the honor of our country. Article 16 of the treaty provides:

It is understood that any obligations assumed in this treaty by the United States with respect to Cuba are limited to the time of its occupancy thereof; but it will upon the termination of such occupancy advise any government established in the island to assume the same obligations.

The rights of the United States with respect to Cuba are limited to the time of its occupancy, and provision is expressly made that any new government could assume the obligations imposed upon the United States by the treaty, but the grant of the Philippines to the United States is in perpetuity. There is not now and never has been any independent Philippine government. We bought the islands from Spain and paid $20,000,000 for them, and when the treaty was exchanged we became the sovereign owner of these islands, but we took them with perpetual covenants, with unlimited and unconditional pledges.

No provision can be found for a temporary occupancy or for turning over the trust to another Government for execution. Spain ceded the islands not for 17 years but in perpetuity; we did not accept for a limited period of occupancy, but we made as a part of our contract certain covenants with Spain for all time. The treaty proclaims that the rights of Provinces, municipalities, private and public, ecclesiastical and civic bodies, shall never be impaired. We made a covenant that we would carefully preserve all documents, official archives, and records of the executive and judicial departments relating to property rights of the inhabitants and of the sovereignty of the islands. We made a covenant that the Spanish subjects may remain in such territory or may remove therefrom, retaining their rights of property and the right to carry on their industry, commerce, and professions. We made a covenant that the civil rights, the political status of the inhabitants should be determined by the Congress of the United States. We made a covenant that the inhabitants should be entitled to religious liberty.

Our pledges are unconditional, unlimited, and perpetual. How can we, then, in good faith proclaim to Spain that we no longer are bound by our treaty pact, we will no longer protect the people of the islands in their property rights nor safeguard to them their religious liberty, that Congress will no longer legislate upon their civil and political rights, that henceforth, like a tricky litigant, we shall refuse to perform our sacred contract. The United States would not allow Spain to repudiate her part of this agreement, and Spain ought not to allow the United States to deliberately violate the agreement solemnly made for the benefits of her former subjects. The Spanish Government has vested rights in this peace contract, so have the people of the islands, so has every investor who has invested money on the faith of our promises. No amount of quibbling, equivocation, or trickery will satisfy the sober judgment of the American people that we should now violate our promises and set aside the vested rights in a treaty made with another Government.

If we had an international court, vested with jurisdiction, for the settlement of such controversies, Spain could hail us before the court as a willful violator of our treaty pledges. Every person, wherever he may be, who has invested either in the Philippine bonds or in property in these islands, the civilized and uncivilized citizens of the islands and the Spanish nation are all beneficiaries under our treaty and have a direct interest in the peace pledges. This is not wholly a question of governments deriving their power from the consent of the governed. It is a question of the faithful fulfillment of treaty pledges deliberately made. You talk about colonial policies, imperialism, the creed of the fathers, liberty being the birthright of man, but you are forgetting the fundamentals, the pledges contained in our treaty. If it was right to start on the fulfillment of these pledges, it is right to finish the task. We can no more justify the surrender of these islands than the unfaithful father could justify his willful desertion of his helpless infant children. If you personally held trust funds for beneficiaries, would you select an insolvent trustee, an infant, or a person with bad habits, or one unable to govern himself and expect a faithful and honest accounting of the trust funds? I should think that even a Democratic caucus would hesitate to do such a foolish thing. It is said that the islands are costing us $25,000,000 per year; that they constitute our greatest liability and peril, a burden, a constant expense; that to keep the islands means to defend them, to defend them means an increase in Army and Navy. Yet if we admit all these statements they do not constitute a sufficient argument for a deliberate abandonment of our contract. The honor of our country weighs more than dollars. Every one of you have probably sometime made a bad bargain. I have. Yet you would not want to plead the infant act, intoxication, or mental deficiency as a justification of such act and as a defense to your bad judgment. We have been going along for 17 years cheerfully fulfilling and faithfully executing every element of our contract; now we are to throw up the job and plead the baby act. Read President McKinley's proclamation, proclaiming the ratification of the treaty to the public:

That the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

However, fulfillment and good faith seems to mean nothing to the members of the Democratic caucus.

I am sorry that this great measure must rest upon the decree of a Democratic caucus. The measure ought to be above party creeds. It should call upon every Member for patriotic service in placing the common good above partisan advantage. No Member should delegate his power of legislation to any caucus. The caucus destroys individuality; it establishes tyranny; it sacrifices the best legislative instrumentality, the conscience; it makes weaklings of its members. The faithful are intimidated by its decrees. They are loath to have places in the party council. They join the ranks of the rulers, and individuality is peacefully put to sleep. We plead for an independent legislative department of Government; one that will not permit the judicial nor the executive departments to trespass upon the rights of the legislative department; one that will not allow a caucus to bind its members; one that will call upon its members to stand for individual opinions; one that will maintain the independence of members; one that will permit its member to stand erect in his God-given rights without coercion and without caucus splints upon his legs.

Under section 34 of this bill we are to withdraw and surrender our possession, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over the islands, and permit these people to form a self-governing nation and recognize their independence. Everyone ought to know that we can not at this time depend upon their ability to perform the covenants we have made with Spain; nor have they at present the ability to protect property rights or religious liberty. If we are to make good our guaranty, we must retain sovereignty, occupation, and ownership, because it is only through sovereignty and ownership that we will be able to perform our covenants. If we could get out of the islands with a complete fulfillment of our obligations, there would probably be little criticism in our doing so, but this is impossible. When we withdraw, what are we going to do without pledges? We can not withdraw them. To turn these islands over to a newly formed Philippine government would not only mean national dishonor, but a destruction of all American and European investments, which were made on the faith of our promises; it would bring on revolution, anarchy, bloodshed, and crime among the 30 different native races inhabiting these islands. How can we expect unity of action when all of these races have for centuries possessed racial projudices, all speaking different dialects.

We have only to recall the chaos, loss of life, in poor, distressed Mexico and we have an example of a nation with hundreds of years of civilization, with a constitution similar to that of the United States, yet without ability for self-government. A good constitution and good laws will not suffice unless the government of the people can rest upon the heart and conscience of the masses of people. I am convinced that a withdrawal of our sovereignty will leave the people of the Philippines insolvent, defenseless, and helpless, and that they will not be ready for self-government for 50 years to come. I believe that when we leave the islands we should leave them bag and baggage. It has already been demonstrated that the United States can exercise the general sovereignty over these islands without bringing them into a domestic relation with our country. We have been doing so, and there is no reason why we should not continue the work already begun. To turn the Philippine Islands back to Spain at this time would not merit the approval of the American people; to abandon them would not command the respect and the sober judgment of mankind, because it means a breach of our promises. We can not turn the Philippine Islands over to any other country and relieve ourselves of responsibility. We have no right or power to select another country as a residuary legatee. It then becomes our faithful duty to at present continue the marvelous advancement in peace and prosperity that has followed our occupancy in these islands, that through our tender, sympathetic rule and guidance they may continue unmolested in their wonderful advancement, which has been unequaled in the history of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, no political party in this country has ever been brave enough to face the American people with an unequivocal declaration that they intended to keep the Philippine Islands in perpetuity. Yet every proposition for the ultimate freedom of the islands, or even for their advancement in local self-government, has met with the same resistance and from the same quarter as this bill.

I believe that we ought to adopt this clause for two reasons: First, for the good of the Americans; and second, for the good of the Filipinos. I am glad to believe that our occupancy of the Philippine Islands has been a credit to us and has advanced the Filipino in the direction of self-government. I am glad to believe also that a part of the credit is due to the Filipino in his being able to adapt himself to the needs of a higher political life.

I am thoroughly convinced, however, when I speak of the good to the American people that we as a country have no destiny in those islands. We have no destiny as a Nation in Asia. The Philippine Islands are not colonies; they are dependencies. No man has ever conceived that they can be colonies. The difference between a colony and a dependency as a legal proposition is very clear, and I repeat that no statesman or any party or faction has ever pretended that they would become an integral part of the American Nation, or that the American Constitution would finally become their constitution.

When the argument is made for their indefinite retention, it is for their retention as a subject people, as a dependency, without the natural political rights that men are entitled to enjoy.

We have heard this afternoon in this debate the same old-time worn jingoism about pulling down the American flag that was responsible for the original commission of the Philippine folly. We are not to pull down the flag. Then if we are not to pull down the flag now, after 18 years of peaceful government, let these belligerent patriots say when the time will ever come that they will be willing to pull down the flag. If that time will never come, let them have the manly moral courage to face the American people and say that they are opposed for all time to the freedom of the Filipinos. [Applause.]

Talk about courage; let us have a little moral courage on this subject, and while we are about it let us have the moral courage as well as the physical courage to do what we believe is right by a people, whether they have the power to require it of us or not. Is the only test of right and freedom the power to extort it by force, or are we the only Nation that is able to give a subject people their freedom without driving them to win it at the point of the sword? That is the moral question involved here.

Now, the great fight on this bill is coming and will come from the special interests in this country. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] started out to represent the poor Filipinos, but before he had got very far the mask was off and he was talking about the millions of capital invested in those islands. I have seen in that flag the stripes representing the revolting American Colonies; I have seen the stars representing the self-governing American States; but I hope never to see both stars and stripes erased and nothing but the dollar mark left behind. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I have been greatly interested in the discussions on the floor of this House since I came here in December, and I have discovered one thing, and that is that the business men of America need not look for or expect any consideration at home or abroad from the Democratic side in this House. [Applause on the Republican side.] Whenever you mention anything that has to do with the business or industry of the American citizen here or abroad the next thing you hear is a sneer that the interests are being defended. We have to-day in Mexico men with their millions who have gone there encouraged by this Government. We are talking about capturing the trade of the world, and a few venture across with their savings into the Philippine Islands, and anything that is said here to-day about looking after Americans in the Philippines is talked of with a sneer from the other side.

I say to you, I can think of no more lonely figure in this Government to-day than the man of enterprise who looks beyond the boundary of his own Nation to capture trade [applause on the Republican side], to bring business to this Nation. He is made to understand that he is the subject of ridicule by the party in power, and he can expect no protection abroad and no protection at home. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I think that the time is here in this country when some men, without apology, remembering that the the Good Book says that "He who provides not for his own household is worse than a disbeliever," shall see to it that we come squarely to a discussion of whether the industrial enterprises of the United States have any hope for life anywhere, here or abroad. What have we heard to-day? We have heard a lot of talk about some Filipinos, but the American in the islands has been sneered at. We have had some talk about some savage tribes wanting their freedom, but not one word from the Democratic side of the House in honor of the men who for 18 years have toiled and died to change that Filipino country from a country of savagery to a country of civilization—not one word. [Applause on the Republican side.] We have heard not one single word in praise of a single boy who wore the American uniform in the Philippine Islands, we have heard not one single word from that side of the House of hope held out to any man, or group of men, who have gone there. It has all been cant and rant about the liberty of men with whom you would not trust your own business for 24 hours. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if ever the party in power is to say anything or do anything to convince the thoughtful business man of this country who is looking somewhere to carry on the enterprise that the great push of American industry would send abroad, it has the opportunity to do it now. And the time has come when that man shall demand some consideration at least from the party on the other side. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] has sneered at what he chooses to call "some Filipinos," stating that it would be wrong to grant independence to a people with whom we would not be willing to risk our business for 24 hours, and he proceeds to extol the "boys" and "business men" who have gone there from America, and in accordance with his ideas, are entitled to first consideration over the welfare of the Filipino people. If it be true that the Filipino people are of such character that we would not be willing to trust our business to any of them for as long as 24 hours, these "boys" and "business men" to whom the gentleman refers have done very little toward civilizing these people during the 18 years they have spent in the Philippine Islands. It is a sorry spectacle that a Member of the American Congress, with all of its traditions and the history of its growth and the things for which it has stood in the past, should be willing to stand upon this floor and deny liberty and independence to 8,000,000 of people, because he does not think it to the best interest of Americans who have gone to the Philippine Islands and invested their money. In former times it would not have been thought possible that a Representative of the liverty-loving people of America would put the selfish interests of a few investors of capital above the rights of a great people to govern themselves and live under their own system.

Before the American Revolution, which won for the United States their indepedence, Englishmen had come into the colonies and invested their money, and, no doubt, they thought their interests should be placed above that of the colonists, who were seeking freedom and the right of self-government, but our forefathers did not hesitate to fight for their independence and their right to govern themselves, simply because British subjects had come into this country and invested their money. Those who were interested in bringing about that revolution and in the formation of this Nation held to the doctrine that the right of self-government is an inherent right and that it is not subject to the prior claims of financial investors.

The Declaration of Independence itself proclaims the doctrine that all men are created politically equal and are entitled to certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. It proclaims that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and three-quarters of a century later Abraham Lincoln gave his indorsement to that immortal declaration by saying, "No man is good enough to govern another man without that man's consent." We know that the Filipino people desire self-government. We know that they desire it because they have learned from our Nation and from the things that were responsible for our national existence that the right of freedom and self-government is the most priceless political boon that can be achieved among the political subdivisions of the people of the world.

A great deal has been said about the qualifications of the people of the Philippine Islands for self-government. I have been impressed many times with the statement of President Wilson that liberty does not come from above, like the showers from heaven, but it springs up among the people themselves and must be attained and maintained by them if it is to be enjoyed. If the question of the qualification of the American colonies to govern themselves had been left to the people of Great Britain, and the question of our liberty had been left for them to decide, we would at this time be a colony of that empire instead of the greatest Republic that the world has known. Avarice, greed, and selfishness always protests that a given people are not suited for self-government, but the question which confronts us here as Members of Congress is whether the Filipino people are entitled to freedom and self-government as a matter of right, and without regard to whether some Americans will be able to make more money under American control of the Philippines than they would under a self-governing Filipino Republic. For my own part, I am willing to bestow upon those people that right, that power of self-government which we have not only contended for for ourselves, but have encouraged among all the nations of the world.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The gentleman does not mean to compare the United States in the Philippine Islands with Great Britain in the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not mean to compare the Anglo-Saxon race, wherever they may be found on this footstool, with any other race under the sun; but my contention is that, without regard to race or locality, the principle is the same. The principle is that the right of self-government is not qualified by the color or the location of the people who may be seeking it.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal about the lack of education in the Philippine Islands, and yet there are more than 5,000 public schools in those islands, with an attendance of more than 500,000, which is a higher percentage than exists in many other so-called higher civilized nations. The percentage of literacy in the Philippine Islands is greater than it is in Russia, or in Spain, or Portugal, or Brazil, or Chile, or in Guatemala, as well as a number of other nations that might be mentioned. If this be true, how can any fair-minded American contend that the Philippine Islands should not be given their liberty? Certainly a failure to do that could not be justified on the grounds of a lack of education. If it is the moral duty of our Army and our great business men to civilize inferior races of people, how can we justify our course in limiting our beneficence to the Philippine Islands and the other islands of the sea when there are so many other people scattered over the world who are in need of such altruistic service?

Mr. MADDEN. We do not own them.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; and we do not own the Philippine Islands in the sense that they are ours for indefinite occupation and exploitation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Every American officer, from President McKinley on down to the present time, has held out the hope of independence to the Philippine Islands, and they have from the beginning of American occupation been led by every responsible authority to believe that our occupation of the islands was temporary and that they would be granted their independence at an appropriate time. But to-day, for the first time, we hear a Member on the Republican side, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], boldly state that he is not in favor of ever granting freedom to the Philippine Islands, and that he was against giving it to the people of Cuba, and that if he had his way he would go down and take Mexico and all the territory between the United States and the Panama Canal, all of which he would gobble up and place under the control of the American Government and the American Army, without regard to the wishes or the welfare of the people upon whom he would superimpose the authority of the United States.

Why is it that there are men, even in Congress, who take such a position? Because of that insatiable desire for business and money making, the desire to subordinate the liberty, freedom, and rights of independent people to work out their own destiny to the dictates and selfish desires of commercialism. It is the desire to crown the dollars as being supreme over the liberty of human beings. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And that is the only argument that the gentleman from Tennessee and others have advanced in behalf of their policy for which they have had the courage to speak upon the floor of this House.

I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that I do not advocate the acquisition of power and of territory under the Stars and Stripes by force of arms simply to gratify the ambition of men whose only object in life is the making of money or the exercise of power. The thing which makes the American Nation loved and respected the world over is the fact that it has not stood in the past for political or commercial aggrandizement, but it has always been looked to by the downtrodden people of every nation as the inspiration of freedom and liberty, proclaiming the equality of mankind everywhere. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It was under the influence of this inspiration that the American Nation was conceived, and has grown until it embraces the midcontinent of North America and numbers more than a hundred million true and loyal Americans. It is for these reasons and for many others that I believe the time has come when the Philippine Islands ought to be granted their independence, when the United States should keep faith with those people whom it subjugated against their will, and which it continues to control, in spite of their overwhelming desire and capacity for governing themselves; and I hope that at no distant date we may be able to greet the only Christian nation in the Orient as a fellow member in the brotherhood of self-governing nations under the name of the republic of the Philippine Islands. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I believe that I shall never forget the emotions that came to me when, 18 years ago to-day, I learned of the triumph of the American Navy in the Bay of Manila. Proud as I was of that achievement, when I came to learn what was to be the ultimate result of the triumph of American arms, I was prouder of my Nation than I had ever been before.

For 400 years our brown brothers of the lonely islands in a far-away sea had been beneath the heel of tyranny and of oppression. For four centuries they had waited patiently for the coming of the giant of the west. When it came and raised the American flag over those islands it was raised with a promise that the genius of our institutions should be given to those savage tribes in the hopes of one day raising them to that point in civilization where they might be trusted with a government of their own. We held out the promise to them that we would install in those islands civilization where savagery exists, Christianity where paganism prevails, a government of law where anarchy prevails, progress where festers decay, and the sunlight of a new age where the shadows of dead centuries lie. In fulfillment of that promise we sent the youth of America, the young men and young women, to take charge of their schools, with the idea of improving the intellectual and the moral standard of the Philippine people.

Mr. Chairman, no man ever gained strength by following the easiest way. No nation ever became mighty by following the line of least resistance. And to-day, after having had in our charge for 18 years those races that had been in savagery for 400 years, for the first time there comes a proposition that because storm clouds have gathered, that because the world has gone mad, that because of the fear that the Philippines may be dangerous for us to control, because they are expensive—for the first time, within my knowledge, at least, the United States is consulting the proposition of expediency in the face of manifest duty.

I say to you that if this Nation is true to its ideals, if its action on this matter shall be in harmony with its history, it will not consult fear, it will not consult difficulty, it will not consult expense, but it will hold on to those islands, it will hold on to those people until they have reached that point in civilization where independence and freedom may be given them without making them and their nation the plaything of world politics. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER].

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from Nebraska I remember very well the emotions that filled my heart when I heard of the victory of Dewey at Manila Bay, and I am for turning the Philippines loose, not from the standpoint of expediency, not for a lack of courage, but because of the fundamental principles of this Government that our father founded long before Dewey's victory at Manila Bay. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Eight million people, 7,000 miles away. If they are incapable of self-government, then they have no part or lot under that flag, because as the greatest Republican, and almost the greatest American, that ever lived, said that this Nation can not endure half slave and half free. If they are capable of self-government, the dictates, not of expediency, but the dictates of duty, demand that we carry out the policy of McKinley and give them the right to self-government, and do it now.

This is the anniversary of the victory of Manila Bay. There could be but one better day to give them liberty, and that would be the 4th of July, the day on which we celebrate the Declaration of Independence, "that document which proclaimed not simply our national independence, but the primal rights of all of mankind; that document the spirit of which goes forth like an angel of human liberation," as Sumner said, "breaking bolts, unloosing bonds, opening prison doors, visiting all who are downtrodden, whispering that there is none so poor as to be without human rights which every man is bound to respect, none so degraded as not to be beneath its beneficent influence, none so lofty as to be above its restraining power, while before it despotism and oligarchy fall on their faces like the image of Dagon, and the people everywhere begin to govern themselves."

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the revenues of the Philippine government last year were about $14,000,000, not more than the revenues of the District of Columbia. Turn the islands loose, turn them over, as you may wish to call it, on $14,000,000, and what will become of the 8,500,000 people? The time when they should be given independence will be when they have a schoolhouse on every hilltop, where in the generations that are yet to come the children yet unborn are educated in the principles of government and freedom. That will be the time to liberate the Filipino and give him independence. The flag has been raised upon the Philippine Islands, there to remain as an evidence of liberty and freedom, never to be hauled down until the people of those islands are ready for self-government, but not until they have been taught in the schoolhouses, under an American policy, what self-government means.

Who would defend the Filipinos if they were given independence to-day? Would it be America or who would it be? Surely not themselves. And to turn them loose by this provision of this bill would be a crime, a sin, which the Members of this House, speaking for the American people, ought not by any means to commit. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the Democratic platform has been explicitly plain on this Philippine proposition. Seven hundred million dollars have been spent by this Government in the last 18 years in the Philippine Islands and between forty and fifty million dollars being spent each year. If war at any time comes, it will be through the Philippine Islands. And the national troubles, all of them combined, the national liability of all other kinds combined, do not compare with the Philippine Islands. And in reply to my distinguished friend from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], who says it is the part of courage to stay there, I wish to say to him that as a courageous Nation, a Nation that loves the foundation stone of liberty on which it is founded, we owe it to the Filipino people to free them.

This Government is not presumed to go all over the face of the earth for the purpose of washing out the back doors of other people. The Monroe doctrine is not for the purpose of ging 12,500 miles from the Nation's Capital and looking out for some people in the Pacific Ocean; but, according to my interpretation of that famous doctrine, the North American Continent and the South American Republics embrace the entire territory over which our flag shall put any kind of protectorate.

This idea of imperialism and holding the Philippine Islands is backed up by the great "interests" of this country. It is not the people of America. It is the bondholders, the liquor interests, the Tobacco Trust, and the sugar interests of this country that cause the Republican Party and these few Democrats to join in this protest against the Clarke amendment turning the Philippines loose. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This is a battle between the people and special privilege in this Nation. The interests that have been exploiting the Philippine Islands all of these years do not intend to let the American people get rid of that millstone that now hangs so heavy around the neck of this Nation.

You Republicans place the dollar above the man. Don't you know the people of those islands love independence as much as we do? The Tories in the Colonies of America joined in with King George and tried to prevent our heroic forefathers from gaining their independence. Our people fought eight long years to gain independence against the tyranical hand of Great Britain. Some of you say the Filipino people are not capable of self-government. The people of England said the same thing about our American forefathers in 1776.

What right have we to set ourselves up as the judges to say the Filipinos are not able to maintain a stable government? Every man on this floor knows those people can govern themselves. It is the dollar mark that is causing all these flimsy excuses to be offered here to-day.

Wall Street has worked overtime endeavoring to kill this bill. All of the henchmen of the bankers who happen to have bonds in the islands, together with the whisky and beer interests, and the Sugar Trust, and the Tobacco Trust, have put their forces to work to prevent the Democratic Party from fulfilling its pledges to the American people on this question. Now is the time to show what crowd you run with. Are you for the special interests that seek to continue grinding dollars out of the swarthy Filipinos at a great and heavy burden to the people of the United States, or are you for the plain people of this country? Your vote on this Clarke amendment tells the whole story.

If you are for the people, you will vote for the Clarke amendment to stay in. This will give the Filipinos freedom at the end of four years. I would vote to give them their independence to-morrow. I am in favor of the United States Government coming out body and breeches from the Philippine Islands and staying away from there for all time to come. Our Government has enough to do to attend to our own business. Let us spend our money to help our own people. You Republicans want to tax the very life out of our people who toil in order that a few exploiters of the privileged classes can amass millions of dollars out of the Philippine Islands. The truth of it is, you never expect to give the Philippine Islanders their independence. Of all the fake arguments I have listened to since coming to Congress, I have never yet heard any to equal the pretended excuses offered here to-day to kill this bill.

Do you not know this is a day of rejoicing? The American people have their eyes on Congress to-day. They know the strong influences of big business at work to kill this bill. Which side are you on in this conflict? Do you know the tree is judged by its fruit? What kind of fruit will your vote bear? The vote I cast I know is for the people, because every schoolboy in America knows that the people of this country are in favor of granting independence to the Filipinos as early as possible. I am willing to be judged on this vote. Are you men who oppose this bill ready to come out in the open at the bar of public opinion? What are you Republicans going to tell the people?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, to pass the Clarke amendment on the pretense that we are doing it for the benefit of the Filipino people, whereas, in truth and in fact, our real purpose is to avoid our obligations to these people—and this at a time when the world is on fire—would certainly subject our Government to the charge of timidity and insincerity and greatly lower its standing in the eyes of the world, as well as to weaken the moral fiber of our citizens.

Setting the Filipinos adrift, putting them on their own resources before they are ready for self-government and before other nations are asked to cooperate in the matter, would be a serious mistake—one that our Government in all probability would have cause to regret.

The Democratic Party attempts to justify such a course on the ground that its 1912 platform called for the independence of the Philippines as soon as a stable local government could be established in the islands. How soon could such a government be established? Can the administration guarantee a stable government in four years or even in three times four years?

The great majority of our people do not believe that the rank and file of the natives are yet fit for local self-government, and it is beyond the realm of human ability to say on what particular day they will be ready to maintain a government that will protect the lives, liberties, and property of its people.

There is nothing in the preelection declarations of the Democratic Party that will sustain, under the present conditions, the leaders of that party in their attempt to scuttle these islands. Even though the Philippine plank were more specific, would not the party be justified in repudiating it under present world conditions? This administration has repudiated other planks of its platform for little or no excuse—why so supersensitive about this one?

It is quite apparent that the compelling motive for abandoning the islands is not an overpowering desire to square the Democratic Party's action with its platform declarations, but rather a lack of confidence in its own ability to care for and protect these islands.

Conditions in the Philippine Islands are very satisfactory; there is little or no public discontent. The Filipinos are making splendid progress in the art of self-government, as well as in agricultural, industrial, and commercial pursuits. Then, why abandon the policy of educating them patiently and sufficiently for ultimate self-government? Why discard a highly satisfactory policy for a dangerous and uncertain policy—dangerous to the Filipino people and dishonorable to our own Government?

In the treaty of Paris we took on these islands and relieved Spain of all obligation for their protection and government. Is not the United States in honor bound responsible for their future welfare? Can it avoid this obligation, though self-imposed, by seeking its own safety and welfare without any regard for the future welfare of the Filipino people?

To act upon such a doctrine would subject the United States to the contempt of the civilized world.

This is not the time to consider our convenience or profit, but to maintain our honor and duty to a people who were wished upon us as an incident of the Spanish-American War.

It is contended by the supporters of the Clarke amendment that the Philippines should be granted their independence promptly, because that would decrease the possibilities of international complications that might involve the United States in war; besides, such a course would be profitable, as it would save the United States Treasury millions of dollars.

Our Government took on these islands not for the purpose of making profit out of them but for the good of the Filipino people, and the United States does not purpose to lay down its burden until its mission is fulfilled. The United States is the sole judge as to when this task is performed. The Filipino people believed they were ready for independence as soon as sovereignty was transferred from Spain to the United States. Our disagreement with them on that point caused the Filipino-American War that cost hundreds of lives and over $600,000,000. Nothing has occurred since that war to cause us to change our policy toward these people except it be the European conflagration, and instead of that being an excuse for granting independence to the Philippines it to my mind is a very substantial reason why independence should not be granted to these islands during this world-wide disturbance. However, we are reminded by the "scuttle propagandists" that the United States can safeguard the interests of the Philippines as well after they have been granted their independence as they can to-day. Even if we admit this to be a fact, which it is not, the bill under consideration cuts the islands adrift, leaving them to their own protection, and the history of this legislation indicates that such is the intention of the administration. Grant that the administration will be successful in repudiating its trust, what will be its standing before the world?

The proponents of the Clarke amendment in their report make the astounding statement that the Philippines are a source of military weakness, and that we should abandon them as a part of our plan of preparedness.

Mr. Speaker, according to these gentlemen, the United States should abandon any and all possessions outside our continental boundaries, if difficult to defend. If American duties and obligations are to be avoided because we are afraid to perform them lest we become involved with some foreign power, it is time to take stock of our national fiber, as has been well said by the minority. "If counsels of fear are to become the permanent policy of our country we should blot out the heroic history of our past and forget the sacrifices of those who made us a Nation."

The problem before us is a difficult one. It was much easier to take on these islands than it will be to establish for the people thereon a stable government democratic in form.

If we should attempt it at the present time, the inevitable result would be that only a comparative few would control the great mass of the people. In place of its being a democratic government, in fact it would be a sort of autocratic government. The few would govern the many. Such a condition would develop another crop of Villas, Carranzas, Zapatas, and Aguinaldos to disturb the peace and happiness of not only our own country but all civilized powers. Can it be that we have learned nothing from our experience in the last four years with the Mexican situation?

No one should deny to the Filipino people the God-given right to independent existence as soon as they are able to maintain it. We have every reason to believe that as soon as these people are properly fitted for independence they will become a very important member in the family of nations.

Mr. Taft paid them this eloquent tribute:

> It is the only Malay or oriental race that is Christian. They were not like the Mohammedan or Buddhist, who despise western civilization as inferior. * * * They learn easily, and the most striking fact in our whole experience in the Philippines is the eagerness with which the common Filipino agricultural laborer sends his children to school to learn English. There is no real difference between the educated and ignorant Filipino that can not be overcome by the education of one generation. They are a capable people in the sense that they can be given a normal intellectual development by the same kind of education that is given in our common-school system.

Should we abandon our unselfish purpose to serve so promising a people because of the fear of a few frightened leaders?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, our responsibility in the Philippines came to us as an unsought and unexpected incident of a righteous war. The controlling factor in the acceptance of that responsibility was a sober sense of duty and a conscientious devotion to high ideals in its performance.

The record of that performance, including its admitted faults and shortcomings, is the finest story in human history of unselfish effort on behalf of an alien people patiently, faithfully, and successfully performed.

Thanks to the wisdom of the plan adopted, to the devotion of those who directed its administration, to the capacity and good intentions of the people among whom and for whose benefit it was developed, the Filipino people have demonstrated their worthiness and, we hope, capacity for the substantial advance on the road to complete self-government which we now propose to give them, an advance which, if successfully pursued, will lead them to the coveted goal of complete independence.

In this hopeful juncture of our relations with these capable and aspiring people we are suddenly confronted with an amazing proposition affecting those relations and purposed to rudely and precipitately sever them. A proposition born of fretful impatience, urged on the ground of cheap expediency, and counciled by craven cowardice. It is as wickedly unworthy of the American people as it is criminally reckless of the best interests of the people of the Philippine Islands.

I am no prophet and can not therefore vision the future or foretell the day when it may be mutually agreed that the time has arrived when these people may with reasonable safety and security launch their ship of state on the none too tranquil waters of independent sovereignty. Of this, however, I am supremely confident that when that day arrives, it will be heralded and ushered in by no such miserable excuses as that we have tired of the Philippine burden, we are weary of its cost, we are timidly apprehensive of its possible entanglements. On the contrary, when that day comes, it shall be known and proclaimed as the basis of our action that our responsibility has been courageously met and honorably discharged, that our duty has been faithfully accepted and successfully performed.

I hope to live to see the coming of that day, when, with dignity, with consciousness of duty performed, under such a mutually advantageous arrangement as will comport with the dignity of the United States, safeguard its interests in the Orient, and reasonably assure the Philippines from foreign aggression, we may establish the people of the Philippine Islands as an independent sovereignty. Until that day arrives, I would be a craven, recreant to the faith and confidence reposed in me by a faithful, steadfast, and high-minded constituency, if, under any pretext, persuasion, or pressure I should subscribe to the shifting, shuffling policy of scuttle, surrender, and abandonment contained in the Clarke amendment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I have never criticized a bill that was reported by a committee of the party that I represent in this House, and I have nothing but commendation for that part of the pending bill that emanated from the Committee on Insular Affairs. It is a magnificent piece of work. I do not think that any piece of legislation was ever written in this House that surpasses the bill that is drafted for the government of the Philippine Islands. But unfortunately it contains a provision inserted in the other body to the effect that the United States shall hastily and precipitately retreat from the Philippine Islands and abandon them without guaranty and without protection.

Mr. Chairman, the occupation of the Philippine Islands by the United States is the most unselfish work that was ever done by any nation in the history of the world. [Applause on the Republican side.] During those 18 years in which we have occupied the islands we have established sanitation, we have made public improvements, we have provided schools, we have maintained peace, we have brought the blessings of liberty to the Orient, and not only to the Orient, but into the Tropics in the Orient. We have attempted to teach and now are in process of teaching in the Orient the greatest blessing that mankind ever learned for the first time, and that is the lesson of self-government. I have no criticism of this bill except to say that section 34 cuts off our task in the very midst of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. TAGGART. I ask unanimous consent for one more minute.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for one minute.

Mr. TAGGART. I want to see section 34 amended so that we can all vote for it. I do not want any uncertainty in it. I do not want to see that there shall be two years of uncertainty, in which public and private bankruptcy and destruction of business will be brought about in the Philippine Islands. If we could only say in it that 10 years from to-day there shall be complete independence established there, and in the meantime the guaranty of the great nations shall be secured for the integrity of the Philippine Islands, then it would be a provision that would be worthy of this House.

And in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me say to some of the best friends that I ever had a word of warning—to conclude this sentence—that you be careful with what ceremony and under what circumstance you haul down the United States flag anywhere. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] to use the remainder of his time. He has about five minutes. There will be only one more speech on this side.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, whenever I read this bill, I think of Arlington, lying under the very shadow of this Capitol, and of the young officers peacefully sleeping there who joined the majority by reason of wounds received or diseases contracted during the Philippine insurrection; and I can not resist the mute appeal of at least one of them to pay my respects to this bill, which as amended and passed by the Senate would destroy and blot out forever all that they fought and died for.

It appears to be conceded that the Filipinos are not now fitted for self-government, and yet it is proposed to fix arbitrarily a time when the President shall have the power to surrender American sovereignty over them and to recognize their independence. The pending bill in many respects is an admirable one, and provides under proper safeguards for instituting in the islands a larger degree of self-government; but it does not necessarily follow that the experiment will meet with material success, or that the inhabitants thereof will be much better prepared to administer the affairs of government three or four years from now than they are to-day. It seems to me that if they are to have independence the proper time to grant it will be when the people of this country are satisfied that the Filipinos, after a fair trial, are fully capable of legislating for themselves and of establishing and maintaining a stable government. And no human being can arbitrarily fix such time.

I remember as if it were yesterday May 1, 1898—a Sunday, as I recall—when the news flashed across America that Admiral Dewey and his brave men had destroyed the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay. That victory brought with it grave responsibilities. It is useless to discuss whether it was wise or unwise to take possession of the islands. You can not change the course of destiny. "Man proposes, God disposes." The fact is that we took possesssion of the Philippines and acquired a clear title thereto, not only by conquest but later by purchase. For some 17 years we have administered the affairs of the islands; we have materially developed their resources and civilized the inhabitants until to-day Christian and pagan alike there recognize and appreciate the justice, equity, and personal freedom of a republican form of government; we have made the islands sanitary; we have established churches and schools; and we have made great progress in educating the people, in uplifting them, and in developing them intellectually, physically, and morally, until to-day they have the aspirations of a nation.

But the undisputed fact remains that they are our wards. We owe an obligation to them just as much as we owed an obligation to Cuba. Of course the Philippines are much farther away than Cuba is, but the principle involved is the same. We made Cuba free. It was a most magnanimous act, the like of which the world had never seen before, but Cuba—we may say de facto and practically—was our ward, and the statesmen of that day fully lived up to the traditions of this country. They did not turn Cuba adrift, but, under the Platt amendment, retained the right of intervention there, a right that secures to Cuba a republican form of government, stable, efficient, and capable of protecting life and property there.

If an insurrection should spring up in Cuba this Government would undoubtedly intervene. If the inhabitants of Cuba should attempt to set up a monarchy, this Government would undoubtedly intervene. Having established this humane precedent in Cuba, how can we consistently and humanely abandon the Philippines to their fate, and leave them an easy prey of revolution or a helpless victim of appropriation by a stronger power, which might establish a monarchy there. Think of the President of the United States entering into negotiations with the king of the Philippines! Why, if that time should ever come, this Republic would not exist long enough to erase the blot in its record upon the page of the history of time.

Why all this haste to get out of the Philippines? It is said that the people of this country will never favor the creation of a State, or States, out of the islands. While not conceding that, yet assume it for the sake of argument. It is said that American citizenship can not be extended to the inhabitants because they are made up of so many different races that assimilation would be impossible. While not conceding that, yet assume it for the purpose of argument. Still those reasons are wholly insufficient as a defense to the charge of abandonment of our wards. The abandonment of a ward is not a tradition of this country. There must be some other reason, and that reason, whether we concede it or deny it, is, in my judgment, founded upon fear—a fear that the retention of the islands, or any interest in them, is an existing and continuing menace to this country, and that the sooner we are out of there the better. Getting out, bag and baggage, is an easy way of getting rid of a great moral obligation, but it is not the manly thing to do, nor the right thing to do. That might relieve fear and menace somewhat but not wholly. If we are going to act upon such a theory, we might with equal logic make up our minds to abandon Guam, the Samoan Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, the Aleutian Islands, Alaska—yes, the Golden Gate at San Francisco; and then tell the people upon the Pacific coast to go and hide themselves in the Rocky Mountains—a great natural barrier—that probably could not be taken by assault.

It seems to me that we must face our destiny standing firmly upon the rock of right and justice. We are the young giant of the west. We have to-day as integral parts of this Union 48 States, many of them like Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and Texas, really empires in themselves, all of them forming a compact, immense territorial area extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Dominion to the Gulf. Our wealth and resources are unlimited. It has been said that we were a billion-dollar country in the days of Speaker Reed. We have grown much since then. Our visible wealth is estimated to-day at upward of $200,000,000,000. No prudent person would venture to estimate how many hundreds of billions of dollars worth of property are stowed away in the bowels of the earth contained in these United States and its possessions.

Why should we permit our action to be controlled by a sense of fear? All the world knows that we do not covet a foot of the territory of any other country. We do not desire war with any nation. We are a great Christian, peace-loving people, devoted to the arts of peace, not to the arts of war. We stand for the preservation of human life, not for its destruction. We have millions of men for the defense of our country, but not a youth to sacrifice in any act of aggression. We have billions of dollars for defense, but not one cent for tribute. We know and feel our strength, but should exert it only in the upholding of human rights and in the advancement of Christianity and civilization. We are not blind, however, to human passions and human greed, and propose to put our house in order and to prepare adequately for the national defense and for the protection of the lives and property of our people.

I know that there are those who say that it requires no prophetic vision to see that in the future—it may be near, God grant it may be far—but in the future, some day, somewhere, a great battle will be fought which may determine the continued existence and perpetuity of this Republic, but which will surely determine whether this Republic shall continue to be the dominant power upon this Western Hemisphere. If that great crisis shall ever come, let this Nation be fully prepared to meet it—prepared to meet it with calmness, with resignation, and with absolute confidence of final victory. It is well to remember, however, that true preparedness does not consist in having the largest army in the world nor the largest navy in the world. There are other elements fully as important as the element of size. Courage, skill, expertness, and above all an absorbing national spirit must exist in the man behind the gun.

I well remember, when a boy upon the farm, a very large rooster called Dominick, king of the barnyard and monarch of all he surveyed. One day my brother brought home a gamecock not more than one-third the size of old Dominick. When the gamecock was put down in the yard the two fowls rushed together in fierce combat. You could not see anything in the air except feathers, but in less than one minute poor old Dominick had cashed in forever.

So I say that in true preparedness we must not neglect the intellectual, the physical, and moral development of the race. We must stand as a people, always and eternally for the right. We must uphold at all times, at all places, at all hazards, and at all cost the priceless traditions of this country.

And I repeat that the abandonment of a ward is not a tradition of this country. We owe it to ourselves, we owe it to the Philippines, to see that, either through ourselves or in conjunction with other friendly nations, a republican form of government is established and maintained there—a stable government fully capable of protecting the lives and property of the inhabitants thereof. Such a government in due time will not necessarily interfere with the independence of the Filipinos, but such a government will prove a tower of strength to us in the uplifting of our own people, and in their sublime confidence that right and justice must ultimately prevail, and that the traditions of this country affecting human rights, in the future as in the past, shall be regarded as the unwritten parts of the fundamental law of the land.

No justification can exist for hauling down the Stars and Stripes in the Philippines until the mission of this Republic has been completely fulfilled there. Those of us whose families have been sorely afflicted in putting down the insurrection in the islands would like to feel, I think, that the young heroes who, at the happy dawn of manhood, at the threshold of lives full of promise, paid the full sacrifice of war in the service of their country there, did not die in vain; that they were martyrs to the ideals of America; that they consecrated their lives to the cause of human freedom; and that their example, their patriotism, and their devotion to the great cause for which they fought and died shall always be an inspiration to posterity. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, the American soldiers and sailors bared their breasts in the furnace of war in the Philippine Islands, on sea and land, and their sacrifices, death, and privations shall not be in vain. Their work and death brought liberty and opportunity to those 10,000,000 people. Happiness and contentment is now theirs as a result thereof. This Congress of American representatives must not now withdraw and haul down Old Glory. If it is done, the result will be that all our efforts for these people will be wasted. How can we face these brave men, their widows and orphans, if we, now in the very midst of finishing the job that our soldiers and sailors made possible, leave these people to their fate. Oh, Mr. Chairman, where is our patriotism, our love for country, our devotion to the valorous men who went thousands of miles, many never to return, in this hour? Our American manhood must and will assert itself, our better judgment will triumph, and this Clarke amendment will and must be defeated. There are plenty of Americans yet brave enough and thoughtful enough to go on and prepare the Philippine people for self-government. They are not ready yet. This Government has done big things in the past, and we can do them in the future. I will not be one of those to cast my vote for this amendment and make for naught the work of my brave comrades who served so valiantly and well in the far-away Philippine Islands. I stand here ready to do them honor that live, and to honor the memory of those who lost their lives while serving there, or who have died as a result thereof. We owe them a debt of gratitude that can never be repaid.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the Philippines eventually being turned over to the Filipino people for government by themselves, and I hope that the time is not far distant when that may be done. I believe, however, that the time is not here now; and among all the men who have been in the Philippines, including Members of this House and of the Senate, I have been unable as yet to find anyone who will agree that the time is now ripe when we should turn those islands over to the Filipino people. Not only have I talked with Members of this House and of the Senate who have been there, but I have talked with men who served there with Dewey, with men who served in the islands with the Army when the Army first went there, with men who have served there ever since, and who are serving there to-day, and I have not been able to find one of them who believes that the Filipinos are able at present to organize and conduct a government of their own. I have talked with men who have come from those islands year after year since the insurrection there, and people tell me that the Japanese are there now, ready and waiting for the American people to haul down the flag, in order that they may start insurrection and trouble there and take those islands, and hoist the flag of the Empire of Japan. You gentlemen will not feel very proud of yourselves if by your votes you succeed in turning those islands over to people who are not now and will not for some years to come be capable of governing themselves, and then as a result of that they fall into the hands of another nation. If you do, the same thing will happen that has happened in the past. They will fall into the hands of stronger men, into the hands of those who have armies and navies. Japan will own the Philippine Islands, and all the blood we have shed and all the money we have spent and all the lives of American soldiers and sailors who have died in those islands will have gone for naught. I believe that while a great many of you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle are going to vote for this bill, you are hoping and praying that your votes will not pass it, because you know it would be a crime against the patriotism of this country that the American lives which have been lost there should go for naught, and all that has been accomplished there be sacrificed upon the alter of cowardice; for it would be an act of cowardice to haul down the American flag at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of the time remaining to this side to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, during this long debate many gentlemen have made reference to the fact that this is the anniversary of the naval battle of Manila Bay, a glorious day in the history of the American Republic. Not only to-day but through all the years the memory of that event has thrilled and will continue to thrill the hearts of the American people, and the reason has been and is that the American people understood what Dewey and his men were then fighting for, namely, human liberty and Cuban independence. [Applause.]

In subsequent days, when our troops were ordered into the Philippines to fight the Filipino people, who at that particular time were standing for nothing save that for which the Cubans had been standing, and our boys were dying in those tropical lands, struggling against the very principle that Dewey had fought for in Manila Bay, did the American people thrill with pride? Of course, there was appreciation of the bravery and courage of our soldiers who obeyed orders. I would not reflect upon them; but tell me, where out of all that war of coercion did there ever come a poem or a song that will live in history and prove a matter of pride to the generations that are to follow us? Oh, it is said, and I do not deny it—I take pride in the fact—that since our occupation we have been altruistic and liberal toward those people. I do not come here now to criticize any particular administration. Of course there may be some matters of detail in the past administrations of the affairs of the Philippine Islands with which I would not agree, but let us grant that our course has been wholly altruistic. What of it? I have been somewhat interested to see the different angles from which gentlemen have approached this question. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] who spoke a few moments ago, and others approached it from what they chose to term in some respects the Christian and educational standpoint. Others approached it from the standpoint of glory, others from the standpoint of fame. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] approached it, if I understood him correctly, from all these standpoints, and he would tread all these paths provided they were made luminous by 5 per cent. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Another gentleman has had much to say of treaty obligations to Spain. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] insisted that by reason of the treaty which was made between this country and Spain we undertook certain obligations for the protection of Spanish property, and that that solemn responsibility rests upon us by treaty entered into and ratified by this Government. Gentlemen, I have heard that suggested before. Perhaps some may be impressed by it, and therefore I venture to read to you now all that is contained in that treaty concerning the obligation of this country to protect Spanish rights:

ART. 4. The United States will, for the term of 10 years from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty, admit Spanish ships and merchandise to the ports of the Philippine Islands on the same terms as ships and merchandise of the United States.

ART. 13. The rights of property secured by copyrights and patents acquired by Spaniards in the island of Cuba and in Porto Rico, the Philippines, and other ceded territory at the time of the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty shall continue to be respected. Spanish scientific, literary, and artistic works, not subversive of public order in the territories in question, shall continue to be admitted free of duty into such territories for the period of 10 years, to be reckoned from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty.

That, Mr. Chairman, is all that is in the treaty with reference to the guaranty of any right of Spain or any Spanish citizen. Well, the 10 years have long since gone by, and certainly no gentleman will say that that argument has not gone glimmering. But other gentlemen, even my good friend from Kansas——

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Very briefly, if you please.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. How about article 10 of the treaty with Spain?

Mr. GARRETT. I have stated every guaranty of property of Spain in that treaty. I am quite pressed for time, as the gentleman——

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. It is only three lines, and I hope the gentleman will read it.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman knows I have not the time now.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. It guarantees religious freedom.

Mr. GARRETT. That is not a guaranty of property rights; that is a protection of the inhabitants of the territory she was ceding. The gentleman evidently did not understand the argument.

My good friend from Kansas approaches it from the angle of not tearing down the flag. Well, Mr. Chairman, my idea about the question of pulling down the flag is that it depends very much upon what that flag was put up for. If the flag represented in the Philippine Islands what it represents here I should not favor pulling down the flag, but it does not represent it. The Filipino people were bought and then whipped. I do not believe that this Government has ever had a mission, moral or legal, for establishing a government over another people against that people's will.

I undertake to say that it is contrary to the whole spirit of the United States Republic; that it is in violation of all for which this Government has stood.

I believe that if we do not correct this error, if we do not discontinue this policy, if we do not return to the ideals and traditions of a republic standing firmly by them, that it will not be long until this Republic will have gone the way of all other Republics and will become nothing but an imperialism in fact, although the form of republic may be for a time sustained as a hollow mockery. [Applause.]

I venture to hope that it is not yet too late, Mr. Chairman, to return to the ideals, to go back to the old traditions for which our fathers so willingly died—the old traditions and spirit of this Republic which are at once the glory of history and the hope of all the future. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES) there were 155 ayes and 129 noes.

Mr. JONES. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were 193 ayes and 151 noes.

So the motion prevailed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in place of section 34, stricken out:

"SEC. 34. The President is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty now existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippines; and he shall, on behalf of the United States, fully recognize the independence of the said Philippines as a separate and self-governing nation, and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof; and full power to take the several steps necessary to institute such government is hereby conferred upon the said Philippines, acting by and through governmental agencies created by this act. This transfer of possession, sovereignty, and governmental control shall be completed and become absolute not less than two years nor more than six years from the date of the approval of this act, under the terms and in the manner hereinafter prescribed: Provided, That if the President, prior to the expiration of the said period of six years, shall find that the condition of the internal or external affairs of said Philippines, in respect to the stability or efficiency of the proposed government thereof, is such as to warrant him in so doing, he is hereby further authorized, by proclamation duly made and published, to extend the said time to and including the date of the final adjournment of the session of Congress which shall convene next after the date of the expiration of the said period of six years, and thus afford the Congress an opportunity in its discretion to further consider the situation in the said Philippines; but any such extension of time by the President shall not otherwise suspend or nullify the operative force of this act unless the Congress shall hereafter so direct. For the purpose of a complete and prompt compliance with this direction, the President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the said Philippines, and to cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States and of other countries resident or engaged in business in said Philippines or having property interests therein.

"The bonds heretofore or hereafter issued by the Government of the Philippine Islands under authority of legislation of Congress shall be payable, both as to principal and interest, at the office of the Treasurer of the United States. The amounts necessary for such payments shall be provided by the Philippine government.

"The President will take such steps as he may deem advisable, and full authority is hereby granted to him for that purpose, to prevent a default of this obligation by the Philippine government or its successors.

"In any such settlement or adjustment so made in respect to the rights and property of the United States as against the said Philippines the President may reserve or acquire such lands and rights and privileges appurtenant thereto as may, in his judgment, be required by the United States for naval bases and coaling stations within the territory of said Philippines."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES) there were—ayes 146, noes 186.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in place of section 34 the following:

"SEC. 34. The President is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty now existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippines, and he shall on behalf of the United States fully recognize the independence of the said Philippines as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof, and full power to take the several steps necessary to institute such government is hereby conferred upon the said Philippines acting by and through governmental agencies created by this act. This transfer of possession, sovereignty, and governmental control shall be completed and become absolute not less than four years nor more than eight years from the date of the approval of this act, under the terms and in the manner hereinafter prescribed: Provided, That if the President, prior to the expiration of the said period of eight years, shall find that the condition of the internal or external affairs of said Philippines in respect to the stability or efficiency of the proposed government thereof is such as to warrant him in so doing, he is hereby further authorized, by proclamation duly made and published, to extend the said time to and including the date of the final adjournment of the session of Congress which shall convene next after the date of the expiration of the said period of eight years, and thus afford the Congress an opportunity in its discretion to further consider the situation in the said Philippines; but any such extension of time by the President shall not otherwise suspend or nullify the operative force of this act, unless the Congress shall hereafter so direct. For the purpose of a complete and prompt compliance with this direction, the President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the said Philippines, and to cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States and of other countries resident or engaged in business in said Philippines or having property interests therein.

"The bonds heretofore or hereafter issued by the government of the Philippine Islands, under authority of legislation of Congress, shall be payable, both as to principal and interest, at the office of the Treasurer of the United States. The amounts necessary for such payments shall be provided by the Philippine government.

"The President will take such steps as he may deem advisable, and full authority is hereby granted to him for that purpose, to prevent a default of this obligation by the Philippine government or its successors.

"In any such settlement or adjustment so made in respect to the rights and property of the United States as against the said Philippines the President may reserve or acquire such lands and rights and privileges appurtenant thereto as may, in his judgment, be required by the United States for naval bases and coaling stations within the territory of said Philippines."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES) there were 149 ayes and 188 noes.

Mr. JONES. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 162 ayes and 193 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After section 33 insert, as a new section, the following:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, instructed to take such steps as may be necessary to secure the adhesion of all maritime States interested therein in a declaration and international guaranty whereby the Philippine Islands, and each of them, shall be forever neutralized and placed under the protection of the said powers. Whenever such neutralization shall have become effective the Government of the United States hereby pledges itself to cede its sovereignty in, to, and over said Philippine Islands to such body as the said maritime States shall have resolved on: Provided further, That no State guaranteeing said convention shall ever acquire, hold, grant, or exercise any exclusive or unilateral power, franchise, or domination, authority, or sway in or on or about said Philippine Islands. Said agreement shall provide for the policing of said Philippine Islands by an international force: And provided further, That any infraction of this resolution by any signatory power shall ipso facto rescind the adhesion hereto by the United States."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment can not be offered at this point in the bill. The gentleman will have an opportunity to offer that later as the bill is read in the regular way. I will state to the gentleman that we had an agreement by which section 34 of the bill was read for amendment, and that after that had been disposed of we were to read the bill. We are now about to start the reading of the bill, and when it comes to the proper place the gentleman can offer his amendment. I make the point of order that it is not in order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken. At this time, under agreement heretofore made, section 34 was to be considered out of order.

Mr. SABATH. If that is the case, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of this act and the name "The Philippines" as used in this act shall apply to and include the Philippine Islands ceded to the United States Government by the treaty of peace concluded between the United States and Spain on the 11th day of April, 1899, the boundaries of which are set forth in Article III of said treaty, together with those islands embraced in the treaty between Spain and the United States concluded at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the bill which I have in my hand, being H. R. 1, as a substitute for Senate bill 381.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JONES offers the following as a substitute for Senate bill 381:

"A bill to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands"——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order right now that the gentleman can not offer a title at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. JONES. I offer all after the title. Let the Clerk read the preamble.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the preamble can not be offered at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. JONES. Then I will offer the preamble at the end, and ask the Clerk to read from the enacting clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the provisions of this act and the name "The Philippines" as used in this act shall apply to and include the Philippine Islands ceded to the United States Government by the treaty of peace concluded between the United States and Spain on the 11th day of April, 1899, the boundaries of which are set forth in Article III of said treaty, together with those islands embraced in the treaty between Spain and the United States concluded at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900.

SEC. 2. That all inhabitants of the Philippine Islands continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in said islands, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the Philippine Islands, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, signed at Paris, December 10, 1898, and except such others as have since become citizens of some other country: Provided, That the Philippine Legislature, herein provided for, is hereby authorized to provide by law for the acquisition of Philippine citizenship by those natives of the Philippine Islands who do not come within the foregoing provisions, the natives of the insular possessions of the United States, and such other persons residing in the Philippine Islands who are citizens of the United States, or who could become citizens of the United States under the laws of the United States if residing therein.

SEC. 3. That no law shall be enacted in said islands which shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person therein the equal protection of the laws. Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.

That in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to be heard by himself and counsel, to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, to have a speedy and public trial, to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf.

That no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense without due process of law; and no person for the same offense shall be twice put in jeopardy of punishment, nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.

That all persons shall before conviction be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses.

That no law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be enacted.

That no person shall be imprisoned for debt.

That the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion, insurrection, or invasion the public safety may require it, in either of which events the same may be suspended by the President, or by the Governor General, wherever during such period the necessity for such suspension shall exist.

That no ex post facto law or bill of attainder shall be enacted nor shall the law of primogeniture ever be in force in the Philippines.

That no law granting a title of nobility shall be enacted; and no person holding any office of profit or trust in said islands shall, without the consent of the Congress of the United States, accept any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, queen, prince, or foreign State.

That excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted.

That the right to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated.

That slavery shall not exist in said islands; nor shall involuntary servitude exist therein except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

That no law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the Government for redress of grievances.

That no law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed, and no religious test shall be required for the exercise of civil or political rights. No public money or property shall ever be appropriated, applied, donated, or used directly or indirectly, for the use, benefit, or support of any sect, church, denomination, or system of religion, or for the use, benefit, or support of any priest, preacher, minister, or other religious teacher or dignitary or sectarian institution as such. That no law shall be construed to permit polygamous or plural marriages.

That no money shall be paid out of the treasury except in pursuance of an appropriation by law.

That the rule of taxation in said islands shall be uniform.

That no bill which may be enacted into law shall embrace more than one subject, and that subject shall be expressed in the title of the bill.

That no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the person or things to be seized.

That all money collected on any tax levied or assessed for a special purpose shall be treated as a special fund in the treasury and paid out for such purpose only.

SEC. 4. That all expenses that may be incurred on account of the Government of the Philippines for salaries of officials and the conduct of their offices and departments, and all expenses and obligations contracted for the internal improvement or development of the islands, not, however, including defenses, barracks, and other works undertaken by the United States, shall, except as otherwise specifically provided by the Congress, be paid by the government of the Philippines.

SEC. 5. That the statutory laws of the United States hereafter enacted shall not apply to the Philippine Islands, except when they specifically so provide or it is so provided in this act.

SEC. 6. That the laws now in force in the Philippines shall continue in force and effect, except as altered, amended, or modified herein, until altered, amended, or repealed by the legislative authority herein provided or by act of Congress of the United States.

SEC. 7. That the legislative authority herein provided shall have power, when not inconsistent with this act, by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal any law, civil or criminal, continued in force by this act as it may from time to time see fit.

This power shall specifically extend, with the limitation herein provided as to the tariff, to all laws relating to revenue and taxation in effect in the Philippines.

SEC. 8. That general legislative power, except as otherwise herein provided, is hereby granted to the Philippine Legislature, authorized by this act.

SEC. 9. That all the property and rights which may have been acquired in the Philippine Islands by the United States under the treaty of peace with Spain, signed December 10, 1898, except such land or other property as has been or shall be designated by the President of the United States for military and other reservations of the Government of the United States, and all lands which may have been subsequently acquired by the government of the Philippine Islands by purchase under the provisions of sections 63 and 64 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, except such as may have heretofore been sold and disposed of in accordance with the provisions of said act of Congress, are hereby placed under the control of the government of said islands, to be administered or disposed of for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, and the Philippine Legislature shall have power to legislate with respect to all such matters as it may deem advisable; but acts of the Philippine Legislature with reference to land, timber, and mining, hereafter enacted, shall not have the force of law until approved by the President of the United States: Provided, That upon the approval of such an act by the Governor General, it shall be by him forthwith transmitted to the President of the United States, and he shall approve or disapprove the same within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval, and if not disapproved within such time it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved: Provided further, That where lands in the Philippine Islands have been or may be reserved for any public purpose of the United States, and, being no longer required for the purpose for which reserved, have been or may be, by order of the President, placed under the control of the government of said islands to be administered for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, the order of the President shall be regarded as effectual to give the government of said islands full control and power to administer and dispose of such lands for the benefit of the inhabitants of said islands.

SEC. 10. That, while this act provides that the Philippine government shall have the authority to enact a tariff law, the trade relations between the islands and the United States shall continue to be governed exclusively by laws of the Congress of the United States: Provided, That tariff acts or acts amendatory to the tariff of the Philippine Islands shall not become law until they shall receive the approval of the President of the United States, nor shall any act of the Philippine Legislature affecting the currency or coinage laws of the Philippines become a law until it has been approved by the President of the United States: Provided further, That the President shall approve or disapprove any act mentioned in the foregoing proviso within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval, and if not disapproved within such time it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved.

SEC. 11. That no export duties shall be levied or collected on exports from the Philippine Islands, but taxes and assessments on property and license fees for franchises, and privileges, and internal taxes, direct or indirect, may be imposed for the purposes of the Philippine government and the provincial and municipal governments thereof, respectively, as may be provided and defined by acts of the Philippine Legislature heretofore enacted, and, where necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues, bonds and other obligations may be issued by the Philippine government or any provincial or municipal government therein, as may be provided by law and to protect the public credit: Provided, however, That the entire indebtedness of the Philippine government created by the authority conferred herein shall not exceed at any one time the sum of $15,000,000, exclusive of those obligations known as friar-land bonds, nor that of any Province or municipality a sum in excess of 7 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of its property at any one time.

SEC. 12. That general legislative powers in the Philippines, except as herein otherwise provided, shall be vested in a legislature which shall consist of two houses, one the senate and the other the house of representatives, and the two houses shall be designated "the Philippine Legislature": Provided, That until the Philippine Legislature as herein provided shall have been organized the existing Philippine Legislature shall have all legislative authority herein granted to the government of the Philippine Islands, except such as may now be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Philippine Commission, which is so continued until the organization of the legislature herein provided for the Philippines. When the Philippine Legislature shall have been organized the exclusive legislative jurisdiction and authority exercised by the Philippine Commission shall thereafter be exercised by the Philippine Legislature.

SEC. 13. That the members of the senate of the Philippines, except as herein provided, shall be elected for terms of six and three years, as hereinafter provided, by the qualified electors of the Philippines. Each of the senatorial districts defined as hereinafter provided shall have the right to elect two senators. No person shall be an elective member of the senate of the Philippines who is not a qualified elector and over 30 years of age, and who is not able to read and write either the Spanish or English language, and who has not been a resident of the Philippines for at least two consecutive years and an actual resident of the senatorial district from which chosen for a period of at least one year immediately prior to his election.

SEC. 14. That the members of the house of representatives shall, except as herein provided, be elected triennially by the qualified electors of the Philippines. Each of the representative districts hereinafter provided for shall have the right to elect one representative. No person shall be an elective member of the house of representatives who is not a qualified elector and over 25 years of age, and who is not able to read and write either the Spanish or English language, and who has not been an actual resident of the district from which elected for at least one year immediately prior to his election.

SEC. 15. That until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature herein provided for the qualifications of voters for senators and representatives in the Philippines and all officers elected by the people shall be as follows:

Every male citizen of the Philippines 21 years of age or over (except insane and feeble-minded persons and those convicted in a court of competent jurisdiction of an infamous offense since the 13th day of Aug., 1898), who shall have been a resident of the Philippines for one year and of the municipality in which he shall offer to vote for six months next preceding the day of voting, and who is comprised within one of the following classes:

(a) Those who under existing law are legal voters and have exercised the right of suffrage.

(b) Those who own real property to the value of ₱500, or who annually pay ₱30 or more of the established taxes.

(c) Those who are able to read and write either Spanish, English, or a native language.

SEC. 16. That for the purposes of the first election hereafter to the Philippine Legislature, the Philippine Islands shall be divided by the Philippine Commission into 12 senate and 90 representative districts. In establishing senate and representative districts the commission shall establish in the territory not now represented in the Philippine Assembly one senate and nine representative districts. The first election under the provisions of this act shall be held on the first Tuesday of June, 1916, unless the Governor General in his discretion shall fix another date not earlier than 30 nor later than 60 days after the passage of this act: Provided, That the Governor General's proclamation shall be published at least 30 days prior to the date fixed for the election, and there shall be chosen at such election one senator from each senate district for a term of three years and one for six years. Thereafter one senator from each district shall be elected from each senate district for a term of six years. That at said first election each representative district shall elect one representative for a term of three years, and triennially thereafter: Provided, That the Governor General of the Philippine Islands shall appoint, without the consent of the senate and without restriction as to residence, senators and representatives who will, in his opinion, best represent the senate district and those representative districts which may be included in the territory not now represented in the Philippine Assembly: Provided further, That thereafter elections shall be held only on such days and under such regulations as to ballots, voting, and qualifications of electors as may be prescribed by the Philippine Legislature, to which is hereby given authority to redistrict the Philippine Islands and modify, amend, or repeal any provision of this section.

SEC. 17. That the terms of office of elective senators and representatives shall be six and three years, respectively, and shall begin on the date of their election. In case of vacancy among the elective members of the senate or in the house of representatives, special elections may be held in the districts wherein such vacancy occurred under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, but senators or representatives elected in such cases shall hold office only for the unexpired portion of the term wherein the vacancy occurred. Senators and representatives appointed by the Governor General shall hold office until removed by the Governor General.

SEC. 18. That the senate and house of representatives, respectively, shall be the sole judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their elective members, and each house may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member. Both houses shall convene at the capital on the 16th day of October next following the election and organize by the election of a speaker or a presiding officer, a clerk, and a sergeant at arms for each house, and such other officers and assistants as may be required. A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may meet, adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members. The legislature shall hold annual sessions, commencing on the 16th day of October, or, if the 16th day of October be a legal holiday, then on the first day following which is not a legal holiday, in each year. The legislature may be called in special session at any time by the Governor General for general legislation, or for action on such specific subjects as he may designate. No special session shall continue longer than 30 days, and no regular session shall continue longer than 100 days, exclusive of Sundays. The legislature is hereby given the power and authority to change the date of the commencement of its annual sessions.

The senators and representatives shall receive an annual compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the treasury of the Philippine Islands. The senators and representatives shall, in all cases except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective houses and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either house they shall not be questioned in any other place.

No senator or representative shall, during the term for which he may have been elected, be eligible to any office the election to which is vested in the legislative assembly, nor shall be appointed to any office of trust or profit which shall have been created or the emoluments of which shall have been increased during such term.

SEC. 19. That each house of the legislature shall keep a journal of its proceedings and, from time to time, publish the same, and the yeas and nays of the members of either house on any question shall, upon demand of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal, and every bill and joint resolution which shall have passed both houses shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor General. If he approve the same he shall sign it; but if not he shall return it with his objections to that house in which it shall have originated, which shall enter the objections at large on its journal and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of the members elected to that house shall agree to pass the same, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of all the members elected to that house it shall be sent to the Governor General, who, in case he shall then not approve, shall transmit the same to the President of the United States. The vote of each house shall be by the yeas and nays, and the names of the members voting for and against shall be entered on the journal. If the President of the United States approve the same he shall sign it and it shall become a law. If he shall not approve same he shall return it to the Governor General so stating, and it shall not become a law: Provided, That if any bill or joint resolution shall not be returned by the Governor General as herein provided within 20 days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him the same shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature by adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law: Provided further, That the President of the United States shall approve or disapprove an act submitted to him under the provisions of this section within six months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval; and if not approved within such time, it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved. The Governor General shall have the power to veto any particular item or items of an appropriation bill, but the veto shall not affect the item or items to which he does not object. The item or items objected to shall not take effect except in the manner heretofore provided in this section as to bills and joint resolutions returned to the legislature without his approval.

All laws enacted by the Philippine Legislature shall be reported to the Congress of the United States, which hereby reserves the power and authority to annul the same. If at the termination of any fiscal year the appropriations necessary for the support of government for the ensuing fiscal year shall not have been made, the several sums appropriated in the last appropriation bills for the objects and purposes therein specified, so far as the same may be done, shall be deemed to be reappropriated for the several objects and purposes specified in said last appropriation bill; and until the legislature shall act in such behalf the treasurer shall, when so directed by the Governor General, make the payments necessary for the purposes aforesaid.

SEC. 20. That the qualified electors of the Philippine Islands shall, on the first Tuesday in June, 1916, and at the general elections thereafter provided for the election of senators and representatives to the Philippine Legislature, elect two Resident Commissioners to the United States, who shall be entitled to an official recognition as such by all departments upon presentation to the President of a certificate of election by the Governor General of said islands. Each of said Resident Commissioners shall, in addition to the salary and the sum in lieu of mileage now allowed by law, be allowed the same sum for stationery and for the pay of necessary clerk hire as is now allowed to the Members of the House of Representatives of the United States, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and the franking privilege allowed by law to Members of Congress. No person shall be eligible to election as Resident Commissioner who is not a bona fide elector of said islands and who does not owe allegiance to the United States and who is not more than 30 years of age and who does not read and write the English language. The two Resident Commissioners elected in June, 1916, shall hold their office from the first Monday in the month of December following until the 4th of March, 1922; and the term of their successors shall be for six years, beginning from the 4th of March following their election. In case of vacancy in the position of Resident Commissioner caused by resignation or otherwise the Governor General may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Philippine Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancy; but the Resident Cotmmissioner thus elected shall hold office only for the unexpired portion of the term wherein the vacancy occurred.

SEC. 21. That the supreme executive power shall be vested in an executive officer, whose official title shall be "The Governor General of the Philippine Islands." He shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and hold his office at the pleasure of the President and until his successor is chosen and qualified. The Governor General shall reside in the Philippine Islands during his official incumbency, and maintain his office at the seat of government. He shall, unless otherwise herein provided, appoint, by and with the consent of the Philippine Senate, such officers as may now be appointed by the Governor General, or such as he is authorized by this act to appoint, or whom he may hereafter be authorized by law to appoint; but appointments made while the senate is not in session shall be effective either until disapproval or until the next adjournment of the senate. He shall have general supervision and control of all of the departments and bureaus of the Government in the Philippine Islands as far as is not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and shall be commander in chief of all locally created armed forces and militia. He is hereby vested with the exclusive power to grant pardons and reprieves and remit fines and forfeitures, and may veto any legislation enacted as herein provided. He shall submit within 10 days of the opening of each regular session of the Philippine Legislature a budget of receipts and expenditures, which shall be the basis of the annual appropriation bill. He shall commission all officers that he may be authorized to appoint. He shall be responsible for the faithful execution of the laws of the Philippine Islands and of the United States operative within the Philippine Islands, and whenever it becomes necessary he may call upon the commanders of the military and naval forces of the United States in the islands, or summon the posse comitatus, or call out the militia, or other locally created armed forces to prevent or suppress lawless violence, invasion, insurrection, or rebellion; and he may, in case of rebellion or invasion, or imminent danger thereof, when the public safety requires it, suspend the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus, or place the islands, or any part thereof, under martial law: Provided, That whenever the Governor General shall exercise the authority granted in this section, he shall at once notify the President of the United States thereof, together with the attending facts and circumstances, and the President shall have power to modify or vacate the action of the Governor General. He shall annually and at such other times as he may be required make such official report of the transactions of the government of the Philippine Islands to an executive department of the United States to be designated by the President, and his said annual report shall be transmitted to the Congress of the United States; and he shall perform such additional duties and functions as may in pursuance of law be delegated or assigned to him by the President.

SEC. 22. That, except as provided otherwise in this act, the executive departments of the Philippine government shall continue as now authorized by law until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature. When the Philippine Legislature herein provided shall convene and organize, the Philippine Commission, as such, shall cease and determine, and the members thereof shall vacate their offices as members of said commission: Provided, That the heads of executive departments shall continue to exercise their executive functions until the heads of departments provided by the Philippine Legislature pursuant to the provisions of this act are appointed and qualified. The Philippine Legislature may thereafter by appropriate legislation increase the number or abolish any of the executive departments, or make such changes in the names and duties thereof as it may see fit, and shall provide for the appointment and removal of the heads of the executive departments by the Governor General: Provided, That all executive functions of the government must be directly under the Governor General or within one of the executive departments under the supervision and control of the Governor General. There shall be established by the Philippine Legislature a bureau, to be known as the bureau of non-Christian tribes, which said bureau shall be embraced in one of the executive departments to be designated by the Governor General, and shall have general supervision over the public affairs of the inhabitants of the territory represented in the legislature by appointive senators and representatives.

SEC. 23. That the President my from time to time designate the head of an executive department of the Philippine government to act as Governor General in the case of a vacancy, the temporary removal, resignation, or disability of the Governor General, or his temporary absence, and the head of the department thus designated shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the Governor General during such vacancy, disability, or absence.

SEC. 24. That the supreme court and the courts of first instance of the Philippine Islands shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as heretofore provided and such additional jurisdiction as shall hereafter be prescribed by law. The municipal courts of said islands shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as now provided by law, subject in all matters in such alteration and amendment as may be hereafter enacted by law; and the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court shall hereafter be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States. The judges of the court of first instance shall be appointed by the Governor General, by and with the advice and consent of the Philippine Senate: Provided, That the admiralty jurisdiction of the supreme court and courts of first instance shall not be changed except by act of Congress. That in all cases pending under the operation of existing laws, both criminal and civil, the jurisdiction shall continue until final judgment and determination.

SEC. 25. That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, reverse, modify, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands in all actions, cases, causes, and proceedings now pending therein or hereafter determined thereby in which the Constitution or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States is involved, or in causes in which the value in controversy exceeds $25,000, or in which the title or possession of real estate exceeding in value the sum of $25,000, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or of other competent witnesses, is involved or brought in question; and such final judgments or decrees may and can be reviewed, revised, reversed, modified, or affirmed by said Supreme Court of the United States on appeal or writ of error by the party aggrieved within the same time, in the same manner, under the same regulations, and by the same procedure, as far as applicable, as the final judgments and decrees of the district courts of the United States.

SEC. 26. That the Government of the Philippine Islands may grant franchises and rights, including the authority to exercise the right of eminent domain, for the construction and operation of works of public utility and service, and may authorize said works to be constructed and maintained over and across the public property of the United States, including streets, highways, squares, and reservations, and over similar property of the Government of said islands, and may adopt rules and regulations under which the provincial and municipal governments of the islands may grant the right to use and occupy such public property belonging to said Provinces or municipalities: Provided, That no private property shall be damaged or taken for any purpose under this section without just compensation, and that such authority to take and occupy land shall not authorize the taking, use, or occupation of any land except such as is required for the actual necessary purposes for which the franchise is granted, and that no franchise or right shall be granted to any individual, firm, or corporation except under the conditions that it shall be subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal by the Congress of the United States, and that lands or rights of use and occupation of lands thus granted shall revert to the governments by which they were respectively granted upon the termination of the franchises and rights under which they were granted or upon their revocation or repeal. That all franchises or rights granted under this act shall forbid the issue of stock or bonds except in exchange for actual cash or for property at a fair valuation equal to the par value of the stock or bonds so issued; shall forbid the declaring of stock or bond dividends, and, in the case of public-service corporations, shall provide for the effective regulation of the charges thereof, for the official inspection and regulation of the books and accounts of such corporations, and for the payment of a reasonable percentage of gross earnings into the treasury of the Philippine Islands or of the Province or municipality within which such franchises are granted and exercised: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any corporation organized under this act, or for any person, company, or corporation receiving any grant, franchise, or concession from the Government of said islands, to use, employ, or contract for the labor of persons held in involuntary servitude; and any person, company, or corporation so violating the provisions of this act shall forfeit all charters, grants, or franchises for doing business in said islands, in an action or proceeding brought for that purpose in any court of competent jurisdiction by any officer of the Philippine Government, or on the complaint of any citizen of the Philippines, under such regulations and rules as the Philippine Legislature shall prescribe, and in addition shall be deemed guilty of an offense, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000.

SEC. 27. That, except as in this act otherwise provided, the salaries of all the officials of the Philippines not appointed by the President, including deputies, assistants, and other employees, shall be such and be so paid out of the revenues of the Philippines as shall from time to time be determined by the Philippine Legislature. The salaries of all officers and all expenses of the offices of the various officials of the Philippines appointed as herein provided by the President shall also be paid out of the revenues of the Philippines. The annual salaries of the following-named officials appointed by the President and so to be paid shall be: The Governor General, $18,000; in addition thereto he shall be entitled to the occupancy of the buildings heretofore used by the chief executive of the Philippines, with the furniture and effects therein, free of rental; chief justice of the supreme court, $8,000; associate justices of the supreme court, $7,500 each.

SEC. 28. That the provisions of the foregoing section shall not apply to provincial and municipal officials; their salaries and the compensation of their deputies, assistants, and other help, as well as all other expenses incurred by the Provinces and municipalities, shall be paid out of the provincial and municipal revenues in such manner as the Philippine Legislature shall provide.

SEC. 29. That all laws or parts of laws applicable to the Philippines not in conflict with any of the provisions of this act are hereby continued in force and effect.

Mr. TOWNER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there can be no consideration of a bill that has been offered in its entirety consisting of several sections for another bill which was offered in its entirety. I suggest to the Chair that there is only one circumstance under the authorities and precedents by which one bill can be substituted for another, and that is in a case where a bill has been offered as a substitute for a particular section of a bill being read with the notice that should the substitute be agreed to a motion will be made to strike out the subsequent sections of the bill when they are reached.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late, the Clerk having started to read the amendment. Of course I do not admit that the point of order is well taken. I think there are ample precedents for the action which I propose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the rule is well settled that when the first section of a bill is read it is in order to offer a substitute for the entire bill, if the gentleman offering it gives notice that if the substitute is agreed to he will move to strike out the other sections of the bill as they are read, but the gentleman from Virginia has given no such formal notice.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I will give that notice, that if the substitute is agreed to I will move to strike out all of the other sections of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is not well taken in view of the statement of the gentleman from Virginia, and the Clerk will continue the reading.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman from Virginia state just what this is?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that this is practically the bill which was passed in the last Congress. There are several slight changes, none of which goes to the substance of the bill at all. The changes were unanimously agreed to by the committee. They were mostly suggested, or some of them, by the War Department, and the others by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman—and I guess it would be in order—before the Senate bill came over from the Senate, the Committee on Insular Affairs had under consideration the Jones bill, as I understand it?

Mr. JONES. The bill that we passed last Congress.

Mr. MANN. And the committee had practically perfected that bill and agreed upon its terms outside of the preamble?

Mr. JONES. We had agreed upon the preamble and all—everything.

Mr. MANN. Evidently the full committee had not agreed upon it. There was a division of sentiment on the preamble. I am speaking of the rest, anyhow, so never mind the preamble. That is not under consideration.

Mr. JONES. I do not think there was any division on that.

Mr. MANN. That is not the question. As I understand, both sides of the committee had practically agreed upon the bill as now offered by the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. JONES. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. And I think that is satisfactory.

Mr. JONES. Absolutely. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Now, Mr. Chairman, to save time and avoid reading the following section of Senate bill 381, I ask unanimous consent that they all be considered as stricken out.

Mr. FERRIS. Does that include section 34, too?

Mr. JONES. That is already stricken out.

Mr. FERRIS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Does this procedure take away the right to get a separate vote on the striking out of section 34, which was a committee amendment under the former bill?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. JONES. I think not. The motion I make is to strike out all of the sections beginning at 2 and ending with and including 33.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. I understand his request for unanimous consent is beginning with section 2 now of the Senate bill and is stricken out to what section?

Mr. JONES. Beginning with section 2 down to and including section 33, and all the intervening sections.

Mr. FINLEY. Why could not they be stricken out by vote if the House in Committee of the Whole is opposed to it?

Mr. JONES. It would take a great deal more time, and they would have to vote on each one separately.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not care to be put in a position of agreeing to strike out those sections of the Senate bill.

Mr. JONES. We have already agreed on a substitute bill.

Mr. FINLEY. You can do it by vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent——

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask that they be voted on as one amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. I have no objection to that. I do not want to be put in a position of agreeing to strike out those sections of the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman wish them read?

Mr. FINLEY. No; I do not care about that.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the vote be taken on the motion to strike out all of the sections from 2 to 33, inclusive.

Mr. MANN. That is one motion?

Mr. JONES. That is one motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the sections from sections 2 to 33, inclusive, of the Senate bill, and the motion is to strike out those sections. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] if this is a correct statement of the situation as it is now before us? On page 14 of its report the minority says:

> The minority entirely agree with the majority that the Philippines should be given a new fundamental law granting to the people a larger measure of self-government. The minority would gladly support the passage of the Jones bill without the preamble. They would even support the Jones bill with the preamble as a substitute for the Senate bill with the Clarke amendment.

The Clarke amendment has been voted down. Are we now voting on the Jones bill as approved by the minority?

Mr. TOWNER. I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. We have already had it read.

Mr. TOWNER. That has all been disposed of. Now, the question is whether the parts that were the substitution for it will go out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is agreeable to the minority of the committee?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY. We will all vote the Republican ticket now. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out sections 2 to 33 of the pending bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Now, Mr. Chairman, the first section of Senate bill 381 was adopted before the amendment was offered.

Mr. MANN. We adopted an amendment in lieu of that. The gentleman offered an amendment to strike that out and insert the substitute.

Mr. JONES. Very well, Mr. Chairman, I offer the preamble, and ask that it be read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the preamble offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the committee has nothing to do with the preamble. The preamble is acted upon in the House after the bill is passed. My recollection is—and it is refreshed by the recollection of others here—that when the Jones bill was under consideration in the last Congress it was decided then that the preamble was not to be acted upon by the Committee of the Whole House. It was acted upon by the House only after the bill had been passed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken about that. The preamble was not voted on until after the bill had been; but I think it was voted on in the committee, but not until after the bill had been voted on.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman might be correct, but my recollection is fairly distinct that that was not the case.

Mr. JONES. I feel quite sure that that was the proceeding. I think the gentleman from Illinois himself made the motion that the preamble would not be voted on until the bill had been completed.

Mr. MANN. I think I made the point of order, and it was sustained, that the preamble could not be dealt with until the bill was passed.

Mr. JONES. No; I think it was before the bill was reported to the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Virginia allow me a question?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. After the bill was passed in the House it would be in order to insert a preamble, would it not?

Mr. JONES. My opinion is that it would be in order to insert the preamble in the Committee of the Whole, but not until after the bill had been adopted.

Mr. CANNON. But what object can be gained? It is not necessary to consider the preamble in Committee of the Whole first. The preamble is never voted upon and never amended until after the bill is passed, and therefore, whatever the action of the committee might be, it would not be binding.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order anyhow, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to delay the game.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

The Clerk read as follows:

> Whereas it was never the intention of the people of the United States in the incipiency of the War with Spain to make it a war of conquest or for territorial aggrandizement; and
> Whereas it is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein; and
> Whereas for the speedy accomplishment of such purpose it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without, in the meantime, impairing the exercise of the rights of sovereignty by the people of the United States, in order that, by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers, they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence: Therefore

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the agreement is, but will there be an opportunity for debate on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The chair will state to the gentleman that it is subject to debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized for five minutes upon this preamble.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, when the Jones bill was before the House in October, 1914, I called attention to what Judge Thomas M. Cooley said as to the differences between the English colonial system and our own system under the power granted by the Constitution to govern dependent territory. Judge Cooley says, speaking of these differences:

The Constitution * * * confers power to govern Territories, but in exercising this the United States is a sovereign dealing with dependent territory. * * * In this dependence of the Territories upon the Central Government there is some outward resemblance to the condition of the American colonies under the British Crown; but there are some differences which are important and, indeed, vital. The first of these is that the Territorial condition is understood under the Constitution to be merely temporary and preparatory, and the people of the Territories while it continues are assured of the right to create and establish State institutions for themselves as soon as the population shall be sufficient and the local conditions suitable, while the British colonial system contained no promise or assurance of any but a dependent government indefinitely.

Thus, according to this great jurist, our permanent retention of the Philippine Islands would mean our adoption of the British colonial system. And yet we are a Republic, and one of the cardinal tenets of our political faith is that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.

The British colonial system contained no promise or assurance of any but a dependent government indefinitely—

Whereas—

Under the Constitution we hold out to the people of the Territories that when the population shall be sufficient and other conditions suitable they shall be allowed to establish State governments.

The Filipino people differ from us in many ways. They are possessed of domestic and personal virtues. They have intellect and conscience. They have made rapid progress in recent years. But they differ from us ethnologically. They are another race, 7,000 miles away, and is it to be said that they must forever remain subject to us? Will Congress ever admit them to statehood?

That is the question for us to answer before we vote down this preamble.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman please inform the House in what year Judge Cooley rendered that decision or made such remarks? Did he refer to the Territories in the United States proper or did he have the Philippines in mind?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Judge Cooley says that in his work on the Constitution.

Mr. ANTHONY. Was not that before the acquisition of the Philippines?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That has nothing to do with the principle he sets forth.

Mr. ANTHONY. It has. He refers to territory within the United States proper, not to the territory of the Philippine Islands. He speaks of the establishment of State governments.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, the gentleman is entirely mistaken. This is a principle of universal application in so far as our government of Territories is concerned. For example, after the War of 1848 with Mexico the treaty of Guadalcupe-Hidalgo contained a provision that at some time the territory acquired by the United States should be allowed statehood. We kept those people of Mexico and Arizona out of statehood until only a few years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes in which to answer the gentleman from Kansas.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] has a mistaken idea as to the application of constitutional principles. Judge Cooley was laying down in this work the different way in which, under the Constitution, we must treat dependencies or Territories from the way in which the British Government treats them.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not yield. The British Government has no colonies in England. All the British colonies are beyond the sea——

Mr. ANTHONY. I contend that this country had no Territories or dependencies at the time Judge Cooley wrote that book.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This is a question of great importance, for it vitally affects the future of 9,000,000 of people who are absolutely helpless in our power, and I regret that when one invokes here a principle of constitutional law laid down by so eminent an authority as the late Chief Justice Cooley, gentlemen should seek to silence him by shouting "Vote!" "Vote!"

Mr. Justice Cooley declared that the difference between our treatment of territory and England's treatment of colonies was this, that England holds out no promise of self-government, whereas we hold out the promise that when population is sufficient and conditions suitable, no matter where the Territory is, the inhabitants shall be granted statehood. Are the Filipinos ever to be granted statehood?

I shall vote for this preamble, because as an American I can not say that this Government is forever to hold in subjugation millions of Malays 7,000 miles from our shores.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is upon the motion offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] for the adoption of the preamble which has been reported.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. TOWNER) there were—ayes 199, noes 152.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with sundry amendments and a preamble, and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all the amendments thereto to the final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves the previous question on the bill, amendments, and preamble to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment to strike out section 34.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment to strike out sections 2 to 33, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a separate vote on the amendment striking out section 34. The gentleman from South Carolina demands a separate vote on the amendment striking out sections 2 to 33, both inclusive. The Clerk will first report the last-named amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the first-named amendment comes first.

Mr. GARRETT. The vote is to be taken on my demand first.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are amendments on which no separate vote has been demanded, are there not?

Mr. MANN. There are two amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are three amendments.

Mr. MANN. Only two amendments except the preamble, and the vote on that comes after the bill is passed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is one amendment to strike out the first section and insert the Jones bill. There is one amendment to strike out section 34, and one to strike out sections 2 to 33.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is correct. There are three amendments.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I demand a separate vote on the first amendment.

The SPEAKER. The vote will first be taken on the amendment striking out section 34.

Mr. FINLEY. I demand a separate vote on the second amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right, but we can not take two votes at once. The question is on the amendment to strike out section 34.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. TOWNER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 213, nays 165, answered "present" 4, not voting 51, as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CARLIN with Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. SCHALL (for amendment) with Mr. FLOOD (against).

Mr. NEELY with Mr. HELGESEN.

Mr. POU with Mr. CRAGO.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. BRITTEN.

Mr. PRICE with Mr. FREAR.

Mr. SPARKMAN with Mr. MORIN.

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. CANTRILL.

Mr. JAMES with Mr. KONOP (commencing April 26 until further notice by either).

On this vote:

Mr. LITTLEPAGE (against amendment) with Mr. OGLESBY (for).

Mr. GUERNSEY (for amendment) with Mr. WATKINS (against).

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts (for amendment striking out section 34) with Mr. TALBOTT (against).

Mr. COPLEY (for amendment) with Mr. GARD (against).

Mr. GRIEST (for amendment) with Mr. ADAIR (against).

Mr. WILLIAMS of Ohio (for amendment) with Mr. SMALL (against).

Mr. SWITZER (for amendment to strike out section 34) with Mr. LIEB (against).

Mr. MCKINLEY (for amendment to strike out section 34) with Mr. CLARK of Florida (against).

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island (for amendment) with Mr. SAUNDERS (against).

Mr. LINDBERGH (for amendment) with Mr. RAKER (against).

Mr. PORTER (for amendment) with Mr. HENRY (against).

Mr. NORTON (for amendment) with Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois (against).

Mr. EDMONDS (for amendment) with Mr. BURNETT (against).

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. SAUNDERS. I voted "aye." I wish to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The name of Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island was called, and he answered "Present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The vote will now be taken on the amendment striking out section 1 and substituting the Jones bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FINLEY. At what point does that amendment begin?

The SPEAKER. It strikes out section 1. This is not the amendment the gentleman desired a separate vote upon. That will come after the vote on this amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out section 1 and substituting therefor the Jones bill.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The vote is now on the question of striking out sections 2 to 33, both inclusive.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FINLEY) there were—ayes 251, noes 17.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, this involves the Senate provision giving prohibition to the Philippines, and I think we ought to have a roll call on the House amendment striking out the Senate provision, and I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Seventeen Members, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to instruct the conferees, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD offers the following:

"That the managers on the part of the House are instructed not to agree to any declaration or provision setting a definite time, or fixing a definite period, at or within which the Philippines shall be granted independence."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT) there were—ayes 191, noes 149.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order now to move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It is always in order to move to adjourn.

Mr. SABATH. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 209, answered "present" 1, not voting 66, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the previous question, on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT. The yeas and nays were ordered on that.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Journal shows that the yeas and nays were ordered. The Clerk will call the roll on the motion for the previous question.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 208, nays 150, answered "present" 3, not voting 72, as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 2, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee that in the midst of the pressing cares of this earthly life Thou hast kept alive within us an interest, an ever-growing interest, in the things that are spiritual and eternal. We find ourselves straitened by the limitation of our earthly reason and in the midst of problems unsolved and mysteries upon every hand. We bless Thee that from above there comes to us the clear light of divine truth and the path shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Still guard within us the spark of life divine, and lead us on, O God, until we shall see Thy face; and coming before Thee may it be with the consciousness of work well done in the world and an influence left here for the betterment of mankind. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMUNICATION FROM REAR ADMIRAL FISKE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Upon yesterday there came to the office of the Chair a communication signed by Bradley A. Fiske, rear admiral of the United States Navy, addressed to the President of the Senate. While considering whether it should be handed down this morning the Chair was called by a representative of a press association and requested to know whether he could examine the communication.

The Chair does not know how far the right of petition exists in the United States of America, whether officers of the Navy have a right to enter into controversy with the Secretary of the Navy and send their statements to the presiding officer of the Senate, and thus make it his duty to hand them down or not.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair therefore refers the communication to the Committee on Naval Affairs to determine on that question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was just going to make that motion.

Mr. LODGE. Before the matter passes, as I was not in when the Chair was first stating it, may I ask what is the character of the communication.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The character is the controversy between the Secretary of the Navy and Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske that everyone knows about. The Chair is uncertain whether it is the duty of the Chair to hand down a communication coming from anyone connected with the Army or the Navy touching such controversies.

Mr. LODGE. It is in reply to the statement made by the Secretary of the Navy about Admiral Fiske in the report he sent in the other day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes. The Chair is uncertain whether it is the duty of the Chair to hand it down.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that, being an officer of the Navy, he has a right to be heard when a statement of that character is made about him in an official report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know anything about the rules of the Navy or the rules of the Army. The Chair does not know whether it is the right of an officer to call attention to such matters in this way or not.

Mr. TILLMAN. It certainly can do no harm to let the Naval Committee examine it before action is taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair refers it there; and if any member of the Committee on Naval Affairs thinks it is proper, he may submit it to the Senate, and the Chair will receive it.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8067) to quiet title to certain lands in the possession of G. B. Dickson, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6057) to amend section 14 of the reclamation extension act approved August 13, 1914, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. KINKAID managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of the congregation of the Lutheran Church of Floresville, Tex., praying for the placing of an embargo on the exportation of arms and that the United States remain at peace, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Bedford Forest Camp, United Confederate Veterans, of Portales, N. Mex., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to Confederate veterans of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey presented a petition of the River & Harbor Transportation Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the Hackensack River, N. J., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I present a resolution adopted by the Board of Aldermen of the city of New York. I do not ask that it be read, but I ask that it be printed in the RECORD. It is short.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

Whereas a crisis in the relations of the United States and foreign nations was disclosed by the recent address of the President of the United States before the joint session of Congress; and

Whereas the condition of relations of the Nation with foreign Governments may any moment make action necessary on the part of this city in upholding the Nation's honor: It is

Resolved, That the board of aldermen pledges to the mayor its unqualified support in any action by him, in aid of the President and Congress, that may be necessary to maintain that honor; and that this board will support the mayor in any exercise of authority for that purpose to the full extent of its powers; and further

Resolved, That the representatives of this city in the House of Congress are earnestly requested to redouble their efforts to the end of securing legislation that will immediately provide for the country the greatest practicable degree of military preparedness; and further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to each of the Senators and Congressmen representing this State in Congress, the governor of the State, and the mayor of this city.

Adopted by the board of aldermen April 25, 1916, a majority of all the members elected voting in favor thereof.

[SEAL.] R. J. SULLY, Clerk.

Mr. JONES presented a petition of sundry citizens of Seattle, Wash., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NEWLANDS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Reno and Las Vegas, in the State of Nevada, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TAGGART presented memorials of sundry citizens of Elwood, Ind., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Elwood, Ind., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Lodi, Cal., praying for an appropriation of $300,000 for the improvement of the Yosemite National Park and also for the establishment of a national-park service, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Southern California Branch of the Association of Collegiate Alumnæ, of San Bernardino, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of J. H. Eastman and sundry other citizens of Santa Cruz, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of General Charles King Camp, No. 35, United Spanish War Veterans, of Napa, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to widows and orphans of veterans of the Spanish-American War, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ASHURST. I present resolutions adopted by the Central Labor Union of Miami, Ariz., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MIAMI CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
Miami, Ariz., April 17, 1916.

Hon. H. F. ASHURST,
Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the last meeting of the Miami Central Labor Union the following resolution was read and received and then referred to the executive committee, with power to act:

"Whereas there is a bill before Congress (H. R. 456) for the creation of a Federal motion-picture commission, who shall preexamine and censor all moving pictures; and

"Whereas no five persons are great enough or divine enough to decide what pictures 100,000,000 people should see or should not see, and would naturally be influenced in their decisions by their own petty views on public questions and morals; and

"Whereas it is un-American and contrary to the fundamental principles of our Government, guaranteeing freedom of expression; and

"Whereas other forms of expression, such as the press, literature, the drama, and all works of art are immune from censorship: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the Miami Central Labor Union, are unalterably opposed to censorship of any sort, and especially motion-picture censorship; and be it

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Hons. CARL HADEN, ASHURST, and SMITH, and we urge that all individuals send letters of protest to these gentlemen."

The above resolution was unanimously adopted by the executive committee of the Miami Central Labor Union.

FRANK PERKO,
F. S. WILLIAMS,
FRED REAVES,
J. L. DONNELLY,
J. W. WARD,
Executive Committee.

E. C. HORNOR.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8068) for the relief of E. C. Hornor, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 409) thereon.

SAN JUAN RIVER BRIDGE, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5424) to construct a bridge in San Juan County, State of New Mexico, and I submit a report (No. 408) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a steel bridge over the San Juan River in San Juan County, State of New Mexico, at the best and most available location west or southwest and near to the town of Farmington, in the said county, said bridge being absolutely necessary to enable a large portion of the Navajo Tribe of Indians to market their products of sheep, cattle, wool, manufactured blankets, jewelry, and other commodities belonging to them, so as to avoid great loss and inconvenience to them in their efforts to market such products to the north of the San Juan River. For said purpose there is hereby appropriated the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expense and cost of constructing said bridge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 5823) granting a pension to Philip F. Wells; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 5824) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to readjudicate the case of Albert H. Gillespie against The United States, No. 30777 on the docket of said court; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia (by request):

A bill (S. 5825) to amend section 553 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 5826) granting an increase of pension to Thomas S. Millikin (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 5827) granting a pension to Eugene M. Symonds (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5828) granting an increase of pension to Garrett F. Cowan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAGGART:

A bill (S. 5829) granting an increase of pension to Eri O. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PAGE:

A bill (S. 5830) granting an increase of pension to Convis Parker (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 5831) authorizing the Director of the Census to investigate and report on mortality and disability in wage-earning occupations; to the Committee on the Census.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted an amendment authorizing the Postmaster General to grant to any employee not to exceed two weeks' sick leave in any one year with pay, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 10484), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. SMITH of Michigan) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 12193), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

LAND ENTRIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6057) to amend section 14 of the reclamation extension act approved August 13, 1914, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. LANE, and Mr. JONES conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask the Senate to consider the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon House bill 12207, the legislislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 12207) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any desire to have the report read? It has been printed.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I do not want to take the time of the Senate by reading the whole report, and I do not think it is necessary, unless some other Senator desires to have it read. I do want to refer to amendment No. 167 in the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as that amendment is coming up now, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	Newlands	Sterling
Bankhead	Hollis	Norris	Stone
Beckham	James	Oliver	Sutherland
Brady	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Swanson
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Taggart
Broussard	Jones	Poindexter	Thomas
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Pomerene	Tillman
Clapp	Kern	Ransdell	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Robinson	Vardaman
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Culberson	Lippitt	Shafroth	Walsh
Cummins	Lodge	Sheppard	Warren
Curtis	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Williams
du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	Works
Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Gronna	Nelson	Smoot

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on public business.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on official business. I wish also to announce that the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is absent on account of illness. These announcements may stand for the day.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the pending bill, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the House agreed to the following provision:

Appointments shall not be made to any of the positions herein appropriated for in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions not actually filled June 30, 1916, nor shall more than 25 per cent of other vacancies actually occurring in any grade in the classified service of that bureau, during the fiscal year 1917, be filled by original appointment or promotion. The salaries or compensation of all places which may not be filled as hereinabove provided for shall not be available for expenditure but shall lapse and shall be covered into the Treasury.

The Senate disagreed to that provision of the bill and it was stricken out. The conferees on the part of the Senate yielded to the House conferees, and if this report is agreed to that provision will become law.

Mr. President, it simply means that no old soldier employed to-day in the Pension Bureau can receive a promotion. He is held in the class in which he is working to-day. The law as it exists to-day, Mr. President, prevents the filling of more than 25 per cent of vacancies in that bureau. We are not undertaking in this provision to repeal the law, and I do not want the Senate to understand that I am asking that the law be repealed as to the filling of vacancies in the Pension Bureau, for the work in that bureau, as all Senators know, is growing less each year; but the provision under discussion is an unjust one. It is disapproved by the Commissioner of Pensions, and I want to call attention to the commissioner's letter giving the reasons why he objects to the provision and also giving his reasons why it will be detrimental to the service of the bureau. In a letter to the members of the Appropriations Committee the Commissioner of Pensions, on March 17, 1916, makes this statement:

The subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations caused to be inserted in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for 1917, the following clause—

I will not take the time of the Senate to read the clause, but it is exactly the same as I read in the beginning of my remarks—

Before that it was provided in the law that not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies occurring in the Pension Bureau might be filled. This was regarded as objectionable, but now the new provision is still more objectionable for the following reasons:

1. This is the only bureau in the public service to which such a provision is made applicable. It seems like an invidious distinction.

2. Its operation will seriously hamper the work of the bureau. One grade may be very full. In another grade there may be vacancies which should be filled to carry on particular work in the bureau; but this provision would prevent the necessary change.

Mr. President, if the deaths that occurred were equal in all of the division or grades, then the provision would not be so objectionable as it is; but in one grade there may be 10 or 20 deaths while in another grade there may be only one death. The provision of the House, if it becomes law, will provide that in a grade where there is only one man, should a vacancy happen, it can not be filled, nor can a promotion be made from a lower grade to fill the vacancy in a higher one, no matter if there is a person in the lower grade capable of filling the position. If this provision stands we would be passing a law here to prohibit him from being promoted:

There are 13 offices in the bureau, each filled by a single incumbent. In the debate in the Committee of the Whole in the House of Representatives it was stated by members of the House subcommittee that if there was a vacancy in any one of these places the provision of this law would not allow it to be filled. Among these places are the chief clerk, assistant chief clerk, disbursing clerk, deputy disbursing clerk, medical referee, assistant medical referee, law clerk, chief of the board of review, superintendent of building, engineer, cabinetmaker, painter, and captain of the watch. It will readily be seen how difficult it would be to carry on orderly the work of the bureau if such vacancies occur and there be no power to fill them.

Yet if this provision becomes law, the Commissioner of Pensions will be powerless to fill those vacancies.

There are eight chiefs of division, each of whom is at the head of a force of employees numbering variously from 39 up to 196. It is said the same rule applies to them, and if there is a vacancy in the office of a chief of division it can not be filled at all. Long experience has proven that the arrangement for divisions and the services of these chiefs are very valuable, if not indispensable.

5. This provision is a great injustice to employees; it prevents a recognition of merit; it gives the employee notice that he must stay at the dead level of the salary he may now be receiving without hope of preferment.

6. One argument for its adoption was that the bureau was getting topheavy, failing to take notice that reductions in the bureau in 1915 and 1916 were already as follows—

I ask the Senate to notice the reductions that have been made for 1915 and for 1916. Then I am going to call attention to the number that is already agreed to for the year 1917.

In the fiscal year 1915 the reductions consisted of "10 principal examiners, at $2,000; 10 clerks of class 4, at $1,800; 15 clerks of class 3, at $1,600; 25 clerks of class 2, at $1,400; 40 special examiners, at $1,300; 35 clerks of class 1, at $1,200; 6 clerks, at $1,000; 4 copyists, at $900," or a total reduction in the force of 145. For the fiscal year of 1916 we find these reductions: "Seven principal examiners, at $2,000; 3 medical examiners, at $1,800; 4 assistant chiefs, at $1,800; 9 clerks of class 4, at $1,800; 10 clerks of class 3, at $1,600; 20 clerks of class 2, at $1,400; 5 special examiners, at $1,300; 25 clerks of class 1, at $1,200; 9 clerks, at $1,000; 1 copyist, at $900," or a total reduction for that fiscal year of 93.

For 1917 under the bill we have passed at this session—and now considering the conference report, to which I have no objection, with the single exception of this one item—the reductions are as follows: "One medical examiner, at $1,800; 1 principal examiner, $2,000; 1 assistant chief, at $1,800; 1 clerk, class 4, at $1,800; 1 clerk, class 3, at $1,600; 1 clerk, class 2, at $1,400; 1 clerk, class 1, at $1,200; 10 clerks, at $1,000; 20 copyists, at $900; 1 messenger, $840; 5 assistants messengers, at $720; 8 messenger boys, at $400; 1 watchman, at $720; and 15 skilled laborers, at $660," or a total of 67 reductions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Those are the reductions for 1917?

Mr. SMOOT. Those I last read are the reductions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

Mr. NORRIS. Are those reductions brought about by the objectionable provision?

Mr. SMOOT. No; those reductions are not so brought about. They are brought about by the decreasing work in the department from year to year.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the Senator from Utah has no objection to those reductions?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to those reductions, but I am calling attention to the reductions to show that while the work is growing less so is the number of employees. If the House provision is retained there can be no promotions from one grade to another.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the objectionable provisions will prevent the filling of those positions by the promotion of men who are now in the service.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. And if the objectionable provision were obliterated, then the vacancies would be filled by promotion?

Mr. SMOOT. They would be filled by promotion, or otherwise. The Commissioner of Pensions is not compelled to fill them by promotion; but there is no law against it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, was it not contended on the part of the House that the trouble about the proportions now is that too many employees are in the $1,800 class, thus making a top-heavy organization instead of promoting from the lower grades into the third class or the fourth class? Under existing provisions of law no original appointments or promotions can be made except to the extent of 25 per cent of the vacancies, so that, for example, if four employees die, only one of the vacancies thereby created can be filled. The one vacancy can be filled by the promotion of an employee already in the bureau; but instead of jumping an employee of a lower grade through several grades, process should be gradual by promotion to the third class, the fourth class, and so forth. As it is, owing to the manner in which they have been making promotions, the bureau is top-heavy, with too many employees drawing large salaries.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that has been the claim; but let me call attention to the reductions that are made for this fiscal year and see how unjust the claim is. Of the 67 reductions in the bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, were the following: Fifteen skilled laborers, at $660; 1 watchman, $720; 8 messenger boys, at $400; 5 assistant messenger boys, at $720; 1 messenger, at $840; 20 copyists, at $900; 10 clerks. at $1,000. That totals 60 employees, and there are only 7 positions that have been abolished carrying salaries above $1,200. There will be no way of filling these high-salaried positions, not even by the promotion of employees already in the service.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. To illustrate, take one of the positions—and I am only trying to get at the facts—mentioned by the commissioner in the letter which the Senator has read, the chief clerk, and let us see what would be the result. Suppose he should die; it would be impossible, if that provision were in the law, as I understand the Senator, to fill his place.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be impossible for the commissioner, if this provision is retained in the bill, to fill his place.

Mr. NORRIS. Who would perform the duties of the chief clerk's office in that case?

Mr. SMOOT. Under present conditions a man could be promoted from another grade to the grade of chief clerk, but if this provision becomes a law that can not be done.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. The law as it stands to-day provides that there shall be no appointments to exceed 25 per cent of the vacancies that may occur.

Mr. NORRIS. I am trying to get at just what would happen. In the letter which the Senator has read the commissioner says that there are 13 positions in the Pension Bureau held by single incumbents, and I think he mentioned the chief clerk as one of them. I take that merely as an illustration.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that his illustration conforms exactly to the conditions as they would exist if this provision should become law.

Mr. NORRIS. I am trying to find out what the bureau would do under the circumstances if an employee who holds one of those 13 positions should die and the commissioner had no power to appoint anybody and no power to promote anybody to fill the place. What would actually happen, as a matter of fact?

Mr. SMOOT. I will read what the commissioner says in relation, not only to the office of chief clerk but to the other offices in that bureau that would be affected by this provision, and which it would be impossible to fill. The commissioner says:

> There are 13 offices in the bureau, each filled by a single incumbent. In the debate in the Committee of the Whole in the House of Representatives it was said by members of the House subcommittee that if there was a vacancy in any one of these places, the provision of this law would not allow it to be filled. Among these places are the chief clerk, assistant chief clerk, disbursing clerk, deputy disbursing clerk, medical referee, assistant medical referee, law clerk, chief of the board of review, superintendent of building, engineer, cabinet maker, painter, and captain of the watch. It will readily be seen—> how difficult it would be to carry on orderly the work of the bureau if such vacancies occur and there is no power to fill them.

Says the commissioner—

If Senators will take this provision of the House bill and examine it, they will see that it will be impossible for the Commissioner of Pensions to fill these positions.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. JONES. In that connection and in line with what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has asked, if those places can not be filled, who will discharge the duties heretofore performed by the officers who filled those positions?

Mr. SMOOT. I presume the commissioner would have to take some man temporarily from some other place in the bureau and ask him to act in that capacity until Congress could pass additional legislation.

Mr. JONES. At the salary he is now receiving in his other position?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; because the only thing the commissioner could do would be to detail another clerk to perform that service.

Mr. JONES. Then, how would the commissioner fill the place made vacant by the detail?

Mr. SMOOT. As the commissioner himself says, it will be utterly impossible to have any order in the bureau if this provision becomes a law.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not exactly understand the situation which the Senator is trying to describe. I understand he has read a list of places which are going to be abolished because they are not needed.

Mr. SMOOT. Not needed; and no appropriation is made for them.

Mr. LIPPITT. It is an attempt to abolish those offices?

Mr. SMOOT. The ones I have read have been abolished.

Mr. LIPPITT. If they are abolished, why does the Senator want to appoint anybody to fill them?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not speaking of appointments to positions which have been abolished. I am speaking of positions which are provided for in the bill, and which, in case of the death of the incumbent, under the provisions of the House bill, the Commissioner of Pensions will have no power to fill. I will say to the Senator that under the law as it exists to-day only 25 per cent of the vacancies caused by death can be filled; but where there is only one place——

Mr. LIPPITT. I understood the Senator to say that the lists which he has read were lists of positions which it has been agreed should be abolished permanently.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. LIPPITT. Then the Senator talks about men being appointed to positions that are to be abolished.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. LIPPITT. Probably I did; I am trying to ascertain just what the Senator means.

Mr. SMOOT. The provision of the House bill, if it becomes a law, will prevent the Commissioner of Pensions from promoting anyone in the bureau from one grade to a higher one.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. There is only one chief clerk in the bureau, and if he should die and this provision should become a law the commissioner could not appoint a chief clerk; nobody could be promoted to that place.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. I called attention to the number of reductions in the employees of the bureau to show that Congress was only providing for the number of employees necessary to conduct the business of that bureau.

Mr. LIPPITT. Then the Senator does not mean that he wants to promote men to the positions which Congress has decided to abolish?

Mr. SMOOT. Not in the least. Mr. President, the commissioner proceeds to say:

If we could have restored 1 messenger at $840, 5 assistant messengers at $720 each, 1 watchman at $720, and 15 skilled laborers at $660 each, we could arrange to get along with the other reductions proposed.

That has nothing whatever to do with the question which I am discussing. Those are merely certain reductions which the commissioner has asked the Congress not to make.

8. Under the provision that—

This is the law—

appointments shall not be made to any of the positions herein appropriated for in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions not actually filled June 30, 1916.

We will be unable to fill any vacancies occurring in either of these places during the fiscal year because of the provision already in the law preventing us filling more than 25 per cent of the vacancies. Therefore the effect of this strange provision is—because we can not fill vacancies July 1—that we will be compelled to do with a less number than that for which appropriation is made. There is now a pressing and great necessity for stenographers, assistant messengers, and skilled laborers, but, because of this 25 per cent law, we can not procure any.

Mr. President, I was in hopes that the conference report would be so framed that there would be no objection to it. The Senate has yielded, I think, beyond reason. I was perfectly willing to go just as far as it was possible to go; but I ask the Senate not to accept this report, not to accept the action of the Senate conferees in yielding upon this one item, for it is vital to the bureau, and I do not believe that the old soldiers who are working in the Pension Bureau ought to be discriminated against.

I know that there are many old soldiers who perhaps can not do a full day's work. I know that if none but young, active men were employed the work of the bureau could be done with a less number, but I do not believe the American people want the old soldier, in his last days, to be driven out of the employment of the Government, even if it does cost a few extra dollars to retain him in his present position.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator say this will drive any old soldier out of employment?

Mr. SMOOT. No; not altogether out of employment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, in any way—not altogether. Will it drive him out of any employment?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it will not. I was speaking upon the broad proposition that notwithstanding some of the old soldiers can not do a full day's work the people of the United States are not going to object to retaining them on the pay roll of the Government as long as they live and can do any work at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. They will be on it, under this provision.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not deny that. They will be on the roll in the class that they are now working in. But, Mr. President, there are some of the old soldiers who to-day are working as, say, a clerk of class 1, at $1,200 a year, who are doing just as good service as any men in the Government service. They are mentally alert; they are physically active; and I can not see why we should pass a law to discriminate against them, and say that because they are old soldiers, because they are working in the Pension Bureau, they shall forever be barred from a promotion. That is what this amendment says. That is what it means. That would be the result of it if we agree to this conference report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Utah if that is not substantially the situation around this Capitol? Is not every old soldier reduced in pay and receiving less compensation than others at the doors of the Capitol?

Mr. SMOOT. Until the passage of this bill that was true, Mr. President, but this bill takes care of two of the old soldiers and increases their salary from $840 to $1,440.

Mr. GALLINGER. And what does it pay the rest of them?

Mr. SMOOT. The rest of them, of course, are drawing lower salaries; but that is a different position than this. They are on what is known as the patronage list, and perhaps there might have been some excuse for it, although I do not believe there was. I do not believe, Mr. President, that the little money that was saved by the reduction in the salaries of the old soldiers serving the Senate as doorkeepers is ever going to be noticed by the people of the United States, nor do I believe that any criticism ever would have come to this administration if it had maintained them at the salaries they formerly received.

The one under consideration is an entirely different proposition. This is to prevent employees of the Pension Bureau from promotion, and is indeed an invidious distinction. It is denying the old soldier employees in the Pension Bureau the right of promotion, and he does not deserve it. Therefore I hope the Senate will instruct its conferees to take the report back, and convey the feeling of the Senate in relation to this question to the conferees of the House and see if the conferees of the House will not yield, as they did two years ago, and as I hope they will yield this year.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the members of the committee of conference of both the Senate and the House tried their best to agree on this bill, and we did agree on everything except this amendment. We are told by the House conferees that they will never yield on this amendment. The strongest advocate of it is a Republican Member of the House from Iowa, who has stated to us and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that he lives in a town where there is a soldiers' home, and nobody has more love and respect for the old soldier than he has, and I know that is so; and he told us the Senator from Utah could not answer it—that this does not deleteriously affect any old soldier who is at present employed. The Senator from Utah has finally agreed to this in this debate. His whole argument here is in behalf of the old soldier, when there is no harm going to be done to him.

The Senator talks about the American people not agreeing to have the old soldier discriminated against. I do not think the American people want an old man 75 or 80 years old, who is getting a good salary now, and receiving a pension besides, to be promoted into some office he can not fill.

Mr. SMOOT. He will not necessarily be promoted, anyway; but under this provision he can not be promoted.

Mr. OVERMAN. He can not be promoted. He has served his country well; he is getting a good salary; he is getting a pension; and instead of putting him on in a top-heavy place that he can not fill, it leaves him just where he is now, and does not injure him in the least.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think for a moment that the Commissioner of Pensions would put a man in such a position if it was impossible for him to fill it? Of course, he would not.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Members of the House of Representatives are overwhelmingly for this provision, and were for it two years ago, four years ago, and they are going to stand for it this time—Representatives from the North who love the old soldiers, who have stood by the old soldiers all the time, and I could name them here.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, for information, practically the same question I asked the Senator from Utah in regard to these positions the commissioner mentions.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am coming to that, Mr. President. Some years ago the Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Warner, reported to Congress that Congress ought to pass a law that no vacancies should be filled in the Pension Bureau. Why, everybody knows there is an army of men there. There are 1,187 employees in that bureau to-day, and since the passage of the Sherwood bill 200 men can do the work that is being done.

The truth of it is that many of these poor old soldiers have been there so long and are so old that they can not efficiently perform any work in the higher grades. They are getting good salaries now. Why do we want to promote them to higher places, where they can not serve the Government and can not do any work? It is impossible for them to do any work.

This is no strike whatever at the old soldier. It is in the interest of efficiency. It is in the interest of good service. Instead of saying that there shall be no vacancies filled at all, as the commissioner recommended some years ago, we simply provide here that only 25 per cent of the vacancies shall be filled. For example, if there are 12 vacancies, only 3 of them shall be filled; if there are 4 vacancies, only 1 shall be filled; and gradually we will have good service in the bureau. As it is we have a small army of men there doing practically nothing. They can not do anything. It is impossible for them to do anything. Why should we promote those men to higher grades when they are inefficient and all that some of them can do is to sit down and look out of the window?

The friends of the old soldiers are the men who advocated this amendment upon the floor of the House, and said that the old soldiers did not want these men promoted to higher salaries; and here the Senator from Utah appeals to prejudice instead of going into the facts of the matter and looking at this bureau as it stand to-day in the interest of efficiency.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the Senator does not misunderstand the situation. The Commissioner of Pensions never would promote an old soldier who can not do a thing but look out of the window. It is left entirely in the hands of the commissioner to make the promotions under the law to-day. The law to-day says that only one out of four vacancies caused by death shall be filled; but this provision says that no matter whether the old soldier is capable or not, no matter what his physical or mental condition may be, he shall not be promoted. I will ask the Senator if that is not so?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, of course it is. That is what I am saying—that they are getting good salaries. They are satisfied; they are getting pensions; and they have had these $1,200 and $1,400 positions all the time, and now, since they are growing old and can not do any work, I believe, as this Representative from Iowa, who represents a town that has a soldiers' home in it, says, that in his judgment the old soldiers of this country would not desire these men promoted into higher positions which they could not fill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will state that I think the Member of the House to whom the Senator refers has a soldiers' home in his district—not in his home.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, his home district.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I still would like to have the Senator take up the matter about which I asked.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am going to come to that. Now, take the chief clerk. A man can fill that place without being called a chief clerk. It is done in many of the departments to-day. An $1,800 man can take charge of the force under him and do the work of a chief clerk.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I should like to ask the Senator, assuming that the man who does the work of the chief clerk is competent to do it—and I think that would be a fair assumption; he would not appoint anybody to do the work unless he was competent——

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. At least he ought not to—assuming that to be so, why should he not draw the salary of a chief clerk, regardless of whether he is an old soldier or not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, we do not need any more chief clerks. We have more chief clerks up there now than we need.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand from the commissioner's letter that there is only one chief clerk.

Mr. OVERMAN. Perhaps that is so. It does not make any difference. I do not know how that is. I have not investigated that; but anyway, whether he is called a chief clerk or not, he can get somebody to fill that place who gets practically the same salary, or $1,800.

Mr. NORRIS. We do not do that with other departments.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, Mr. President, this department is not like any other department.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, a chief clerk's duty there would be similar to a chief clerk's duty in any other bureau; would it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, there are plenty of $1,800 men doing the work of a chief clerk, and that is all some of the chief clerks get—$1,800.

Mr. NORRIS. For the purpose of the discussion, I think it is immaterial what the salary of the chief clerk is.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree to that statement.

Mr. NORRIS. My question only was, assuming that a man is competent to do the work of a chief clerk, and that he does it, why should he not get the salary of a chief clerk?

Mr. OVERMAN. He does get practically the salary of a chief clerk. I do not know just what the chief clerk of the department gets, but a good many of them are $1,800 men. There are very few chief clerks getting more than $2,000. I believe some of them get twenty-five hundred in some of the departments. They generally ranged from eighteen hundred to two thousand dollars. But in class 4, in which the salaries are fixed at $1,800, there are, perhaps, 100 men in this bureau, and out of that 100 they can get some one, whether he is called chief clerk or not, to take up the work of the chief clerk and perform the duties of that position at about the same salary. There is very little difference in salary between the chief clerk and these clerks of class 4.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would tell me why, because there may be some soldiers who are too old and too feeble to be promoted, it is necessary to pass a law which would make it impossible to promote a soldier who was capable.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, Mr. President, the contention is that they are promoting everybody in the $1,800 class.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not understand that that is the arrangement. I understand that it is optional with the chief of the bureau whether a man is promoted or not; but the Senator says that the law should be so that none of these men can be promoted because possibly some of them are too feeble to take the higher duties. I can not see the logic of a situation which says that no man in this bureau, whether he is capable or not, shall be promoted because possibly there may be some men too old and feeble.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, they can promote them in the first, second, third, and fourth classes. There are four classes. One class gets $1,800, another class gets $1,600, another class gets $1,400, and another $1,200.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. KERN. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if he regards the Commissioner of Pensions and his deputy as efficient officers, understanding the needs of the bureau?

Mr. OVERMAN. I would not say they were not.

Mr. KERN. Now, I ask the Senator whether the Commissioner of Pensions and his deputy do not both insist that this provision will seriously interfere with the efficiency of the bureau?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, Mr. President, the letter has been read here by the Senator from Utah. Why should the Senator from Indiana ask me that question?

Mr. KERN. I was just wondering whether the opinion of an officer of capability ought not to be given some weight.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there are various opinions about this matter. I know we had one commissioner who wanted to largely reduce the force in the bureau. In fact, he did not want any vacancies at all filled. This amendment provides for filling one vacancy out of four.

I have said about all I desire to say. I will add, however, that the House of Representatives—a majority, Republicans and Democrats—stood for this amendment. Now they say they are so strong over there for this amendment that the House never will yield. The committee tried to get the House conferees to yield. We did all we could. We were in session day and night trying to get an agreement.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether he carried the same argument and the same spirit into the discussion with the conferees that he is giving the Senate?

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not, Mr. President. I am defending the House of Representatives, since we have yielded. I have to stand by my committee. I made no argument in favor of this amendment. I argued for striking out this amendment, because the Senate had instructed me to do it, and it is my duty as a conferee to stand by whatever the Senate does as long as possible. I, together with the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Virginia, stood by the Senate to the very last. The argument was left between the Senator from Utah on the one side and a Member of the House from Iowa on the other. Then, after the argument was held, and they notified us that the House was so strong for it that they never would yield on this, the Senate conferees, in order to have a bill get through, finally yielded, with the exception of the Senator from Utah. He was one of the conferees who did not yield, but the majority of them yielded to the House. I am surprised that the Senator from Indiana should ask me that question.

Mr. KERN. I said that as a joke.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope it was a joke, because I do not want it to appear in the RECORD that I went on a conference committee and did not do my duty and stand for what the Senate had done. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that that would be a reflection on me, and I would not be worthy to sit on the committee of conference unless I stood for the Senate's action. This I did. But when I come to defend the final action of the committee and give the position the House takes, to hear the Senator from Utah say that this is against the interest of the old soldiers, making it appear that they will be thrown out of employment, I resent the question asked by the Senator. I know the old soldiers will not suffer from our action, and the Senator from Utah now frankly admits that it is not so.

Mr. SMOOT. I never said it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The only thing the Senator from Utah can say is that these old soldiers can not be promoted like they could be when they were young men; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the Senator to qualify his statement that he is the only member of the House conferees who objected. The Republican member said he was going to stand by the House on this provision; that the provision was not going to hurt the old soldier; that is true; but I want to say that the other two members of the conference had a great deal more to say about this matter than the gentleman the Senator referred to. I think the Senator will agree with me on that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; they all argued with us for a long time. One of the leading men who made the fight on the floor of the House was, as I said——

Mr. GALLINGER. I say I do not know how long the Senate conferees stood out in favor of the amendment that the Senate put on the bill, but I think it is rather bad form to say here that the House conferees issued an ultimatum and that the Senate conferees had to yield to that ultimatum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not say that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Had I been a conferee I would have issued a counterultimatum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not say the House conferees issued an ultimatum. I said that they told us what the House in their judgment would do. That was no ultimatum. If so, that would have ended the conference, and the Senate would have resented it and would have never yielded.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that is not an ultimatum, I shall have to go to the dictionary to be correct in my impression as to the meaning of the word "ultimatum."

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire has been on many conferences and he has always stood for what he thought was right. I have been with him and I know how persistent he is, but he knows how these things are done as well as I do, that we are often persistent and tell the conferees that in the judgment of the Senate conferees the Senate will never yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do. Mr. President, I am going to say only a word. I think the vote ought to be taken without much debate.

I want to say a word for the Commissioner of Pensions. I was chairman of the Committee on Pensions of the Senate for a long time, and I had very much to do with the Commissioner of Pensions, and we have had commissioners and commissioners. The knowledge I have of the present commissioner, and he is a Democrat, leads me to the opinion that we have never had a more competent, honorable, and upright man. He is a man who desires to administer his office in an efficient manner, and to give full justice to every employee under him and to the Government as well.

So I was greatly influenced by the letter that the commissioner wrote when we had this bill under consideration, and it seemed to me that what he asked in this matter ought to be granted ungrudgingly. For that reason I shall vote to disagree to the report of the conference committee, hoping that it may go back and that this matter may be adjusted as the Commissioner of Pensions desires it to be.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think I ought to say a word in answer to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. He asked me if I did not consider the Commissioner of Pensions and his deputy good and efficient officers. I have had but little business with this bureau. I seldom go there. I have no reflection whatever to make on these officers. As far as I know they are as able and competent officers as there are in the employ of the Government.

But in dealing not only with the Pension Bureau but every department, if we gave them everything they asked this bill, instead of carrying $38,000,000, would carry about $40,000,000. So we have to examine their estimates thoroughly and make up our own minds as to what should be done. We have to obtain all the information we can upon these matters. It would be preposterous for us to agree every time to what some head of a department or some head of a bureau might want.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I regret that I feel constrained to consume a little of the time of the Senate about this conference report.

In the first place, Mr. President, both Houses have to agree before legislation can be enacted. Neither House can arbitrarily set itself up as a final arbiter on the provisions that enter into an appropriation bill. There comes a time always in the differences between the two Houses when one House or the other must yield. Neither House can justify itself by putting its foot down in an arbitrary and dictatorial manner and declaring that it will not yield. All that the conferees of the Senate can do is to meet the conferees on the part of the House in a free, open, and fair discussion of the differences between the two Houses with a view to reaching an agreement if possible.

I have never yet, Mr. President, said to the conferees of the House arbitrarily that they would have to come to the position of the Senate or there would be no bill. There are circumstances under which I might take that position, and when I do I shall mean what I say. I never bluff about these matters.

I endeavored to meet the conferees of the House in a fair, free, and open conference, and the Senate conferees did that in respect to this difference. This is a large bill. It carries nearly $40,000,000. There were a great many Senate amendments. This is the only one in the whole bill so far as I know that has originated any serious conflict. This amendment originated serious conflict from the very first.

The conferees on the part of the Senate wanted to sustain the amendment of the Senate. The law is not left like I want it. I would like to have had it otherwise. I would like to have it otherwise now. But what does the Senate expect of me? Do they expect me to remain forever wrangling until the human tongue is paralyzed? I made as earnest and as persistent an effort to maintain the position of the Senate as I was capable of, and if I had thought the conferees on the part of the House would yield by further persistence I would have persisted further. But they told me they would not yield and that they did not believe the House would yield, and I concluded that under all the circumstances it was in the interest of the country, in the interest of legislation, and in the interest of proper relations between the two Houses that we should yield on this amendment, and we did so.

It is subject, of course, to the control of the Senate. If the Senate wants to send it back to the conference, it is its privilege to do so. I do not believe it would result differently from what it has resulted this time. The House conferees said that they would not yield and they did not believe the House would yield, and I believe they were frank and sincere in what they said.

So much, Mr. President, for the course we felt compelled to pursue. Now, let us see what we did yield. Let us see what we have done, and when we consider that you will find that there is very little foundation for all the excitement into which the Senator from Utah has worked himself. He seemed to get very much excited, and he went clear abroad from the facts in this case repeatedly. I did not like to interrupt him to make the correction, but I might have done it many times and verified the corrections by the record. Among other things, he said that the House had yielded twice on an amendment of this sort. That must have been before I came to the Senate. It has not been done since I have been chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. No such amendment has been in conference since I have been chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. But I will not follow the Senator's inaccuracies.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. This has been discussed in the Senate more than once.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I did not say anything about discussion in the Senate. I said an amendment of this purport has not been in conference between the two Houses since I have been chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. That is what I said. The Senator said it had been before a conference two or three times and the House had yielded. He is mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it was so well understood that I did not bring in the record.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. You can not find any record that contains any such thing.

Now, let us see what we have done. Time and again the Senator talked about depriving the old soldiers of what they were getting.

Mr. SMOOT. Of promotions.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is not a single old soldier who is deprived of a dollar. It is a fact known of all men that the Pension Office is overcrowded with clerks. Five hundred men could be gotten rid of there and the public service would be benefited instead of being impaired. Nobody questions that.

The Chief of the Efficiency Bureau went there on one occasion, and I get this from his own lips: He took one room in which 25 men were employed, and he said to the Commissioner of Pensions, "This is a great mistake; 5 men can do this work better than 25. There is nothing here for them to do; they are in each other's way." He said to the commissioner, "Put 20 of them in a room and give them some magazines to read and let me take 5 clerks and if they will not do the work better than it is being done now I will not have another word to say." The experiment was tried and it was successful; the 5 men did the work better than the 25 had been doing it. He told me that 500 men could be dispensed with there and the efficiency of the work would be increased.

Notwithstanding those facts, we have not cut off a single one. The Senator read a long list of decreases in the last fiscal year. They were from death or resignation. There was not a single man in the service of the Pension Department deprived of his position. They either died or resigned. The vacancies were made by the incumbents, and in cases of resignation they were made voluntarily.

Under this bill we do not deprive a single man of his employment. We do not reduce the salary of a single man, although it is admitted a great many of them are superannuated and useless, and that 500 men could be dispensed with and the service be made more efficient. But out of deference to the sentiment in favor of the old soldiers and anxious to treat them with the utmost fairness and even with the utmost generosity and liberality, we have not taken a single dollar from them, and they get an average of about $1,400 a year. Every one of them is drawing a pension, and, more than that, they are getting between $1,300 and $1,400 on an average. I had a calculation made—taking the few low-grade salaries and adding them all together the average is over $1,300 that they are getting there. Are we treating the old soldier badly when, although unable to do the work, we maintain him in a place at a salary of between $1,300 and $1,400 and give him a pension in addition? That is what this bill does.

But the Senator says he can not get promotion. Commissioner Warner, in 1907, said, and I have it here, that he did not want to fill a single vacancy. We have allowed 25 per cent of the vacancies to be filled. He said they had so many more than they needed that he wanted a provision written into the law that would forbid filling a single vacancy. It would not deprive a single one of his position; it would not take from him a single dollar that he was receiving; but he said "we do not need them, and when they die or resign I do not want to fill a single vacancy, and I do not intend to do it." He said, "I would like to have it written in the law that I should not do it."

Now, we allow 25 per cent of the vacancies to be filled by promotions. But the Senator says that in some grades there is only one. There is an assistant clerk. If there should be a vacancy between now and the next appropriation—and this is being made for one year, this law provides only for the year 1917, it specifies that on its face—if there should be a casualty, a vacancy in such a place, the assistant clerk is there. But in addition to that the Commissioner of Pensions can assign to that work. I think the assistant clerk gets $2,000. The commissioner has a dozen or two men at a salary of $2,000. He can assign him to that service at the very compensation that the present assistant clerk is getting.

There is no difficulty about running this office. Commissioner Warner said he could run it without having a right to appoint or promote to fill a single vacancy. Surely, then, when the present commissioner has a right to promote to fill 25 per cent of the vacancies he ought to be able to get along.

Anybody would think from the speech of the Senator from Utah that there was a crusade here against the old soldier. In the name of God, what does the old soldier want? I have not heard a complaint from one of them. We have treated them generously, and we want to treat them generously. We have not deprived a single one of them of his salary, although half of them are not needed. Here is a force 50 per cent bigger than is needed, and we are paying salaries at an average of between $1,300 and $1,400 a year, and a pension besides, and 25 per cent of the vacancies can be filled by promotion. There is not the slightest difficulty about running the business under the provisions of the bill.

It is true that I would have preferred that the proposed law should be left like the Senate fixed it, and I made the best effort in my power to have it stay like the Senate fixed it. I could not maintain it like the Senate fixed it, and I do not know how the Senate expects me to maintain it. It is not a matter of such momentous consequence that I would feel justified in saying to the House, "We are going to defeat this bill carrying $40,000,000, unless you agree to this amendment as the Senate fixed it." We made an earnest and honest and persistent effort to maintain the position of the Senate, which I much prefer. I preferred it more to avoid such a controversy as has come than from any idea that injustice was being done to these old soldiers. I do not believe any injustice is being done to them. But the time came when we had to yield. The House conferees would not yield, and I do not believe they will yield if you send it back to them. But the Senate must take that responsibility. I would be very glad to have the amendment retained if there was any way to do it. If the Senate wants to defeat this bill, unless the House recedes, I should like to have them say so, because I have done the best I could. If you want me to defeat this bill, I should like to have your order to defeat the bill, and let the amount of nearly $40,000,000 be unappropriated, unless the House yields on this one little amendment. I believe the adoption of the conference report is wise legislative policy. It does nobody any injustice if the conference is adopted, and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. Were I permitted to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I inquire whether the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. THOMAS. Having a pair with that Senator, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]. Being unable to secure a transfer of that pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but understanding that if he were present he would vote as I am about to vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am requested to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "yea."

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], with whom I am paired, has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. BECKHAM. Then I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then I transfer the pair I have with that Senator to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Ashurst	Hollis	Ransdell	Swanson

So the conference report was agreed to.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7617, commonly known as the good-roads bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encouraging the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. JONES. On page 7, after the word "improvement," in line 20, I offer an amendment to the amendment so that it will read:

The term "construction" shall be construed to include reconstruction and improvement of roads not constructed under this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 20, after the word "improvement," it is proposed to insert "of roads not constructed under this act," so that if amended it will read:

The term "construction" shall be construed to include reconstruction and improvement of roads not constructed under this act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the committee approve the theory of that amendment to the amendment. It is not exactly in the form it should be, but we can adjust that; and we accept the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment, which embodies the substance of the amendment which I offered on yesterday; but it is changed, I think, so as to meet some of the objections it then encountered. At the end of section 1 I wish to add the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment to the amendment heretofore agreed to in section 1, line 8, it is proposed to insert the following: "Nor shall any of the money appropriated under this act be used for constructing extensions of, or mere branch roads out from, toll roads"; so that it will read:

Provided, That all roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall be free from tolls of all kinds, nor shall any of the money appropriated under this act be used for constructing extensions of, or mere branch roads out from, toll roads.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think that amendment is confusing. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if he thinks, under the provisions of the amendment, a post road built under the provisions of this bill could go across a toll road?

Mr. JONES. I think so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Would that not be a connection?

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why not?

Mr. JONES. I do not use the word "connection."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know the Senator does not.

Mr. JONES. I say that this money shall not be used for the construction of extensions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. An extension is all right, if the Senator will stop there.

Mr. JONES. My amendment provides that none of the money shall be used for the construction of "mere branch roads out from toll roads." That means that you can not make a toll road and start out with a branch. It does not mean crossing at all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that is the proper construction of the amendment, I have no objection to it. We will look it up carefully, however.

Mr. JONES. If in conference there is any doubt about it, the Senator from Alabama can make it clear.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We will do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have occupied all the time I think I ought to consume in the discussion of this bill; but I have here a synopsis of the statement made by Judge J. M. Lowe, who is president of the National Old Trails Road Association of Kansas City, Mo., before the Good Roads Committee of the House of Representatives, which was prepared by Judge Lowe himself, and which bears upon this question. I should like to have it read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SYNOPSIS OF STATEMENT MADE BY JUDGE J. M. LOWE, PRESIDENT OF NATIONAL OLD TRAILS ROAD ASSOCIATION, OF KANSAS CITY, MO., BEFORE THE GOOD ROADS COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

1914.

To the Good Roads Committee of the House of Representatives:

As you kindly requested me to make a brief résumé of my statements made when before you the other day, I hereby respectfully submit the following:

As "Federal aid" in some form is being agitated as preferable to a system of national highways, permit me to ask why make the States contribute an equal amount or any other amount as a condition precedent to any action by the General Government?

Why make the State contribute to a national enterprise at all?

If a road is not of national concern, ought the national revenues be appropriated to it?

If it is of national concern, ought the State to contribute?

But you may say that it will be of benefit to the State. Granted; but shall the Government refuse to enter upon an internal improvement for fear it will benefit the State?

Shall the State be taxed because she is benefited by such improvement?

If this is to be the policy, then why not apply it to rivers and harbors? They, too, are of local benefit. And to public buildings, and many other public enterprises?

"No enterprise is so general as not to be of some local benefit"; but shall all progress cease, all activities end, because some local benefit may result? Inequalities of benefits are never to be courted, and "equal and exact" benefits should be striven for, but that some inequalities will exist in any scheme possible to devise, goes without saying. Shall we do nothing lest some inequalities may be created? If so, all progress must cease.

But "cross-country roads," "tourists' roads," "ocean-to-ocean highways" ought not to be built for fear automobile "joy riders" will use them!

The roads most in favor by these critics are "the rural roads," the roads in the back districts, in remote sections, where there are no products to market and no people to use them, either for "joy" or necessity—roads that "begin nowhere and end nowhere"—roads of little local value and no general value; these are the roads to which it is proposed by some that the general revenue be applied.

Moreover, one-half of the States can not participate in any cooperative scheme because of constitutional limitations.

The States in which constitutional amendments are necessary to permit cooperation or acceptance of "Federal aid" are:

Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

I have been asked if the States thus prohibited by their constitutions from cooperation could not raise their pro rata by a system of general increase of taxes? They probably could, but a legislature would likely hesitate to increase taxes in order that a constitutional provision might be nullified.

For instance, Pennsylvania has just voted down a constitutional amendment providing for issuing of road bonds.

Would her legislature be likely to reverse this action of her people? Possibly a number of these States would amend their constitutions, but this would be both slow and doubtful; and if a single State should fail or refuse, any general system of roads would fail.

Both Monroe and Jackson held tenaciously to the policy of appropriating the national revenues to national purposes only.

Monroe, in reversing a former conclusion, states that a more thorough study of the whole subject had convinced him that Congress had the right to appropriate the national revenues to "national, not State; general, not local, purposes," and that this should be the settled policy of his administration; and it was.

Andrew Jackson, when vetoing a bill appropriating the national revenues to the building of the northern end of the Old Wilderness Road, leading from Lexington, Ky., to Maysville, a distance of about 60 miles, quoted the language of President Monroe as sustaining his own veto, to wit:

"That Congress could rightly appropriate the national revenues to roads of general, not local; national, not State, benefit," whereas the part of the road sought to be improved by Mr. Clay's bill was purely local, and not of any general or national benefit.

This is undoubtedly the correct principle, and it ought to forever put at rest schemes and subterfuges for appropriating the national revenues to matters of local and State concern only.

President Jackson said further, in speaking of Mr. Clay's road: "It has no connection with any established system of improvements; it is exclusively within the limits of a State, starting at a point on the Ohio River and running out 60 miles to an interior town, and, even as far as the State is interested, conferring partial instead of general advantages. * * *

"Although many of the States, with laudable zeal and under the influence of an enlightened policy, are successfully applying their separate efforts to work of this character, the desire to enlist the aid of the General Government in the construction of such as, from their nature, ought to devolve upon it, and to which the individual States are inadequate, is both rational and patriotic; and if that desire is not gratified now, it doesn't follow that it never will be. The general intelligence and public spirit of the American people furnish a sure guaranty that at the proper time this policy will be made to prevail under circumstances more auspicious to this successful prosecution than those which now exist."

He stood for a system of national highways, and states in his veto message that if the local Maysville and Lexington Pike had been a link or part of such a system he would have approved it.

On March 3, 1837, the very last day of his last administration, he approved an appropriation to continue the construction of the Old Cumberland (national) Road, a national highway, built and maintained by the Government, and supported by every administration from Jefferson's, in 1806, to 1837.

But shall those live States and communities which have already awakened to the importance of good roads and have issued road bonds be permitted to participate in this "aid," or shall it be given as a free bounty or reward only to those backward and slothful communities where there are neither products to market nor people to transport?

If the former are treated at least equally with the latter, then they have already issued $410,000,000 in road bonds and are ready to wipe up any appropriation Congress may make.

New York alone is ready to take up $100,000,000 of this "aid."

Besides, is it not illogical and impracticable to give, or try to give, joint authority and supervision to the States over a national highway or over any highway? The Supreme Court has repeatedly said that there is no difference between a highway on the land and on the water. What would be the result if every State through which a navigable stream may run had jurisdiction and control over it? There would be no uniformity in its upkeep nor in the navigation laws governing its use.

Joint control and supervision is impracticable and unworkable. Either the State or the General Government must be supreme. If each is supreme over its own system, and only over its own system, there will be no friction, no departure from the uniform practice of the Government, no questions of State rights nor of paternal nor concentrated Federal power, no conflict of authority, no dodging of responsibility.

And, after all is said, why tax the State, or the people of the State, before permitting them to have any benefit from taxes already paid? For, twist the whole matter as we may, it all comes back to the ultimate fact that "the people pay the freight," whether it comes out of the National Treasury or a part of it out of the State treasury.

J. M. LOWE,
National Old Trails Road Association.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think there is no amendment pending.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I submitted a few days ago a proposed amendment, and if there is no other amendment now before the Senate I offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed as a new section to add the following:

That there is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, out of any moneys in the National Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and each fiscal year thereafter, up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, in all $10,000,000, to be available until expended under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, upon request from the proper officers of the State, Territory, or county for the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within or only partly within the national forests, when necessary for the use and development of resources upon which communities within and adjacent to the national forests are dependent: Provided, That the State, Territory, or county shall enter into a cooperative agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture for the survey, construction, and maintenance of such roads or trails upon a basis equitable to both the State, Territory, or county and the United States: And provided also, That the aggregate expenditures in any State, Territory, or county shall not exceed 10 per cent of the value, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, of the timber and forage resources which are or will be available for income upon the national forest lands within the respective county or counties wherein the roads or trails will be constructed; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall make annual report to Congress of the amounts expended hereunder.

That immediately upon the execution of any cooperative agreement hereunder the Secretary of Agriculture shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the amount to be expended by the United States within or adjacent to any national forest thereunder, and beginning with the next fiscal year and each fiscal year thereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall apply from any and all revenues from such forest 10 per cent thereof to reimburse the United States for expenditures made under such agreement until the whole amount advanced under such agreement shall have been returned from the receipts from such national forest.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a few words in explanation of the amendment.

For the past four years, under the provisions of the annual appropriation bill, 10 per cent of all the receipts from the forest reserves—from the sale of timber, fees for grazing privileges, and all other receipts of that character—have been set aside and applied to the construction of roads and trails through the forests, forest reserves, and through the region immediately adjacent to the forest reserves. Thus the sum of $250,000 or thereabouts has been made available and has been used during the past four years annually for the construction of these roads and trails. The roads have all been constructed in accordance with the principle which finds expression in the general bill to which this amendment is offered, under cooperative agreements between the Department of Agriculture upon the one side and the State or county particularly interested upon the other.

This amendment simply provides that the revenues shall be anticipated for a period of four years, and that instead of making an expenditure of, say, $250,000 annually—the exact returns from the forest reserves—a million dollars shall be appropriated each year, to be reimbursed from the returns from the particular forest reserves in which any road is constructed or in connection with which it is constructed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator whether this amendment contemplates the construction of roads only on Government lands, whether in the forest reserves or elsewhere?

Mr. WALSH. No; it does not. It contemplates the construction of roads through the forest reserves and immediately adjacent to the forest reserves. The road through the region immediately adjacent to the forest reserve may or may not pass over Government land. So, likewise, the road within the forest reserve may pass over some land therein which has passed into private ownership; but I will say to the Senator that the idea is to open the forest reserves, and thus make more readily salable the timber and other like resources, and generally to open up the forest reserves, as well as to provide easy access to them, so that they may be more successfully guarded against fire.

Mr. WORKS. I should think this is an amendment that might very well be adopted, for it would bring one legitimate provision into this bill, because it does provide for work to be done that is national in its character. That is to say, it goes to the improvement of the land owned by the Government, and is entirely legitimate; and it is the only provision that I have yet noticed in this bill that, in my judgment, is legitimate and proper.

Mr. WALSH. I am very glad to have the suggestion of the Senator from California.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator to say that the amendment anticipated the receipts from the forest reserves for four years.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it only for 4 years, or is it for 10 years?

Mr. WALSH. No; perhaps the Senator did not understand me. The bill makes an appropriation of $1,000,000 annually. The actual annual receipts are $250,000, or thereabouts, so that it will take four years to repay the appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, the first appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it will continue until the 10 years are up?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. And at the end of 10 years there will be enough receipts from the forest reserves to pay 2½ years' appropriation during that 10 years.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly; that is, assuming that the revenues do not increase.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. But I am quite confident—and I think perhaps that will receive general acquiescence—that when these roads are constructed through the forest reserves and their timber resources are made more readily available the returns will be proportionately larger, so that the reimbursement will occur more rapidly.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is true.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to say in connection with this matter that the amendment which I offer is practically in accordance with bills which were introduced by myself and by Mr. LEVER in the House some time ago as the result of a suggestion from the Department of Agriculture. I have made some slight change in the amendment to meet the exact condition, the original bill, to my mind, not quite fitting the case. The bills referred to have had the very warm approval of the Department of Agriculture. I have here a letter address to Mr. LEVER, of the House, touching the bill that was introduced there. It is under date of February 9, 1916, and reads as follows:

Hon. A. F. LEVER,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. LEVER: I am in receipt of your letter of February 3 requesting a report on H. R. 10400, which provides for the advancement of funds to survey, construct, and maintain roads and trails within any State, or the Territory of Alaska, within which national forests are located.

At the present time the Department of Agriculture has two funds from which it is possible to construct roads and trails within the national forests. One is the general improvement fund provided for the purpose of constructing roads, trails, telephone lines, cabins, and other permanent improvements in the protection and administration of the national forests. The need of extending trail and telephone facilities in particular has made it impossible to construct more than a few miles of roads, and these roads solely for administration purposes and only incidentally for public use.

The second fund, which is derived from an appropriation of 10 per cent of the net receipts of the national forests for the specific purpose of constructing roads for public use, has averaged about $230,000 per year for the four years that the legislation has been in effect. Cooperative funds contributed by individuals and by county governments have brought the amount available for road construction up to about $250,000 per year. With this amount some 500 miles of road have been constructed and an equal mileage repaired and maintained.

On account of the large extent of the national forests and the almost entire lack of real facilities it has been possible with the appropriation available to build only a small per cent of the projects which are urgently needed. Furthermore, as the mileage of construction increases the percentage of the fund which will be needed for the maintenance of roads will increase also, and the balance available for new construction will correspondingly decrease.

The sections which are in greatest need of road construction for the purpose of development of the national forests and of provision by means of communication for settlers are in general those areas which from their very isolation have the smallest net receipts. It is not possible to meet the needs in such districts under the 10 per cent appropriation as provided by existing law. Many of these areas, however, have enormous undeveloped resources which are certain in the future as development takes place to return very considerable amounts to the Federal Treasury. The bill proposes to provide development for these areas at the present time by advancing funds for road construction, the amount so advanced to be eventually returned to the Treasury by retaining three-fifths of the amount now paid to the States, until the advance made shall have been liquidated. It is further proposed that these advances shall be made only in those counties where cooperative arrangements can be made with the county governments which will provide for maintenance of the roads as well as an equitable distribution of their cost.

The provision of $1,000,000 annually for 10 years, or a total of $10,000,000, will not be more than sufficient to provide the main lines of a system of roads which will eventually be required within the national forest areas. It will, however, assist greatly in the initial stages of development and will make it possible to open up the resources of the national forests, to increase the sales, and to make a larger fund available under the 10 per cent appropriation for a general program of road construction. The proposed legislation would, therefore, be chiefly intended to meet emergency conditions which it would not be possible to meet by existing appropriations.

It is the opinion of this department that the Federal Government should assume the responsibility of developing its income-producing properties within the national forests. It is believed that the proposed bill embodies the policy best adapted to this end. It consists not in making outright appropriations for the construction of these roads, but for advances out of the Federal Treasury which will eventually be returned thereto from the increased receipts from the area thus developed. The department approves the intent and form of the bill and believes it is a type of legislation which is greatly needed at the present time.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

Mr. President, in the last report of the Forestry Service is a brief résumé of the work that has been done during the past four years, with the 10 per cent of the gross proceeds which has been available for the purpose indicated. Without reading this, I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ROAD AND TRAIL BUILDING FOR LOCAL COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT.

The regular improvement work, the primary object of which is the better equipment of the forests for administrative purposes, is supplemented by road and trail construction in the interest of community development. The latter work is made possible by the provision of law which appropriated for this purpose 10 per cent of the national forest receipts fund. The expenditures from this source totaled $195,990.18. The total construction was 134.32 miles of road and 13.63 miles of trails.

The road construction work was organized with the cooperation of the Office of Public Roads. In five of the seven national forest districts highway engineers detailed from the Office of Public Roads assist in selecting, locating, and constructing the roads. Available funds were concentrated on a smaller number of projects, and a higher class of construction was secured.

Among the more noteworthy projects built during the year are the following: The Bitterroot-Big Hole Road, in Montana, giving the Big Hole Basin and adjacent territory access to Missoula and the Bitterroot Valley by substituting for a nearly impassable road, with grades as high as 25 per cent, a well-drained road on a 6 per cent grade; the Troy-Libby Road, in western Montana, forming the closing link in a through route down the Kootenai Canyon from the upper Flathead Valley to Spokane and the Inland Empire territory; a unit of the Mackenzie Pass Road in Oregon, which will, when completed, furnish the main route across the Cascades from the upper Willamette Valley to eastern Oregon; and a unit of the road across Teton Pass on the Idaho-Wyoming line, which will furnish a freight route with easy grades between Jackson Hole and the upper Snake River Valley and the railroad at Victor, Idaho.

Large areas within the national forests, as well as in adjacent territory, are without adequate means of communication. Such roads as exist are ordinarily imperfectly constructed, undrained, and have excessive grades. In many instances such roads are all that the local community can afford to build. The Forest Service is endeavoring to correct this condition as fast and as far as funds permit. The amount available from the 10 per cent fund of the past year for 28 States (including Alaska) was less than $240,000. While much good can be done with this amount, it is insufficient even to keep pace with the annual increase in demands for roads made urgent by the increase in settlement. Large areas of timberland of potentially great value are standing unused, partly because of lack of demand, partly on account of lack of transportation. Some method should be found by which the community's interest in these potential values may serve as security for funds for road construction now.

SCHOOL, ROAD, AND TRAIL MONEY FOR STATES FROM RECEIPTS FUND.

Under existing law, besides the 10 per cent of the receipts which is made available for expenditure by the Secretary of Agriculture in building roads and trails for the benefit of the public, another 25 per cent of the receipts is paid over to the States by the Federal Government for the benefit of county schools and roads. The amounts available under both the 10 per cent and the 25 per cent clauses of the law during the fiscal year 1915 and the amounts that will be available during the current year from the receipts of that fiscal year are shown in the following table:

The States of Arizona and New Mexico received additional shares of national forest receipts for their school funds on account of school lands included within national forests, as follows: To Arizona, paid in the fiscal year 1915 from the receipts of 1914, $30,730.58, and payable from the receipts of 1915, $28,966.46; to New Mexico, paid in the fiscal year 1915 from the receipts of 1914, $9,890.94, and payable from the receipts of 1915, $9,311.87.

Mr. WALSH. I read only that portion of this report which tells of the principal work which has been actually done:

Among the more noteworthy projects built during the year are the following: The Bitterroot-Big Hole Road in Montana, giving the Big Hole Basin and adjacent territory access to Missoula and the Bitterroot Valley by substituting for a nearly impassable road, with grades as high as 25 per cent, a well-drained road on a 6 per cent grade; the Troy-Libby Road in western Montana, forming the closing link in a through route down the Kootenai Canyon from the upper Flathead Valley to Spokane and the inland empire territory.

And I may say in explanation that that road forms a connecting link permitting automobile travel from the Pacific coast clear through to the Glacier National Park. It was the only section that had not theretofore been improved by the local authorities.

A unit of the Mackenzie Pass Road in Oregon, which will, when completed, furnish the main route across the Cascades from the upper Willamette Valley to eastern Oregon; and a unit of the road across Teton Pass on the Idaho-Wyoming line, which will furnish a freight route with easy grades between Jackson Hole and the upper Snake River Valley and the railroad at Victor, Idaho.

Mr. President, reference is made in this report to the Troy-Libby Road. That road runs through the county of Lincoln, in my State. Upward of three-fourths of the area of the county of Lincoln, in the State of Montana, is within forest reserves, and the expenditure necessary to construct roads in that county must all be borne by not more than one-fourth of its area. That county alone in 1914 expended in the construction of roads the sum of $70,000. The next adjacent county, that of Flathead—I should say two-thirds of its area being within the forest reserves—expended $100,000. Much of this expenditure has really been made in connection with roads either within the forest reserves or immediately connected with the forest reserves; and those expenditures, to a very great extent at least, are such as ought to be borne by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the people of the States in which they are are in no measure responsible for the existence and the maintenance of these forest reserves. Whether the policy of their maintenance is a wise one or an unwise one, it is one to which the National Government stands committed. Personally, in a general way, the policy meets my approbation; but whether it is a wise policy or an unwise policy, it is one which the Federal Government has adopted and which it persists in; and so long as it does, it ought to meet its fair measure of the responsibility of maintaining public roads through these reservations.

The deplorable condition in which these Western States find themselves in consequence of this policy has often been descanted upon in this body. In a general way it is perfectly well known; but for the purpose of refreshing the minds of those who may listen to me this afternoon upon this subject, let me remark that of the total area of the State of Idaho 33⅓ per cent or thereabouts is within the forest reserves; in the State of Montana about 20 per cent is within the forest reserves; in the State of Washington 27 per cent is within the forest reserves; in the State of Wyoming 14 per cent is within the forest reserves; in the State of Colorado 22 per cent is within the forest reserves; and in the State of California 26 per cent is within the forest reserves.

We are not asking much. These are great natural resources, which we seek to make available by this amendment. There are great quantities of timber within these forest reserves now that are absolutely unavailable. They can not be reached, simply because there are no roads to get to them. The building of the roads contemplated will unquestionably increase the annual returns from the reserves, so that it probably will not require so long a period as four years for the reimbursement which it is contemplated by the amendment will be made.

It is in perfect keeping with the spirit of the general bill. Section 2 of the bill provides:

That for the purpose of this act the term "rural post road" shall be construed to mean any public road over which the United States mails are or might be transported—

And so forth. These roads, under the provisions of the amendment, will be constructed under a cooperative agreement with the county or the State interested particularly in the work that is to be carried on, and thus the expenditure is doubly safeguarded. I shall have no objections whatever, however, to accepting any amendment to the amendment proposed by me calculated to more carefully safeguard the expenditure which we ask to be made for this exceedingly worthy purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want to jeopardize the amendment in any way, because I think it is a splendid provision and should be incorporated in this bill. My only thought was that the same principle ought to be extended so as to provide that the Government should build roads through the other reservations in a State.

I will say to the Senator that I am not going to suggest even an amendment to this amendment, because I think this would be a step in the right direction; but I do believe that where the Government of the United States withdraws from settlement 60 or 70 per cent of the area of the lands within a State, preventing the State from taxing those lands in any way or receiving a revenue from them, the least the Government could do would be to provide roads so that the citizens of the State could pass from one county to another.

RURAL CREDITS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2986.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLLIS. Will the Senator from Montana allow me? The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has an amendment that he would like to offer. He has to leave the Chamber, and he would like to offer it at this time.

Mr. MYERS. Very well.

Mr. ROBINSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 31 strike out lines 7 to 9, inclusive, and insert:

Fifth. No loan on mortgage shall be made under this act at a rate of interest exceeding 6 per cent per annum, exclusive of amortization payments.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think when this amendment is understood——

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield to me just a minute? There was so much noise in the Chamber that I could not hear the amendment read, and I should like to have it read again.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 31 strike out lines 7 to 9, inclusive and insert:

Fifth. No loan on mortgage shall be made under this act at a rate of interest exceeding 6 per cent per annum, exclusive of amortization payments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Lines 7, 8, and 9 on page 31 read as follows:

Fifth. The rate of interest charged for such loans shall not exceed the legal rate fixed by law for loans by national banks.

That provision would seem to authorize a charge of any rate of interest not in excess of that fixed by the laws of the respective States of the Union, and in some instances it would be as high as 10 per cent. There is, however, another provision elsewhere in the bill to the effect that bonds issued under the authority of this act shall not bear more than 5 per cent interest, and that the rate on loans shall not exceed by more than 1 per cent the rate charged on the bonds.

The effect of this amendment will be to relieve the bill from a manifest inconsistency, and it will be to make express and certain what probably would be the construction of the bill if these three lines were eliminated, and what ought to be the construction of the act anyway.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that the primary purpose of this legislation is to secure long-time loans at low rates of interest to those who under the terms of the act may avail themselves of its provisions, and I think it is important that we make clear in the act that the rate of interest charged on these loans shall not exceed 6 per cent.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], who has charge of this bill, has, in my judgment, demonstrated a remarkable grasp of the subject. During the time I have served in the Senate I have never known anyone to control a bill with greater skill and ability than I think he has demonstrated. His information concerning the subject is, of course, very extended. He has devoted great thought and consideration to it. He realizes, I believe, as does every other Senator, that any rural-credit system which we adopt that does not provide a low rate of interest or at least guarantee against a possibility of excessive rates of interest will, in all probability, prove a failure.

I ask, Mr. President, that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the paragraph that the senior Senator from Arkansas has moved to strike out was inserted in the bill in its original form before the other provision of the bill was inserted, which in effect limits the rate to 6 per cent. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas does not change the effect of the bill, in my judgment, but it does put in one conspicuous place the limitation to 6 per cent. I can see no objection to it, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator think the language that my amendment proposes to strike out is inconsistent with the other provision to which he has referred?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; it does not seem to me to be at all inconsistent, because there might very well be some rate of interest fixed by law less than 6 per cent.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, the language of the bill is—

> The rate of interest charged for such loans shall not exceed the legal rate fixed by law for loans by national banks.

Of course that does not expressly provide that it shall be synonymous with the rates that exist. I realize that, but nevertheless it would seem to imply it.

Mr. HOLLIS. Of course the rate fixed by the national bank is the same as the legal rate fixed by the State.

Mr. ROBINSON. In the State of Arkansas, for instance, the rate of 10 per cent may be contracted for.

Mr. HOLLIS. In New Hampshire the legal rate is limited to 5 per cent, and that would limit the national banks to 5 per cent. The thought of the committee was that it was unwise to permit any language in the bill that might somewhere be construed as being in defiance of the State law; but I think the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas should be adopted, and I hope it will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to voice briefly the interest of Montana in rural-credits legislation and the desire of her people for a beneficial, workable, and adequate farm-loan law. Farmers are the basis of all prosperity, the foundation of society, the pillars of our Government. They are the producers by far of the larger part of all wealth. They pay the greater share of all taxation. Without them human life could exist but a few months; without their support this Government could not last six months.

Yet farmers, creating the greater part of wealth, do not obtain their just share of it. Although this Government is maintained and supported in the main by farmers, although farmers have always constituted the greater part of our population, although they have ever been the bulwark of our liberties and the defenders of the Nation, they have received less consideration at the hands of its lawmakers than any other class of people. Nearly all other classes of people, generally speaking, have received special recognition and attention in the way of legislation; the farmers, scarcely any. Bankers have received their banking and currency laws; railroads have had bounties amounting to billions of dollars voted them; manufacturers have long enjoyed their protective-tariff privileges; of late years labor has been given some recognition; so with many other classes.

Farmers, though, have received scant attention and scarcely any of the benefits of legislation. The greater part of the legislation for the last half century has been more or less opposed to their interest and welfare. Farmers contribute more to this Government and get less return from it than any other class of people; give more to organized society and receive less in return than any other class of society. Special interests have long been seeking special privileges and have not been disappointed. Those who constitute the great bulk of our people and the basis of the general welfare have been neglected. I think it high time that the farmers of the country should receive more attention. They are asking it and should have it.

This administration has accomplished a signal achievement in the enactment of a banking and currency law which is a vast improvement over any banking and currency law of the past. This Government never before had an adequate, efficient banking and currency law. Its lack was shown by numerous unnecessary panics and disturbances of business, sometimes brought about by those who expected to profit therefrom. The present banking and currency law is admitted to be one of the best ever devised, the best in existence to-day in the world. The bankers of the country, who almost uniformly opposed its enactment, now admit it is a good law and a vast improvement over the disjointed, improvised, haphazard national banking act which it displaced. I look for the present banking and currency law to be of great benefit to this country, and I believe that a good national farm-loan law would be of even greater benefit. The bankers have had their banking law; now let us give the farmers a good farm-loan law and prosperity will be put on an enduring basis and will be here to stay. When the twin industries—commerce and agriculture—are put on an enduring basis of prosperity all must prosper.

Montana is acutely interested in the enactment of good, fair, farm-loan legislation. Montana has become a great agricultural State and is rapidly becoming a greater one and forging to the front rank in agriculture. Agriculture is now its leading industry, and its agricultural products exceed in value the products of any other industry. Great as is its mining industry, Montana being the second State in the Union in the production of copper and having within its borders, at Butte, the greatest mining camp on earth, in Montana agriculture now leads mining. Although the monthly pay roll of the mines at Butte, Mont., exceeds $3,000,000 per month, the agricultural products of Montana bring more money than do her mining products. Great as is Montana as a live-stock State, Montana having more sheep and producing more wool than any other State in the Union, and being well to the front in cattle production, and having at Miles City the greatest horse market in the world, agriculture now leads the live-stock industry within her borders.

People are seeking Montana's public lands with an unprecedented eagerness. For several years past Montana has had each year nearly one-third of all of the public-land entries made in the United States. Last year there were made in Montana 30,395 public-land entries. This means 30,395 new homes and farms within her borders.

Thus farming is the leading industry of Montana and has become of tremendous importance. Her farmers are a great factor in her prosperity and development, and they are entitled to recognition. We are here to legislate for the welfare of the whole people, and when we enact just and adequate legislation for the welfare of the farmers we legislate for the welfare of the whole. The farmers of Montana want and demand fair and efficient farm-loan legislation, and they should have it.

As indicative of the growth of Montana, I will say that all of the newspapers of the State and all of the railroads operating in the State report this spring an unprecedented and amazing influx of settlers and land seekers into Montana. Every transcontinental railroad running through the State is bringing into the State trainloads of colonists. At every railroad station in the public-domain sections of the State these people are disembarking. They are land seekers, home makers, farmers, seeking Montana land. Most of them seek public lands; some of them are intending purchasers of privately owned lands. Quoting a railroad official, speaking very recently through one of the daily newspapers of the State:

> The almost unprecedented rush began in February and continued throughout March and April; thousands of families arrived and hundreds of cars loaded with household goods from Illinois, Ohio, and other points in the United States were moved over the line during that period.

The greater part of these immigrants are homesteaders. All of the 30,395 people who entered land last year in Montana are homesteaders or desert-land entrymen. Montana is being settled up and developed by homesteaders. These homesteaders need help. They are, as a rule, the homeless. They are people of small means, who are not able to purchase privately owned land. As a rule they are farm hands, renters, tenants, laborers, wageworkers, clerks, salesmen, bookkeepers, accountants, schoolteachers, employees—people who want to work for themselves, want homes, want some land, want to become independent citizens, want to become integral units of our civilization, want to become taxpayers, want to found firesides and homes, want to raise families; most laudable ambitions, most necessary to the welfare of society. Generally, they are people of small means. As a rule they have little or no money. They take up land and farm it as best they can under their handicaps. They generally make a living off of their land until proving-up time. When not able to do so for lack of seed, teams, or implements, they sometimes hire out and work for others temporarily. When they prove up on their homesteads they scrape together, as the result of their limited cultivation of the land or of working out for others, enough cash to pay the final proof fees and sometimes to pay the commutation charges. Having obtained patents to their lands, clear and unquestioned title, the best in the world, they own the lands, but they are immediately in need of money for fencing and improvements, for building barns and other buildings, for teams and implements.

They have the land, but they need money with which to start in operation a well-equipped farm in order to be able to go ahead and raise crops and make money and produce wealth and contribute to their own welfare and the welfare of the State. Many of them begin the real work of making homes and farms upon receipt of their patents with little or no means—begin a long, hard, uphill task. Most of them have families for which to care, children to support, clothe, and educate. They are the bone and sinew of the country. They are sturdy characters. They are the people who make good citizens—the people who conquer the wilderness, turn under the prairies, brave dangers, subdue nature, found society, shape civilization, build churches and schoolhouses, and make communities. They make a State truly great. They are our future mainstay and solid citizens. They should be encouraged. They need help, and should have it. They should have it at our hands. They need money at low interest and on long time; lower interest and longer time than they can obtain from private sources. I was born on a farm and worked on a farm until after I was grown. Therefore, I know the work and the problems of the farmer.

A good national farm-loan law would be of inestimable benefit to these hardy homesteaders beginning the battle of home and life. The opportunity of obtaining moderate loans at a low rate of interest and on long-time payment for the purpose of improving their farms would be of great assistance to these deserving people, and I am anxious to see them get it. Not alone to them would such legislation be beneficial, but to practically all of the great army of farmers in Montana. Many of those who own improved land of long-standing title and long in private ownership would find such legislation as that embraced in the pending bill of great advantage, and whatever would benefit the farmers would benefit their communities.

As showing the marvelous agricultural possibilities of Montana and as one reason why there is such a rush for Montana lands, I here insert a table, compiled from the Yearbooks of the United States Department of Agriculture, showing the average per acre production of certain staple crops of 12 of the principal agricultural States of the Union for a period of 15 years from 1900 to 1914, inclusive, and the average per acre production, in bushels, of Montana for the same period. It is as follows:

At the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco last year Montana won more agricultural prizes than did any other State of the Union. Montana won the grand prize for cereals, won 9 medals of honor, 73 gold medals, 236 silver medals, 195 bronze medals, and 100 honorable mentions. She won the first prize on apples.

I have here a tabulated statement showing 15 years' growth of agriculture in Montana, in productions per acre and value of same, on some of her leading farm products, showing the increase from 1900 to 1914, as follows:

Montana has become a great wheat-growing State. In the production of spring wheat it ranks fifth in the Union. In the production of all wheat it ranks seventh. I look for the time to come before many years when Montana will be the first wheat-growing State of the Union. She has hundreds of thousands of acres of fine, dry-farming land, which does not need to be irrigated and which is splendidly adapted to winter wheat. In northern and eastern Montana thousands upon thousands of acres formerly looked upon as worthless, or considered as being of worth only for roving bands of sheep or cattle, are now under cultivation by the hand of the pushing and persevering homesteader. One firm in northern Montana is now engaged in the expenditure of more than half a million dollars in the erection of a flour mill and a string of grain elevators. This is only one instance of investment; only one evidence of the great growth of agriculture in Montana.

During the 10 years ending 1913 the increase in wheat production in the United States, as shown by the Government figures, has been from 552,000,000 to 763,000,000 bushels, a 38 per cent advance for the 10-year period. In 1904 Montana was reported as raising two and a half million bushels, and in 1913 21,000,000 bushels, an increase of over 900 per cent.

In 1915 Montana produced 38,825,000 bushels of wheat.

In point of quality Montana has shown her right to be placed first among the wheat States. Her growers won the thousand-dollar prize at the great New York land show in 1911; the world's sweepstakes at the national corn show in 1913; and many other of the best prizes so far offered.

It is not only upon the vast table-lands, with great dry-farming areas in northern and eastern Montana, that agricultural products are increasing. The great reclamation projects of Montana are adding millions of dollars to the wealth of Montana and the United States by their farm products. I have here a carefully compiled estimate of the principal farm products of 1915 of the Flathead reclamation project, in Montana, which is only but partially settled and developed and where the settlers have struggled under monumental disadvantages and most discouraging handicaps. It speaks volumes for their manhood and womanhood, their sterling worth and indefatigable perseverance. It is compiled by Maj. Morgan, Indian agent for the Flathead Indian Reservation, and is as follows:

When that project gets its own in appropriations for its completion, what is due it, its settlers will each year thereafter make a far better and more magnificent showing. Truly, Montana's agricultural resources are as marvelous as the grandeur of her majestic mountain scenery, the sublime beauty of her boundless prairies, the impressive solemnity of her deep forests, the serenity of her pale-blue skies, the placid charm of her shimmering lakes.

As an evidence of Montana's progress and interest in agricultural matters, many of her counties now employ on salaries county agricultural advisers or agents, for the purpose of instructing the farmers in improved methods of farming, and they have found the plan, as a rule, most beneficial. The farm agents employed are men of a high order of ability. The State Agricultural College, at Bozeman, is doing a fine work. Its vocational instruction is of a high order. The farmers of the State appreciate it and many of them are availing themselves of its great benefits, for themselves, their sons, and daughters.

With this marvelous showing under most disadvantageous circumstances, without any encouragement by way of legislation, without any favorable legislative action, what may be expected of Montana, the Giant of the Northwest, when her full agricultural possibilities are developed and brought into realization by fair and legitimate legislation which will bring agriculture into its own? Under such a wise course, Montana would soon support a population of 3,000,000 of people. It will take some encouragement, though. The helping hand will have to be given to the deserving. We will have to make some legitimate effort to take the homeless of the crowded East, the tenants, the wageworkers, the unsettled, the hopeless, and put them on the land; show them the gleam of happy homes, the lure of Mother Earth, the grandeur of an independent existence. Will not the result be worth the effort? I believe it will.

There is abounding prosperity in this land, and farmers, who are the basis of all prosperity, should get their share of it. From the Times, of this city, of the 29th ultimo, I clipped a table showing some increases of pay to labor, effective the first day of this month, which I here give:

Increase of pay May 1.

Total	706,500	5,368,872

Amount of increases yearly, $64,426,464.

The average wage increase in those industries where there have been increases in the United States in the past year has been 11 per cent, according to figures compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Federal reserve agents, and the American Federation of Labor.

The following average increases have been put into effect:

Paint manufacturing industries, 19 per cent.

Automobile and auto-part factories, 17 per cent.

Flour and grist mill workers, shipbuilders, electrical supply industries, iron and steel workers, 15 per cent.

Rubber goods, machinery, foundry, locomotives, 14 per cent.

Cement, lime, dry goods, hardware, paper and products, 13 per cent.

Pottery, pressed brick, groceries, woolens, 12 per cent.

Chemicals, clothing, soap, fertilizers, 11 per cent.

Lumber, millwork, slaughtering, 10 per cent.

Agricultural implements, furniture, shoes, leather, silks, laces, 9 per cent.

Confectionery, cotton, and cotton goods, 8 per cent.

Department stores, hats, watches, advertising, office machines, dental supplies, roofing materials, 7 per cent.

Tobacco and cigars, 6 per cent.

Coal and coal mining, carpets, rugs, linoleums, glass industries, 5 per cent.

Surely with all of this abounding prosperity we should take legitimate steps to see that some of it, a fair measure, is extended to the farmer or at least that he be placed in a position where he may avail himself of a portion of it to his own advantage and to the resultant benefit of the entire people and the whole country. With money plentiful there should be legislation which would enable some of it to flow naturally in the channel of farm improvement and increased production of farm crops and greater profit in agricultural pursuits, to the end that the United States may be the granary of the world and may feed those people who are more intent on destruction than production and those living under less advantageous circumstances than we in glorious America.

There has been some complaint about the delay of the present administration in enacting rural-credit legislation, but I would call the attention of those who complain to the fact that this is a big subject and a deep one, and that it required long, thorough, patient, painstaking investigation and study. For two years committees of House and Senate have been engaged in studying the subject and framing bills. It has been no light task. It is one of the most important and far-reaching subjects of legislation ever undertaken. It is a new departure in this country, and I consider no legislation which has been or will be enacted by this administration to be of more importance and none as being worthy of more study or consideration.

A commission of this country, by authority of Congress, visited Europe and spent months in studying the features and operations and learning the results of farm-loan laws in the principal countries of Europe. As the result of profound study and wide investigation I hope to see this legislation enacted at this session of Congress, and it will be one of the crowning achievements of this administration, one of its greatest glories. An administration which promotes the welfare of agriculture is laying deep and broad the foundations of prosperity, good citizenship, happy homes, and contented people.

I regard putting people on the land and enabling them to make homes as one of the best methods of adequate preparedness for preservation of national autonomy, integrity, and dignity, and the defense of our rights against all the world. It is preparedness in a broad sense of the word, not only for a day or a year but for the centuries to come, for all time. A man with a home will always be zealous to protect and defend his country. It is the man with the home who makes the best defender of his country and its best supporter in times of peace and of war. One design of this bill is to enable people to make and improve homes, to put people on the land.

I regard the pending measure as a good one and intend to give it my vote and support. Doubtless it could be improved in some respects by amendment, and I intend to support some amendments thereto, but I believe the essentials of the bill to be sound and excellent. It will afford farmers the privilege of obtaining farm loans for as long a time as 36 years, certainly long enough to suit anyone, at not to exceed 6 per cent interest, and in many sections less. That is a long way better than any facilities which farmers now have of borrowing money from private sources. We can not furnish free money, but we expect to furnish cheap money. I have received many communications in regard to the pending bill from farmers and farm organizations of Montana.

A few oppose it on the ground that it is not well drawn and not what they would like to have. The great majority of farmers of Montana, however, from whom I hear, and the majority of farm organizations of Montana, from which I have heard, approve of the bill—Senate bill 2986, the Hollis bill—and urge its enactment. Montana is not depending wholly upon the Federal Government in this line of action. She has enacted a fairly good State farm-loan law, but it is not sufficient for the great possibilities of Montana's agricultural development. Montana's agricultural resources are so great that all the assistance possible is needed to bring them to materialization. There is a place in Montana for both State and Federal laws on this subject. Both may be made of great use and benefit.

In such matters I believe in being governed largely by the majority of those who are interested, and, so far as I have heard, certainly the large majority of farmers and farm organizations of Montana substantially favor this bill. Some of them write that it is not just what they would like, but that they want it enacted; that it will be a beginning; and that if, after a trial, it should be found that it has defects and needs improvement, it may be amended. I think that the proper view. No law which is a new departure can be made perfect at first.

The banking and currency law doubtless had some defects. Some of them have been discovered, and this body has passed a law at this session to remedy by amendment at least one of them. Because that law may need improvement, however, is no reason why it should never have been enacted. So with this bill; it may show upon trial that it needs improvement, but it can always be amended. Let us make a beginning. The president of the Montana Farmers' Federation, Mr. L. W. Robinson, informs me that he thinks the bill goes a long way in the right direction and that he wants to see it enacted and tried. He says that, while it does not entirely represent his ideas and is not altogether what he would like to have, he wants it enacted as a beginning in the right direction, and that if not found entirely satisfactory it may be improved in future by amendment. I regard that as a sensible view.

Mr. J. R. Campbell, the county farm adviser or agent of Missoula County, Mont., a most intelligent and capable man, highly approves of the measure. In a recent edition of the Daily Missoulian, of Missoula, Mont., he gave his views about it, and I will close my humble remarks by quoting him. In his interview he says:

I have been studying the provisions of the rural-credit bill now before Congress, as it is outlined in the March number of the Agricultural Review, and in this article have tried to boil it down and give the actual results of its workings, should it be adopted. If adopted as it stands, it will enable any farmer to get long-time loans on his land and to repay the same gradually through the amortization plan. For example, a 36-year loan (this is the limit given in the bill) will be fully repaid in 36 years if the interest and 1 per cent of the principal is paid each year. Interest can not exceed 6 per cent, and probably will be a little less than 5 per cent. It depends on the sale of bonds. This means that on a $1,000 loan for 36 years at 5 per cent the borrower pays $50, plus $10, or $60, the first year; $59.40 the second year, and correspondingly less amounts each year. The burden of repayment is thus made very easy, and it is pleasant to know that each year it will be less. This gives the farmer a fair chance to get some real use out of his loan.

These features of low interest and easy repayment do not appeal to the money-lending interests of the country. In fact, if adopted, they will automatically work to reduce the interest rates that may be secured by private lenders.

The next feature is one that does not appeal to the agitator nor to the incompetent who is looking for the Government to supply unlimited cheap money without good, sound security. They will be disappointed. It is that loans may be secured only for productive purposes or to buy a farm or pay off a mortgage contracted in buying a home. The loan may be made to 50 per cent of the appraised value of the land, and the appraisement is made by a committee of the local farm-land association. This association is made up of those borrowing under this act, and each borrower must be a member and is then responsible for all other members to the amount of 10 per cent of his loan.

So, you see, it is cooperative in its workings. Local associations must be organized with not fewer than 20 borrowers.

Where put into operation it will furnish relief for the farmer who began with small capital and is struggling under the burden of exorbitant interest rates, and the knowledge of the easy repayment terms will be an incentive to success in his farming operations.

It will enable the ambitious young renter or farm hand to more easily become a landowner, and it will give the thrifty farmer the needed working capital to acquire better live stock and properly care for it. But it will not put a premium on inefficiency just because the inefficient person happens to be a farmer.

It will promote neighborhood cooperation and trust, for there will be no loans made where there is no cooperation and organization. It is frankly a compromise, and suits neither the "money bags" nor the radical agitators. It looks to be workable and useful. It will be under Government supervision.

J. R. CAMPBELL,
Agent Department of Agriculture and County Agriculturist.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VARDAMAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas makes the point of no quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gallinger	Newlands	Smoot
Beckham	Gronna	Norris	Sterling
Borah	Harding	Overman	Sutherland
Brady	Hollis	Owen	Swanson
Brandegee	Husting	Page	Taggart
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Pittman	Thomas
Chilton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pomerene	Tillman
Clapp	Jones	Reed	Underwood
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Shafroth	Vardaman
Cummins	Lane	Sheppard	Walsh
Curtis	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Warren
du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	Williams
Fall	Myers	Smith, Ga.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. CHILTON. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness, and will let the announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. NORRIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to have the amendment stated.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator from Utah proceeds I should like to inquire of the Chair if the yeas and nays have been ordered upon my amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 21, after the words "Federal farm-loan board," it is proposed to strike out the following:

All such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees, and all registrars and appraisers, shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act of January 16, 1883 (vol. 22, U. S. Stat. L., p. 403), and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the President from placing said employees in the classified service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted. If the civil service is to amount to anything in the future, no legislation ought to pass Congress relieving the employees of the Government from the civil-service rules. I am fully aware that there is a way to evade it, but I do believe that wherever it is evaded it ought not to be done by Congress.

If this bill becomes a law with the provision in it that is now sought to be stricken from it, hundreds of employees provided for in the bill will not be subject to the civil-service rules; but I can assure the Senate that just as soon as the positions are filled there will be an endeavor on the part of some Member of the Senate, and perhaps on the part of the administration itself, to have a bill passed covering all such employees into the civil service. If Congress refuses to pass such a measure, I have no doubt the President of the United States will issue an Executive order covering them all into the civil service, if I am to judge by what has happened in the recent past.

Mr. President, I find on the calendar No. 87, being the bill (S. 2730) to fix the compensation of assistant appraisers of merchandise, and for other purposes. The bill is very simple in its title, but its object, Mr. President, when examined, is plain. Every Republican assistant appraiser in the United States has been removed and Democrats have been appointed in their places, and just as soon as the changes have been consummated we find a bill upon the calendar to cover them into the civil service.

The same thing, no doubt, Mr. President, will apply to deputy collectors. I have here a long list of changes that have been made; I have not counted them, but there are pages and pages of them. The next thing we shall find a bill introduced covering them all into the civil service. Senators may ask me why I say that if the employees provided for under this bill are appointed without regard to civil service, they will be covered later into that service. Well, Mr. President, Congress appropriated $450,000 for the Commission on Industrial Relations to gather certain testimony and to report to Congress. Its employees were not selected under civil-service rules. That $450,000 was spent; and another appropriation was made of $92,000 for the same commission. Scarcely had the life of the commission ceased until I find an Executive order reading as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

Executive Order No. 2263, of October 26, 1915, authorizing the appointment of certain persons who were former employees of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations to positions in the competitive classified service without reference to the civil-service rules, and amended by Executive Order No. 2284, of December 14, 1915, is hereby further amended by adding the following names:

Miss E. M. Green and Mr. Carl Hookstadt.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 21 February, 1916.
[No. 2321.]

An Executive order covering all of the employees of the Commission on Industrial Relations under the civil service has been made. None of them had to pass the required civil-service examination; they were just simply put into the service by Executive order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's last statement reminds me that during the last 10 days of the Taft administration the time of that most excellent Executive was largely occupied in writing similar Executive orders for the purpose of passing into the civil service scores of employees, who, but for those orders, would have been subject to change and their places to be filled by Democrats. Among others, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] suggests, were some 35,000 postmasters. I recall distinctly that a cashier was appointed for the mint in my town of Denver from the State of Iowa, and that about three days prior to the expiration of the Taft administration that office was covered into the civil service.

I am also informed that one of these orders covered into the civil service the entire secret detective force of the Treasury Department, one branch of which, that which is under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, is useful only when their names are not known and when their attitude to the Government is concealed. It became necessary in consequence of that order to rearrange the entire force.

Now, Democrats may be, and probably are—I hope they are—doing what they can to look after their side of the public official appointments; and, while the action of the Taft administration may be susceptible of criticism, I mention it at this time to show that there is very little difference between the parties when it comes to appointments. The party that is out is always for civil service, and the party that is in does not believe in it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Colorado, I wish to say that it was true that under President Taft an order was issued placing fourth-class postmasters under the civil service. They were all in the Government service. Before that time, however, many of those postmasters had been placed under the civil service by President Roosevelt. Just as soon as this administration came into power——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator's remark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will wait until I answer the statement of the Senator from Colorado, I will be glad to yield to him; or I will yield now, if he so desires.

Mr. REED. Did I understand the Senator to say that President Roosevelt issued an order putting a large number of postmasters under the civil service and that afterwards President Taft had extended that order?

Mr. SMOOT. As to fourth-class postmasters; yes.

Mr. REED. Is there a case on record, then, where President Taft outdid President Roosevelt?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. There was an entirely different condition, and it was done also because of the growth in the number of fourth-class post offices in the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I recall the matter, President Roosevelt designated certain States—a zone, as it were—the fourth-class postmasters in which he covered into the civil service. Some of us thought that it was very unjust; but afterwards it was extended by President Taft. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not the Senator from Utah recognize it as a fact that during the administration of President Harrison, to some extent during the administration of President Cleveland, and under every Republican administration since that time, offices have been covered into the civil service by Executive order as soon as they were filled by political partisans of those in control? There can not be any question about this. I think both parties have been more or less to blame, and for men on one side of this Chamber to charge that the civil service has been abused by the other side is, in my judgment, a piece of political cant. There has been but very little genuine civil service when it has come to appointments in the various departments during the administrations preceding that of Woodrow Wilson. It may be that there have been some appointments made under Executive order—I do not know what may have been the merits of those appointments—but the Senator from Utah will have a good deal of difficulty in trying to explain why it is that when there was a change of administration three years ago 95 per cent of the employees in the various departments were Republicans. I have in mind one now in which there were 137 employees, and among the 137 there were only 3 Democrats.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to proceed——

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; if the Senator objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah declines to yield further.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I thought the Senator was going to ask a question, and that is why I yielded. I want to say to the Senator, in the first place, that I do not believe that 95 per cent of the employees of the Government were Republicans when the present administration came into power.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; for a question.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator say what percentage, in his judgment, were Republicans and what percentage were Democrats?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah can not say exactly what the percentage was, and whenever he gives a percentage he always gives it because he knows it to be accurate, and he is not going to guess at the percentage now. So far as the politics of a great many of the employees of the Government is concerned, I doubt very much whether anyone knows what their politics is; but certainly 95 per cent of the employees of the Government, when the present administration came into power, were not Republicans. I do not want to discuss the question as to whether or not what is said upon this question is "political cant." I am discussing an amendment which has been offered to this bill by a Senator of the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. I think——

Mr. SMOOT. And I am stating, Mr. President, what will happen if the amendment is not adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I will not interrupt if the Senator objects; but I will have something to say later.

Mr. SMOOT. I am telling the Senate exactly what will happen, in my opinion, if the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is not adopted. Just as soon as the employees under this bill are in the service and the organization is completed, I have no doubt that an Executive order will be issued covering them into the civil service, just as was done in the case of the employees of the Industrial Relations Commission.

Now, going back to what the Senator from Colorado stated, it is true that the fourth-class postmasters were covered into the civil service by an Executive order of President Taft; but that has not prevented the President from modifying the Taft order and rules and regulations of the Post Office Department, made so that every fourth-class postmaster of the country has had to take an examination. As far as I am concerned, I would rather have an examination under the Civil Service Commission than I would under rules of the Post Office Department—the worst sort of pretended civil service; no special rules, as the civil service provides, but rules that the department provides.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, certainly, for a question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I only wanted to say to the Senator from Utah that in some respects I agree with him that the examinations might have produced better results, because the head of the Civil Service Commission, in a conversation the other day regarding the effect of these examinations in the fourth-class post offices, said to me that he thought a vast majority of them had been filled by the old incumbents, who were Republicans, after the examinations were held.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know what percentage of the offices have been filled by old Republicans; but I know that the old Republican postmasters had no advantages in the examinations, and I think that things being equal it would have been very, very doubtful whether any of them would have been reappointed. I want to say frankly that I would not care if they had not been appointed. things being equal. I believe if we are going to have a civil service it ought to be a civil service in fact or we ought to abandon it entirely. So far as that is concerned, I am perfectly willing that it should be done if the Government can get better service without it.

I want to be perfectly fair with the Civil Service Commission, because on nearly every one of the Executive orders we find this statement:

The Civil Service Commission does not concur in the recommendation of the President.

Mr. President, I have not taken the time to find out how many employees have been covered into the service by Executive order; but I have here a long list of Executive orders, and it seems to me that if this is to continue it will be very much better to abolish the whole system.

I believe the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska ought to be adopted. Then all of the employees under the bill, if it becomes a law, will be appointed under the civil-service rules, and they ought to be. If there are any particular positions, such as members of the board, perhaps, that would require persons of special experience in the administration of business affairs, let us provide that they shall not be appointed under the civil-service rules; but as the bill now stands every employee, from the charwoman to the members of the board, are to be appointed without reference to the civil-service rules. I do not believe that ought to be, as long as the Government of the United States has a civil-service law.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. HOLLIS. So that we may understand, does not the Senator know that without this provision in the bill it would be within the power of the President to exempt them all, from the top to the bottom, from the civil-service rules?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; it would not be. It would be in his power, after the employees were appointed outside of the civil service, and after the organization was made, to issue an Executive order covering all of them into the civil service; but he has no power under the law to exempt the employees from the civil-service examinations before the appointment is made.

Mr. HOLLIS. Does the Senator think that after the offices have been created, and before they have been filled, the President can not exempt them?

Mr. SMOOT. Before they have been filled he can not do it.

Mr. LODGE. The language is perfectly plain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The language is perfectly plain. It is mandatory that they shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the civil-service act. They can not be appointed on examination. They must be appointed by personal selection.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am not talking about that. The Senator from Massachusetts did not hear what I said. I said that if this provision were not in the bill, if nothing at all were said here about the civil service, if the law were left exactly as the law is to-day, then the President could exempt as many as he wanted to from the civil-service rules. That is so with every office in the gift of the Government to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President. The President of the United States can issue an Executive order covering employees into the service, but he has no power to exempt appointments not made from the effect of the civil-service law.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely mistaken. I conferred this morning with the chairman of the Civil Service Commission purposely, and asked him about it, and he said that if this provision were left out of the bill the President could permit the farm-loan board to appoint any of the employees he wanted outside of the civil service, and he doubtless would in the case of the attorneys and the experts, but he need not stop there unless he wanted to. That is what the chairman of the Civil Service Commission told me this morning.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator having this bill in charge believes that to be true, then he should have no objection whatever to accepting the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska; because if the President of the United States has that power, then it will make no difference whatever, and why not accept the amendment?

I do not want to take any more of the time of the Senate upon this matter, but I do believe the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Utah a question. I will ask him if his attention has been called to section 18 of House bill 562, "An act to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a Postal Savings System," and, if so, what he thinks the effect of that legislation will be if it becomes a law? It is now in conference. It reads as follows:

That hereafter the Postmaster General may establish, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, one or more branch offices, nonaccounting offices, or stations of any post office for the transaction of such postal business as may be required for the convenience of the public.

Mr. President, what that proposes to do—I hope it may never become a law, because when it was debated in the House the House refused to agree to it, but the Senate put it in as an amendment—what it will do will be that it will result in one postmaster being appointed in each county, all the other postmasters will be dropped, and superintendents or clerks in charge will be placed in control of those offices, and they will go under civil service; and at one fell stroke about 50,000 postmasters, whether Democrats or Republicans—and they will belong to both parties, it is true—will be deposed from their offices, and civil-service employees will take their places.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say, in answer to that, that I have received many, many letters calling my attention to that section in the postal-savings amendatory act, and I have also a good many newspaper clippings covering the same subject, stating in substance just what the Senator from New Hampshire has so well stated.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we have reached the period for the civil-service quarterly rehash. It comes up regularly. It affords an opportunity for gentlemen who at the time are out of power to parade their virtues by exploiting their adherence to a rigid interpretation of the civil-service law. The sides change on the question as the political balance shifts either toward the Democratic Party or the Republican Party. The man who was willing to ravish the civil-service rules under a Republican administration, when his own party was in power, who lay awake nights devising ways and means by which he could get out a few of the scattered remnants of the Democratic Party still holding public office, and by which he could get in an equal or a greater number of Republicans—that same individual, when the scales have tilted toward the Democratic Party, becomes a frenzied dervish, shrieking forth the holiness of civil service, and offering himself as a sacrifice upon the altar of its inviolability.

We have witnessed this periodic spectacle ad nauseum. There may have been a time when somebody was fooled, but it has passed. At this late day the man who undertakes to impose that ancient bit of political hypocrisy upon the country will not mislead the country; he will not thimblerig his associates in the Senate; he will not deceive even the credulity of his wife; he can not impose the Pecksniffian performance upon himself.

The spectacle of a Republican Senator who sat quiescent, blandly smiling, secretly chuckling when a Republican President of the United States placed 35,000 Republican postmasters within the civil service by a single stroke of his pen, and by so doing outraged every principle of civil service—the spectacle of such a man rising in the Chamber with a face as solemn as an affidavit and a front as imposing as Jove, to deliver a panegyric upon the glories of civil service, is enough to make all the gods that ever were lean above the battlements of the sky and laugh in derision.

Why, Mr. President, who are these 35,000 Republican postmasters who were thus put into the civil service? How did they in the first place come to hold their offices? How were they selected? For what purpose had they been given place? Manifestly, for political services rendered. They had been the hewers of wood and drawers of water of the Republican Party. They were being rewarded for their work on the hustings. They were to be paid because they had ridden their districts. They were to be compensated by office and by honor because they had been in the trenches on election day. They had been the Republican ward bosses and the ward heelers, or the township bosses or township heelers, or the relatives of the bosses or heelers. They were selected wholly without regard to any talent, to any special ability, to any peculiar fitness or qualification. They simply had to produce evidence that they were the most active and potential Republican partisans in the neighborhood where the post office was located.

What was the purpose of the civil-service law? It was to remove entirely public office of this particular kind from politics; to take these rewards away; to create a condition where men would be selected solely upon their merits. What, then, was the effect of the order made by the President? It was to deny to the civil service the power of life or vitality, so far as 35,000 offices went, until time and death should create vacancies within the ranks. It was to postpone and set aside, for the remainder of the lives of the political incumbents, this beneficent and much-praised law. And yet, when that rape of the civil service occurred, the Senator from Utah sat in his seat as mum as an oyster, and with about the same animated cast of countenance. No word of protest came from his lips. His lion voice did not break out upon the quiet air. The earth did not tremble beneath the reverberations of his oratorical thunder. He smiled. He kept his seat. He was glad to see the civil-service law ravished. He did not lack the courage to speak, but he lacked what I wish he had lacked to-day—the cool assurance to arise and profess a deathless allegiance to the great principle of civil-service reform.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, this is very interesting, but I want the Senator to know that I stated frankly that if the civil-service law was not to be lived up to I thought it would be better to have it abolished. That is exactly what I said, and that is what I believe.

Mr. REED. The Senator says that to-day, but he remained quiescent when he saw the law outraged and 35,000 Republican henchmen covered permanently into the civil service. After having seen his faithful cohorts draw their money from the Government for years, now, when it is proposed that a few men shall be appointed without having passed a civil-service examination, the Senator suddenly exalts the virtues of the civil service, preferring them above the ravishments of the past. He now grows enthusiastic over the benefits of "the merit system," while his gentle soul is shocked at the mere suggestion of "office as a political reward."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. We all admit that both President Roosevelt and President Taft did issue such orders; but I will ask the Senator if he has any information that will enable him to state with any degree of approximate fact how many of those 35,000 postmasters had been appointed by Grover Cleveland during his eight years of administration?

Mr. REED. I question whether there was a single one; and I will tell the Senator why I question whether there was a single one, except that, of course, it is said that in every barnyard, if it be sufficiently large, there is, here and there, an occasional hen's tooth, but they are hard to find.

Why do I say it and why am I warranted in making the assertion? Because when Grover Cleveland went out of office he was succeeded by the old-fashioned spoilsman, and the old-fashioned spoilsman was backed by an army of old-fashioned spoilsmen as rapacious, as insatiate, as a lot of hungry hyenas gathering to feast upon the reeking carcass of an animal that is slain and left on the desert. Rest assured they did not long delay picking the last bit of flesh from the skeleton of the body politic. There was nothing worth having their keen eyes did not discern or their keener smell did not find out. Compose your soul, they did not overlook anything that was "loose at both ends."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I have not quite concluded answering the other question, but I will yield now and answer both at once.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall not trouble the Senator much. I chance to know one town—they are called townships in the West—in New Hampshire that had three postmasters at the time President Roosevelt's order was issued, and two of them were Democrats. They are still in office, and making very good officials, too.

Mr. REED. How large is the town?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not very large; but these were small postmasterships that were covered in, fourth-class postmasterships, many of them so small that it was difficult to find anybody to serve.

Mr. REED. Exactly; and now the Senator has undoubtedly stated the reason why these two lone individuals held on. Plainly the offices were microscopic if they escaped the watchful eyes of a New Hampshire Republican.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the junior Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I am still yielding.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have nothing further to say about that, only that I happened to know other instances, and the fourth-class postmaster was not a very important personage at best.

Mr. REED. That is not the estimate the fourth-class postmaster places upon himself, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the junior Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. HOLLIS. I merely wish to state that I have a good deal of knowledge about the conditions in New Hampshire, and there are many localities in which there can not be found a Republican who can qualify for postmaster, and they are obliged to resort to Democrats.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. REED. I will; certainly. I think I ought to be impartial in this contest.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply want to say that an observation of that kind is offensive to every Republican in the State of New Hampshire, because if it became a question of intellectuality between Republicans and Democrats I think there can be no question what the result would be.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senators from New Hampshire having settled that important question, I desire to give a further reason why there were not many, if any, Democrats in office at the time of the order of President Roosevelt and the later order of President Taft.

I am not going to offend the Senate by taking the time to prove what all know—that it was the policy of the times to which we are now referring immediately to remove all of the political servants who were of opposite political faith and immediately to put in those of the faith of the party that had won in the election. Of course, there may have been post offices where the income from the post office was so slight that nobody wanted it. There may even have been a post office in New Hampshire where the income and pay was so slight that the financial genius of the New Hampshire citizen would not enable him to discover the salary—a thing impossible to imagine, and yet it may have been—where some Democrat was allowed to keep the office; and yet I venture the assertion that if you will run that peculiar and remarkable case to the ground you will find out that that alleged Democrat had been voting the Republican ticket all of his life.

Mr. President, where was the clamor from the other side of this Chamber when, by a stroke of the pen, the civil-service law was set aside, was in fact assassinated, so far as these 35,000 postmasters were concerned? There may have been some Republican who protested; but, if so, I venture the assertion that he belonged to that class of Republicans who, about that time, were beginning to protest against many things that were being done by the President elected by their party. The protest did not come from the old iron brigade of the Republican Party—that old brigade that has again marched to the front, that is now in charge of the colors, and that will dictate the policies of the Republican Party when it meets in Chicago next month.

When I see men stand in this Chamber with tears in their eyes, with solemn countenance, with woe-begone expressions, and hear them wailing over the fact that the civil service is about to be destroyed, I can not help wondering why their tongues have been silent in the past. I can not help exclaiming, when I think of the 35,000 postmasters' jobs—

Where, where was Roderick then?
One blast upon his bugle horn
Were worth a thousand men.

But the Senator from Utah never let out a toot—not one. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will admonish the occupants of the galleries to preserve order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a word more in regard to the civil service. Evils grew up through the placing of men in office purely as political rewards. Some incompetents were placed in office. Then an agitation began, and it was undertaken to substitute a plan of appointment and promotion purely upon the merit. The ideas entertained by the men who were back of that movement were undoubtedly of an exalted character; they desired to serve their country; and yet I question whether there has ever been any real good come to the United States by virtue of that law. If there was some way by which the brains of a man, the intellectuality of a man, the soul of a man, the genius and push of a man could be ascertained, weighed, and measured, the system would be a great thing; but no one has ever devised an examination that can reach the real test or can furnish the real yardstick by which to measure the capacity of an applicant. It is absolutely impossible.

No man need go far in his own recollection to see how false is such a hope. Who does not know of an instance where the most unpromising boy in the class at school speedily outdistanced the honor graduate? Who does not know of the child who came from the most worthless and trifling parents and gave the least promise of success, passing all other competitors in the real race of life? Who has not seen a dozen boys graduate from a law school and the man who stood at the foot of the class, in the actual battle of the court, brush aside with the power of his intellect the men who had surpassed him in school? Who has not seen the uneducated and illiterate man, dowered only with the brain given him by the good God, and therefore unable to pass any sort of educational test, yet in the great struggles on the field of life, in its stern battle, win victory after victory from those who had the advantage of superior scholarship?

I would rather sit down and counsel for 10 minutes with a lawyer whom I had never seen, talk with him in a general way about a particular case, and get his ideas than to read his diplomas from a dozen law schools, even though they were signed by 40 law-college professors, because you can tell from a direct talk whether your man has practical views about the practical question in hand and knows the law of the case, whereas when you are through reading the diplomas you can not really tell whether your man could find his way to the courthouse without the aid of a policeman.

Nevertheless, we have introduced the civil-service system; and how has it worked? Let me give you an illustration. I am not going to call any names. I saw come up for examination recently a man for an important position abroad. It required a man of peculiar skill and training. A man who sought the position had had years of practical experience in large affairs. He had been remarkably successful in large affairs. Owing alone to the war in Mexico, he was obliged to discontinue his business in that country, and he sought temporarily one of these positions. He came up for examination before a young man out of college without practical experience. The matter bore relation to electric apparatus. The young man who examined him could have scarcely told a galvanic battery from a flying machine. The applicant was promptly rejected. I unhesitatingly say that the man rejected knew more about the duties of the position he sought than the entire board of examiners, including the Cabinet officer under whom the job existed. That is the kind of examination we are having every day, and you can not very well get away from that sort of an examination.

Mr. President, there is another thing that is going to result from this law. Already we hear its rumblings and its mutterings. They used to complain under the old system that every time an administration came in there was a change of employees, that incompetent or green men came in; that it took time to train them. That was true, and that was a genuine drawback. But in place of that, what have you done? Created a multitude of life positions, of positions that when they are once secured can be forever held. All incentive to work save sufficient to hold the position is practically gone. There is none or but little influx of new blood. Time runs on. There comes general weakness, disease, senility, and then comes the thing that is already upon us, the demand for a civil pension. When you fasten that on this country you will have fastened upon it a swarm of pensioners that—I do not mean to make an unpleasant illustration—like the lice of Egypt, will devour the people and their substance.

You are doing another thing. You are making a lot of holders of office who expect to remain in the same position for life. They expect to do nothing else. They save but little money. There is no sadder sight to my eye than to see these people going down the hill of life trained to one position, clinging to it as the last straw that will save them from drowning, and then as they grow older and older hoping that some way or somehow they will be pensioned off. It would have been a better thing for every one of them if at the end of a four years' term they had been turned out of office and sent back to their own homes and engaged in the ordinary avocations of life, making friends and acquaintances and becoming associated with business institutions. As it is, they remain here. The future offers them little hope, their pay in many instances is too small. They have laid aside nothing, indeed, in some instances could not. Accordingly they are sometimes subject to every kind of tyranny by those above them. There are Government sweatshops that are worse than many private sweatshops, that have been made the subject of legislative investigation. I want these people paid living wages, but I do not want a horde of officeholders who only relinquish their positions when their pensions begin.

Mr. President, I have said this much in a general way. Now, just one word with reference to the matter complained of by the Senator from Utah. What is the proposition? We are about to establish a great system of banks. It is hoped that they will be a wonderful benefit to this country. For years and years the farmers of the United States have asked for some relief along this particular line of farm investment. In order to create such a system we must have peculiar talent. We must have talent of a high order. This system, in my judgment, will be a great success or it will be a miserable failure, dependent entirely upon the character of men who are appointed to bring it into being.

Now, let me call your attention to this: Nobody here proposes that the men who are to be charged with the principal responsibility—the central board, if you please—shall be called up before a civil-service board and examined. It is conceded that those men should be picked without such examination; and why? Because, plainly, no examination can reach the question of real merit. It is just as important in the formation of this system that these men should be allowed to select assistants peculiarly adapted to the business.

Again, they may find it necessary to get men who have an aptitude, an environment, an understanding, which makes them of particular value in a particular place or at a particular time. It may be that a farm boy will be of great value as an employee for the purpose of passing upon questions relating to the value of farms in a community. I cite that as an extreme illustration. It may be, again, that some cashier or an employee of some small country bank having a knowledge of the credit standing of the people of a community will be of peculiar and special value. Yet if you were to place him in a civil-service examination alongside of some other person, either you would have to restrict the examination so that only the residents could pass it or else you might get some one unacquainted with local values.

I might go on and multiply illustration after illustration. It must be patent to everyone when these banks are first to be created there must be the power of selection placed in the hands of those who are to create the system, who are charged with its responsibilities.

Then, says the Senator, after they have been created the employees will be put under the civil service. As to that, I indulge in no cant. I indulge in no hypocrisy about these matters. If I had my way, men would be appointed without regard to civil service, and they would be appointed on their merit as men, and they would hold their jobs only while they were capable of holding them right. But as long as we have the civil-service law and looking at the particular question now under discussion from that standpoint, I ask what objection is there, after men have been carefully selected for the purpose of getting the most efficient in order to carry out the provisions of this bill? After they have been trained in their places, after they have fallen into the step and are keeping time with the movement of the great financial machinery we are creating, what is wrong, then, in saying that they shall continue in their places, provided you so much desire civil service? Civil service was not put forward for the purpose of equally dividing the offices between the two parties or it would have been so provided. It was for the purpose, in the words of those who created it—at least they thought it was the purpose—to make a system that would give the country the best service. How many places there will be created under this bill I can not answer accurately, but the number is a mere bagatelle as compared with what has been done in the past against which no protest was lodged, against which not a voice was raised on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think there ought to be a distinction drawn, and there must be, I think, to be fair, between putting positions under the civil service where they were already in existence before the law was passed and providing for new positions and new offices, and in the law keeping them in the spoils system until they are filled and then by Executive orders putting them under the protection of the civil-service law. I have not read the civil-service law lately, but as I remember it the method by which it was put into operation was a provision giving to the President the authority to put certain positions under the civil service. So after the law was enacted one President after another gave orders extending the civil service in its scope and embracing within its fold various and different organizations and bureaus of the Government. That was the way it had to be extended. It was the intention of the law that it should be extended in that way. That might have been a weakness in the law, and it is a peculiar thing that I think every one will find if he will examine the record, that the various Presidents in issuing these orders, at least the orders that covered the most territory and the highest number of employees, issued the order about the time they went out of office.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I understood the Senator to say that the way the civil service had to be extended was by these orders extending it.

Mr. NORRIS. That was one of the principal methods, as I remember the law now, by which it was intended to extend the civil service.

Mr. REED. The Senator does not mean to say that before President Taft or President Roosevelt issued the order transferring these fourth-class postmasters into the civil service he could not just as easily have issued an order that at certain times and in certain places there would be held civil-service examinations, and after those civil-service examinations had been held and men had been appointed in response thereto he could then have issued an order?

Mr. NORRIS. I think they could have done that very thing. The Senator has by his question anticipated what I intended to reach in the course of my argument and to point out in my humble judgment, that that is what various Presidents ought to have done. But they did not do it. Grover Cleveland did not do it; Roosevelt did not do it; Taft did not do it; neither did McKinley nor Harrison. All these orders were generally accepted by the public as being within the spirit of the law.

As far as I am concerned, I would much rather have had every one of those orders issued as they were issued rather than to have nothing done in reference to it. It would have been more creditable, I think, to the record of those Presidents if they had ordered an examination or if they had issued the order near the beginning of their terms rather than near the close of them. That is perhaps one of the weaknesses, and there are a good many others, of the civil-service law. It is not perfect; it would not be possible to get a law that would be perfect; but, in my judgment, it would be possible to very much and very materially improve the civil-service law and make it much better.

I am reminded now, when I speak of that, of a remark made by the leader on the Democratic side in the last Congress, or perhaps it was in the beginning of this, that he expected to introduce a bill having for its object the reorganization of the civil service with the idea of improving it, for I think every man will concede that it could be improved. I expressed at that time to him my approval of his contemplated action, and I only wish he had pursued that course and that such a thing had been done.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri very eloquently described the appointment of those 35,000 postmasters that President Taft by his order put under the civil service, and he tells, and tells us truly, how they received their appointment as a rule. There were exceptions, of course. He describes how when they selected these postmasters they selected the men who had done the most for the Republican Party in that vicinity. That is probably true, the same as you propose to do now under this bill by the language that I seek to strike out. In other words, you hold up to derision and complaint, with a great deal of justice and a great deal of reason, the method pursued by a Republican President, and then in defense of it you say, "We want a Democratic President or a Democratic administration to pursue the same method that we condemn in our opponents."

That was the substance of the remark made by the Senator from Ohio. It has been made on other occasions. It is the stock argument: "You did the same thing when you were in power and that is a sufficient excuse for us to do it now, since we are in power."

If the evil of the selection of Republican postmasters that were put under the civil service by President Taft's order was as great as described by the Senator from Missouri, then why, if that was wrong, should we not adopt my motion that prevents the Democratic administration from performing the same kind of an evil thing?

Then the Senator from Missouri says, in substance, "It was wrong for a Republican President, after the postmasters had been appointed because of their political ability and their political activity, to put those postmasters under the civil service." But in this law you want to do the same thing. You want to appoint these men without an examination under the civil service, and then under the proviso after they are appointed the President can issue an order and they will go in for life and thus repeat the evil of a Republican President so much complained of by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED and Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. I did not complain at all of the fact that the Republican Party put its henchmen in power.

Mr. NORRIS. I accept the Senator's correction.

Mr. REED. I made no complaint about that. What I said was that when they covered them into the civil service they nullified the effect of the civil service as to 35,000 men until death or disability should remove those men. This was the point of what I said that my brethren on the other side of the Chamber smilingly approved.

Now, I say to the Senator further that as far as this particular proposition is concerned, I did differentiate between this and the other method by calling attention to the fact that we are creating a great business organization, and it is proposed to put into the hands of the men charged with its creation the right to select their assistants, and every man must know that in a case of that kind they would not appoint their assistants on any other basis than the basis of capacity; that they could not put in as cashier of a bank a man who knew nothing about the banking business, and so forth. I think the Senator, who is always a fair man, must recognize the fact that in the creation of the Federal reserve banks that has been followed. There has been no complaint that I have heard of that there ever was an abuse of the discretion vested in the Federal Reserve Board. Indeed I want to add they are so extremely nonpartisan in that board that I thought they preferred never to have a Democratic officeholder come in to see them.

Mr. NORRIS. They might be suspicious of a Democratic officeholder as long as there was a Democratic administration, perhaps, and they are bothered a good deal in that respect.

I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire in just a moment. I want to refer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri first.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am in no hurry.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Missouri reiterates what he said, and what I undertook to quote in substance, that in the order of President Taft putting 35,000 postmasters under the civil service he had nullified the civil-service law. The Senator had before described how these men had been appointed because of political activity, because of their service in behalf of the Republican Party, and then when the President put them under that order he nullified the law.

We have in this bill a provision that these employees shall be appointed without regard to the civil-service law, the same as those postmasters were appointed, and then a provision following on it that after they are appointed the President can issue the order that will put them under the civil service for life. So you are duplicating now in this bill what you complain of President Taft for having done, the difference being that President Taft put a class of officers under the civil-service law who were in existence before the law was passed, and you are making this stipulation in advance of the establishment of the offices and saying that they shall be appointed the same way that you condemn when somebody else appointed, and that, then, in the same way they shall be put under the civil service in a way that you likewise condemn a Republican President for doing the same thing. What you condemn as an evil when done by a Republican President will become a virtue when done by a Democratic President.

Now I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator the same question I propounded to the Senator from Missouri and which he treated so lightly and with some degree of derision. Does the Senator remember the sweeping order that President Cleveland made a little before he left his office, if I remember correctly, putting twenty-five or thirty thousand employees under the civil service?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I remember that just before President Cleveland went out of office he issued some order of that kind. I have forgotten to what the particular order applied.

Mr. GALLINGER. Twenty-five or thirty thousand employees were put under the civil service by the stroke of a pen. The question I asked the Senator from Missouri was, inasmuch as before President Roosevelt and President Taft issued their orders in regard to fourth-class postmasters, is it not presumable that the President who swept twenty-five or thirty thousands into the civil service just as he was leaving the office, appointed a good many of those fourth-class postmasters to whom the civil service was applied by Republican Presidents? Is it presumable that he remained in office eight years and did not add at least a very considerable number of Democrats to the fourth-class post offices of the country?

Mr. NORRIS. I think he did. In fact, of my own personal knowledge, I know of some.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Missouri said he might have found one; I think he said in the Ozarks somewhere. I think he could have found hundreds if not thousands.

Now, there is one other point I want to make, as I have to leave the Chamber. I have not been a great admirer of the civil service, but I did approve of the original act of 1883, which applied largely to the clerkships in the departments at Washington. The power to extend the civil service is not found in the civil-service law, but it was discovered in some other act. I once looked it up. I would not know where to look for it now. I thought it was a very gauzy power that was given to the Presidents to extend that law at their pleasure, but, taking advantage of that law, they have extended it.

Mr. NORRIS. I am obliged to the Senator for his reference to that law. I was under the impression that the authority was contained in the civil-service law itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not; and all I will detain the Senate to observe further is that the Senator from Nebraska is not contending nor am I contending that the Republican Presidents have been guiltless in extending this law.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I think not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps there is as much fault on the one side as the other; but my attention was particularly called to the provision in this proposed law which anticipates putting men into the civil service. When we passed the income-tax law there was no provision that the employees under that act should be selected from the civil service, and they have been selected outside; and from the knowledge I have of some of the appointments under that law and one or two other laws it rather amuses me to have the Senator from Missouri tell us that they had to be so very careful to make selections, because I know of a good many instances where if they undertook to exercise care they did not accomplish it. But to provide in a law, as the proposition now is, that before these people are appointed and in anticipation of the passage of the act we authorize the President of the United States to put them in the civil service, when there are hundreds and thousands of names on the civil-service register to-day of men and women who have spent good money to take their examinations, and who will lose their opportunity to get appointments at the end of 12 months, and go outside and select laborers, as is provided in this provision, and clerks, and leave those registers loaded down as they are to-day is to my mind not a fair deal.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not agree with the man who says the civil-service law ought to be repealed. I think it ought to be improved. I think it ought to be amended in a good many respects, but no man can say I am opposed to the civil-service law. I had a member of this body say to me privately yesterday, after I had debated this question somewhat, that he believed the proper theory was the old theory that when one party came in, they ought to fill all the offices; that they ought to be responsible for everything, and all the other people ought to go out. While I think that would be disastrous, at the same time, the man who believes in it has a right to his belief, and he can argue it as long and as often as he pleases, and I am not criticizing his honesty or condemning it. But we have a civil-service law, and we ought to enforce it in good faith; and it is no answer for a Democrat to say when he proposes to violate it that a Republican has already violated it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. It occurs to me that this act, which provides that the farm-loan board shall make these appointments, naturally contemplated that the farm-loan board, which is a body of larger dignity than is ordinarily the case with commissions—men who would have a national standing, I take it—would see to it that these appointees who were vital to the success of the enterprise would be very carefully and wisely chosen, just as much so as if they had been examined by some other board, called the Civil Service Board, and after they had been properly chosen, that they should come under the civil-service law would be a natural and proper thing.

It seems to me that the debate is proceeding upon the theory that the spirit of the civil-service act is being disregarded in this proposed act; and it does not seem to me that it is being disregarded, because the farm-loan board would exercise reasonable caution in making these selections. After they are made the employees ought to come under the civil-service rules.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that argument would absolutely nullify the civil-service law if it were put in active operation, in my judgment. A Senator of the United States occupies a position as dignified and as important as does a member of this board. He selects a fourth-class postmaster; and if he be a Republican he selects a Republican as postmaster; if he be a Democrat he selects a Democrat, just as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has so graphically described all the 35,000 Republican postmasters had been selected, or practically all of them, by Members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Why could we not say, in the same language that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] applies to this board, "A Senator of the United States and a Member of the House of Representatives in selecting postmasters will be guided only by the qualifications of the postmaster to discharge the duties of the office to which he is going to be appointed and will entirely disregard politics or political activity. We know that such selections are almost invariably made for partisan reasons upon political recommendations. Qualification for the office is a secondary consideration. The good of the party comes first. The good of the service is a secondary consideration.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I again yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, there is a vast difference between a Senator nominating men as postmasters, scattered over a large State, where he must select from one of a number possibly of active politicians, and the selection of his own office force. When I select the men to serve in my office, to make a success of my office, I shall certainly exercise sufficient care to justify the belief that they will be just as competent as if they had been selected for me by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the same thing will be true as to this board. These appointees will not be in the offices of members of the board. They are going to appoint inspectors, appraisers, clerks, whom they will never see. How are they going to appoint them if you leave them out from under the civil service? They are going to appoint them on the recommendation of Senators or of Members of the House of Representatives, just as postmasters are now appointed. There is not going to be any difference. The Senator from Missouri said in this instance we are appointing a man to go out and appraise a piece of land, and therefore we want somebody who is acquainted with the value of the land in that community. Under this bill these appraisers and inspectors are going to travel all over the United States, or at least all over a particular district comprising one-twelfth of the United States. So the appointment will be made, if made by Senators and Representatives—not because they want to, but because under the very conditions they can not make them in any other way—upon the recommendation of politicians, just as were the 35,000 postmasters who, the Senator claims, were so wrongfully put under civil service by President Taft; so these inspectors will be appointed under a Democratic administration for the same reason that the postmasters were appointed under a Republican administration, because they were particularly active for their party in that locality, because they are backed up by politicians of power and of influence, chairmen of State committees, Members of the House of Representatives, Senators, and so forth.

Mr. President, you can not differentiate the appointment of these men from the appointment of a postmaster. The Senator from Missouri says, "Why, these fellows were not appointed postmasters because of any peculiar fitness they had for being postmasters," and in thousands of cases he was absolutely right. That experience ought to teach us that we ought not to carry that kind of a political machine into this great proposition of loaning money to the farmers of the United States. The farmer who borrows the money will suffer from the political activity of appointees who are appointed under this law unless you rectify it.

If you want to lift this law above the law which resulted so disastrously in the case of the postmasters, as described by the Senator from Missouri, then eliminate from the law the provision that makes it absolutely parallel with the appointment of the postmasters.

Mr. President, I am not contending in this respect that the Republican Party is any better than is the Democratic Party; I make no pretentions; but if you trace the records of Congress back you will find that the very evil that crept into the management and the control of affairs when the Republicans were in control, and which Democrats condemned, the Democrats put into practice when they came into power, and gave as their reason for doing so that the Republicans had been just as bad.

But what did the people think about it? You went before the people with a definite proposition; you called attention to the fact that the Republicans had been derelict in this respect; you promised not that you would duplicate the sins of the Republican Party but that you would do better. Let us see what you said in your platform on this very proposition. I shall now read from the Baltimore platform.

Mr. LODGE. That is a somewhat battered instrument.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; there is not very much left of it, and after the President is nominated for the second term the last remaining plank will be broken. This, however, is what you said about the civil service:

> The law pertaining to the civil service should be honestly and rightfully enforced, to the end that merit and ability shall be the standard of appointment and promotion rather than service rendered to a political party, and we favor a reorganization of the civil service.

That is your promise. You are now about to go on record as to whether or not you intend to redeem it.

Mr. President, so long as one party considers it a sufficient excuse to do evil by citing the fact that some other party has done evil in the past we can not get any genuine reform in this country. If you have called attention to the evil of your opponents and you have promised the people that you would remedy it, and the people, relying upon your promise, have given you power to remedy it, then, in all good faith and honesty you ought to remedy it, and you ought to uphold the civil-service law if you want to redeem the pledges or to redeem one of the pledges that gave you the power to uphold any law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. A great deal has been said about the 35,000 postmasters who were brought into the civil service by President Taft. Is it not true that under the law all of those postmasters were required to submit to a competitive examination?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not understand that that was true under President Taft's order.

Mr. CUMMINS. But that was true under the order of the Civil Service Commission, was it not? The President had nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Civil Service Commission, as I understand, made no order as to the placing under civil service of the fourth-class postmasters who were holding office at the time the order was made. They had no power to make such an order.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not remember just what the law is in that respect, but, at any rate, the Civil Service Commission held that under the law all those postmasters should be subjected to a competitive examination.

Mr. NORRIS. That would apply to appointments made afterwards.

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. NORRIS. I may be wrong, but my understanding is that the President had the authority under the law to issue the order which he did, and that was to simply place all fourth-class postmasters under the civil service by virtue of the order; and they became then entitled to hold office so long as the order existed, unless they were removed for cause or resigned or died.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not speaking of the time when that occurred; I am speaking of the persons or the board having jurisdiction to require it. I know that the Civil Service Commission required an examination, not only of applicants to fill vacancies, but of the entire number that were covered into the civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. That was brought about by an order made by President Wilson.

Mr. THOMAS. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. President Wilson revoked the order of President Taft, or at least he modified it, so as to require an examination of all fourth-class postmasters.

Mr. CUMMINS. At least, the great injury that is complained of has not been done the fourth-class postmasters who are under the civil-service law through a competitive examination.

Mr. NORRIS. No; there has been no injury done, Mr. President; but a great good has been done. President Taft's order, if it had remained absolutely as he issued it, would have brought about great good. As I said in the beginning, I would rather have that order as it was than not to have had any order at all; but I say now, and I have always said, that I thought President Wilson improved on President Taft's order. There has been a great deal of complaint as to how it has been carried out. It is sometimes charged that it has not been carried out fairly, but I make no charge in that respect. I have seen some evidence of that; but even if it were not carried out in absolutely perfect faith, I would rather have it than the old spoils system. I think both President Taft and President Wilson are entitled to credit, so far as those postmasters are concerned.

Mr. President, I believe if we want now to throw aside all prejudice and want to be fair, that, unless we are opposed to the enforcement of the civil-service law, we can do nothing else except to provide that these appointments shall be made under the rules and the laws pertaining to the civil service. The Civil Service Commission at the present time—a majority of them, at least, being Democrats—I think, are doing good work. So far as I know, all the members of the Civil Service Commission are earnestly and honestly striving to do the best they can. They are hampered; they are hindered; and they are interfered with a great many times by the insufficiency of the law under which they work; and if you talk with them about it, they will tell you so. I do not believe they let politics creep into it, and the idea of it all is to keep politics out. You will not keep politics out of these appointments unless you adopt my motion, and thus let the Civil Service Commission control these appointments.

We have already provided in the bill that some members of the board which is going to control this great institution are to be members of one party and some are to be members of another party. It is already known that it is going to be a bipartisan institution. We ought to keep politics out of it just so far as we possibly can, and the only way to do it—at least, I think the best way to do it—would be to adopt this amendment, by virtue of which the exemption from the civil-service act will be stricken out of the bill, let the civil-service act control, and let these men be appointed under the terms of the civil-service law.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] stated his whole argument in a nutshell in his closing sentences. He then insisted that politics must be kept out of the civil service if it is to be sucessful and accomplish the objects for which the system was created; but, in my judgment, there must be a radical change in human nature rather than in the law before that happy solution of the existing situation can be accomplished.

I was one of the original civil-service men in the country. In my humble capacity I sought to promote the movement as much as possible, and I have been largely in favor of it ever since; yet I must confess that the principal object which seems to have been accomplished by the law so far has been to reduce the applications, and consequently conserve the time of Senators and Representatives, which otherwise would be monopolized by the claims and demands of office seekers. The system can not, in my judgment, be divorced from politics until our methods shall change or until human nature is profoundly altered, and I see no reason to believe that either of these things will take place in the near future.

The object of the system is an excellent one and the arguments in its behalf are unanswerable; but in practice it has been and it will be a disappointment, especially to men who, like the Senator from Nebraska, are earnest, sincere, wholesouled believers both in the system and in its possible efficacy.

Mr. President, when the Republican Party is in power its representatives naturally and properly—I say properly in the larger sense—listen to the claims of their own adherents and utilize their influence for them, even though they be upon the civil-service list. Hence, as far as it is possible in conformity with the requirements of the law, Republicans upon the list are selected in preference to Democrats; and the same thing is absolutely true of the Democratic Party when it is in power, for we are all human beings, subject to the same influences and laboring under the same deficiencies.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, the right kind of a civil-service law would make that impossible; but assuming that to be true and that the civil service goes no further than the Senator has outlined, does he not think that even to that extent it is a big improvement over the old system of giving the spoils to the victors, and thus, as the Senator has said, having the time of Members of Congress monopolized by office seekers?

Mr. THOMAS. I have said that it was a great relief to Senators and Representatives, and gave them opportunity to attend to something else than claimants for spoils.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator think, although the civil service, as the Senator says, may have resulted in putting Republicans in office when Republicans were in power and putting Democrats in office when Democrats were in power, that the very fact that the list made up by the Civil Service Commission was a selected list would make it an improvement over the old system?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think it may be an improvement in the service, and yet the improvement is in some particulars difficult—at least it is for me—to differentiate.

I interrupted the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in the course of his remarks to remind him of the Executive orders of President Taft. I have not blamed President Taft for making those orders, except that, as a Democrat, their operation interfered with the ability of the Democratic Party to distribute some rewards of its own.

Reference was also made to the action of Grover Cleveland, who, prior to the expiration of his last term, made similar Executive orders. I have no fault to find with that, because I am conscious of the influences to which he was subjected and which doubtless inspired his action. I would not be at all surprised if when the present administration shall have ended, either on the 4th of March next or four years from that time, that Executive orders of some sort will again be made. They are issued so constantly and so regularly by successive Presidents as to demonstrate to my mind the impossibility of divorcing political considerations from the strict enforcement of the law.

The Senator from Nebraska thinks we might devise a statute that will prevent these conditions and be practically perfect in its operation. I wish I could think so. No statute was ever yet enacted by the wit and genius of man that can not be perverted by the same influences. The system of chancery was once defined to be a constant race between the rogue and the chancellor, and statutes that are most carefully prepared are sometimes most easily avoided.

If we turn to the service itself for a moment—and I shall detain the Senate but a short time—it is the attitude and policy so to speak of the beneficiaries of the civil service which lead me to question its great superiority over the old system. A man or woman having a life estate in an office, generally speaking, lacks that incentive for action which might otherwise exist, or, if not, the basis of it is a desire for promotion, and, of course, every occupant of a civil-service position, Democrat or Republican, wants promotion. He or she wants either a better position or a better salary, or both; all of which is perfectly laudable, because it is not much of a man or a woman who has not a desire for improvement, no matter how good his or her condition may be or may seem to be. But this seems now, following, perhaps, the universal law of the time, to find expression and accomplishment, not so much through perfect service or better service as through the power of organization, and we are at present confronted, and soon will be confronted to a greater degree, with organizations of Government employees, not only asking for but more often demanding legislation designed to create better conditions, better places, better salaries for them; and by transferring to those holding office for life, through organization and unity of action a potentiality for the exercise of political power not entirely free from some, if not many, of the objections which appertain to the old system.

It is for these reasons that I am not the advocate of the system that I once was, nor who believes that it will accomplish the improvement that I once thought and hoped it would accomplish. I am speaking, of course, generally, and not so much with reference to this particular amendment; but I am of the opinion that the time is approaching when either a radical change in the present law must be effected or when the country will drift back more and more to the conditions of the old system.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not propose to take the time of the Senate in discussing with any elaborateness the general question of what has always been known as civil-service reform. I have in the nearly 30 years which I have served in the other House and in the Senate tried to support civil-service reform at all times, and the least agreeable times that I have supported it have been when my own party was in power, for it is easier to fight with my friends on the other side than to fight with my own party.

Experience has given me certain familiarity with the arguments that are usually made. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] repeated one of them this afternoon with great force, which is that the surest guaranty of getting a capable man is general ignorance; that a man who passes an examination is almost certainly unfit for public office; and that persons who have come out of college or school, having passed an examination and having standing on that account in the way of learning, are very undesirable people, who really know nothing about anything, certainly not about the public service.

I am under no illusions about the merits of civil-service reform as it has been applied in our large classified service. It is not perfect; it has defects; but perfection in matters political, so far as my observation goes, exists only in the promises of political platforms, which are generally empty and often broken.

This is a comparative world, and the main question concerning the civil-service system is whether, on the whole, it is better than the system which was previously in vogue, when applicants were appointed to public office according to the friendship or favoritism which they could secure from some Member of the House of Representatives or some Member of the Senate. Civil-service reform, as it is called, has at least produced the effect alluded to by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]; that is, it has made public life in Washington tolerable. It is more than 30 years since the civil-service system was established, and even at that time, when the number of officials was far less than now, life had become practically intolerable to public men. If the vast mass of offices now existing were all to be filled on the recommendation of Representatives and Senators, little else could be done by Senators and Representatives than dealing in patronage and hanging around the anterooms of Cabinet officers. I do not want to speak in overpraise, but I think Senators and Representatives—certainly in the conception of the framers of the Constitution—were intended for something better than that. The civil service has taken most of the offices out of that method of appointment, and, on the whole, for the routine offices, I think it has given us a better class of service. I think it would be a great step backward and an unenlightened policy to abolish the present system of examination.

Under this administration the classified service, taking both existing and created offices, has, I think, declined rather than increased. The positions exempted from the civil-service rules by act of Congress since 1913 are given in a table here, published in a report of the Civil Service Commission, which I shall ask to have printed. They include two very large exemptions in the Internal-Revenue Bureau of the United States; and now it is proposed to create a great body of officials under this elaborate and mysterious structure which we are slowly building up here for the purpose of extending rural credits, which I do not think anybody fully understands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Massachusetts will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

POSITIONS EXEMPTED FROM CIVIL-SERVICE ACT AND RULES BY ACTS OF CONGRESS.

Technical services in the Office of the Supervising Architect in connection with the plans, specifications, and construction of the central heating and power plant. (Sundry civil act, June 23, 1913, 38 Stat., 26.)

Agents, deputy collectors, inspectors, and other employees (not including the clerical force in the Bureau of Internal Revenue) in connection with the income tax, for a period of two years. (Sec. 2, tariff act, Oct. 3, 1913, 38 Stat., 180.)

Appointments of deputy collectors of internal revenue and deputy United States marshals required to execute a bond to the collector or to the United States marshal. (Urgent deficiency act, Oct. 22, 1913, 38 Stat., 208.)

Commercial attachés, Department of Commerce. (Legislative act, July 16, 1914, 38 Stat., 500.)

Commissioner of immigration, New Orleans. (Sundry civil act, Aug. 1, 1914, 38 Stat., 666.)

Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes displaced by superintendent to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (Indian act, Aug. 1, 1914, 38 Stat., 598.)

Secretary, clerk to each commissioner, attorneys, special experts, and examiners in Federal Trade Commission. (Act of Sept. 26, 1914, to create the Federal Trade Commission, 38 Stat., 718.)

Life-Saving Service made a part of the military forces of the United States by inclusion in the Coast Guard. (Act of Jan. 28, 1915, to create the Coast Guard, 38 Stat., 800.)

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption before he takes up that branch of the matter?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I am so in harmony with what he has said with reference to the general benefits of the civil-service law that I think his testimony as to the manner in which it has been administered is valuable as an assurance of the honest manner in which it has been administered. I want to ask the Senator, as supplementary to what he has said, if he does not believe that the method of getting into the civil service through the activities of the Civil Service Commission is about as fair and honest as any human instrumentality could be?

Mr. LODGE. That is my opinion. As a device or a system produced by fallible human beings, it comes perhaps as near to getting what is desired as any system that we can think of; certainly it is much better than the old one.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator will pardon me, but I desired very much, in connection with what he has said, to have his opinion on that point.

Mr. LODGE. That is my own belief. I am not blind to its imperfections. One reason that leads me to believe it is fair is because, when the Republican Party was in power, I, being a friend of the classified service and civil-service reform, as it was called, was constantly reproached in this way:

"Why, these classified offices are filled with Democrats. All the Democrats are kept. They came in under the Cleveland administration. Look at the people who have been appointed! They are all Democrats who came in under the examination. There is no chance for a Republican."

That reproach was constantly made. I now hear the same reproach made by Democrats—that the service is stuffed with Republicans; that apparently only Republicans could pass the examinations; and as the charge is made on both sides I am inclined to think that the system works very fairly and that they take in both Republicans and Democrats on the basis of examination.

I do not believe for a moment that any civil-service examining board consider politics in their appointments. I do not believe they ever certify a man because he is of one party or another, and I do not believe they know; and, taking things by and large, I imagine that as many Democrats get into the service as Republicans.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I want to say that I have not the slightest doubt but that in the action of the commission in certifying eligibles politics plays no part. It was to the matter of appointments that my criticism was directed.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. Appointments outside of the classified service, of course, are political.

Mr. THOMAS. And in the classified service.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator means in selecting one of the first three certified?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. THOMAS. I have been interrupting the Senator lest I may have been misunderstood in what I said as criticizing the action of the commission. I think the action of the commission is absolutely free from politics.

Mr. LODGE. But it is not very often, practically speaking, that the persons who are sought for political appointments succeed in getting into the first three names certified. Of course, they are better men, as the Senator from Missouri pointed out, but they do not seem able to get into the first three for certification. They do not pass with high percentages; and so I think the interest of the average man in politics is but slight in the persons who are certified for appointment by the various civil-service boards.

As I was saying, here is a great fabric of administration to be constructed which will start with an immense number of officers, if it starts at all, and will have a great many more officers as time goes on. I can not see any possible reason why those clerks, laborers, assistants, and other employees should not be appointed like all the other people who hold similar positions in the classified service of this Government. There is no use in humbugging about it. Those offices, filled in that way, will be all from one party—the party in power, whichever it happens to be. These admirable men who can not pass examinations, and who are most desirable for the public service on that account, whatever else they are, will be well tested as to their fidelity to the party in power. That is human nature. We all know it is so. There is no use in trying to disguise it.

Of course, to fill a branch of the service in that way, and then to cover them in, is something very like a fraud on the system, and it has been perpetrated many times. When a department is covered in the men in office ought to be examined if the law is to be carried out thoroughly and honestly.

I should have preferred if the Senator from Nebraska, instead of moving to strike out the whole paragraph, had moved to strike out, in line 24, the words "without regard to," and insert "in accordance with," which has been the common way of legislating when offices have been added in the classified service. That would put it beyond a doubt. Of course, this is carefully framed so that the President can not exercise his discretion. There is evidently a lurking suspicion somewhere among the framers of the bill that if they left this to the President, he might say that these men filling these routine offices ought to come in like all other men; and so, "to make assurance double sure," they have put it out of his power to do that. They have made it certain that these men shall be appointed on the recommendations of Members of the House and Members of the Senate. The great vice of that system is that the men who appoint, who are the Senators and Representatives and other persons conspicuous in politics in the different States, are not responsible for the administration that ensues. The responsibility is divided from the power of filling the offices; and the result of this provision will be to fill this service in that way.

This service, if it is what it is intended to be, connected with an elaborate and intricate system of banking and loans, seems to me to require the best class of officers we can get. I am sure we shall get the best results if we put them under the classified service. For that reason I trust that this clause will be stricken out, though I should prefer to have seen it amended as I proposed to amend it, because that would put it beyond any doubt and would compel the appointment of the persons who hold office under this bill to be made in the same manner that all similar offices are now filled in the other departments of the Government. But, as the Senator from Nebraska has proposed to strike out the whole provision, I shall certainly vote for his amendment, for that is a vast improvement over the present provision, which is simply destructive to the whole system of the classified service.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I have no desire to impose extensively on the time of the Senate; but I ventured a day or two ago to introduce in the debate a communication by former Gov. Herrick, of Ohio, which led to considerable discussion and not a little criticism of the attitude of Mr. Herrick toward this measure. I am not seeking to magnify his position, but it is admissible to discuss the suggestions of one who has identified himself so conspicuously with the rural-credits movement.

I have in my hand a letter written by ex-Gov. Herrick since that time, and I should like permission to introduce this letter into the RECORD without imposing on the time of the Senate. I should like to read, however, just two paragraphs:

> These bonds shall be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, approved by the bureau, signed by its executive officer, and secured by mortgages or Government obligations selected by public appraisers and functionaries and trusteed with public registrars. Manifestly such bonds could not properly be called mortgage bonds or debentures. They would be exactly what the bill declares them and their collateral to be, "instrumentalities of the Government of the United States."

And, following that statement, he says:

> This is not land credit. It is folly; and in devising his scheme for utilizing savings and deposits in long-term operations and for rendering them available for any undertaking on which the United States Government might wish to embark, Senator HOLLIS has copied the identical clauses in the laws under which the Agricultural Bank of France went to pieces in 1876, almost wrecking the Crédit Foncier de France, and under which the latter great institution, originally intended solely for land credit, has been divested of practically all of its farm-mortgaging function and transformed into an agent for whatever other projects the Republic of France cares to handle.
> As a consequence of this bad legislation, land credit in France is still unsatisfactory, although its reform was started in 1852. And it may here be noted that two savings banks, with investment mainly restricted to Government stock and public-service securities, have recently failed in Germany; moreover, that such institutions throughout continental Europe at present are of all banks the hardest pressed for cash with which to meet withdrawals and interest on deposits.

In offering the letter for the RECORD, Mr. President, I venture to say that the letter is directly from Col. Herrick to myself, and I have every reason to believe, notwithstanding what is said, that it is his own dictation. If there is no objection, I should like to have it recorded with the debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

CLEVELAND, May 1, 1916.

Hon. WARREN G. HARDING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HARDING: The arguments in last week's debate have confirmed my belief that the plan of the Hollis bill is a combined long-term mortgaging and savings-bank system, and that the credit and all other resources of such system, controlled and aided by the United States, could be diverted from the farmers' uses and employed in any Government project.

Tax exemption is provided for depositors and investors. On the other hand, mortgaged farms are to remain taxable, while borrowers must put 5 per cent of their loans back into the system. If the funds thus forced from the farmers and attracted from other persons should not suffice for the creation and support of the system, then the remainder shall be supplied in cash by the Secretary of the Treasury, or through the sale of bonds issued upon the good faith and honor of the Government of the United States.

The system is to consist of Federal land banks, national farm-loan associations, national bond and mortgage companies, and certain kinds of moneyed corporations organized under any existing National or State law, but especially licensed to operate under the new law. All charters and licenses are to be granted by a bureau at Washington. The bureau would be practically a part of the Treasury Department, being composed of the Secretary of the Treasury and four other appointees of the President and Senate of the United States, holding office with big salaries for eight years.

The bureau shall have both executive and judiciary powers, plenary and discretionary, in creating, directing, supervising, and abolishing the system, so that it could bestow or withhold its benefits at will, regulate interest rates under a prescribed maximum, take away charters or licenses, and dissolve any bank or association and compound its claims or cancel its debts, without intervention of the courts or appeal to any higher authority.

The bureau shall start the system by dividing continental United States into 12 districts and by establishing a Federal land bank in each district. The bureau could alter these districts and establish as many more such banks as it pleased The number of institutions of any of the other classes also shall depend upon its discretion. The bureau shall appoint one registrar and one or more appraisers for each district, and examiners, attorneys, and other employees of the system. These public functionaries may be appointed for political reasons, since the rules of the civil service are not to be applied to the system.

The capital stock of every Federal land bank thus established may be increased or decreased indefinitely above $500,000. If ordered by the bureau, the United States must supply the minimum by subscribing for shares yielding no dividends. The shares shall be $5 apiece. They may be made subject to withdrawal and issued in any amount to any individual, firm, association, corporation, or Government. They are not to have any voting right, however, except in the hands of the United States or national farm-loan associations, and so would be simply time-deposit certificates.

Other deposits may be accepted in any amount from the holder of just one of these certificates. Public funds of the United States may be received either as advances or as deposits for safe-keeping. Therefore the Federal land banks would be, in fact, savings banks. The bill allows them to maintain as many branches as the bureau shall deem advisable.

All this variable capital—except 10 per cent, which must be invested in United States bonds—and all these withdrawable deposits may be invested in loans, repayable by 72 semiannual installments, for purchasing, improving, or equipping farms. The intention is that they shall be so invested, or else invested in Government securities. The word "improvement," etc., shall be defined by the bureau and the Government securities shall be specified by the bureau or the Secretary of the Treasury. The bill has so far forgot its rural object as to forbid funds received from the Government to be used in farm mortgaging.

Bonds may be circulated by a Federal land bank up to twenty times its capital stock and surplus. The bondholders shall have a prior lien on all deposits and assets as against depositors or others creditors. The security for the bonds may be farm mortgages, currency, or debt obligations of the United States Government. All repayments of borrowers and all other receipts, income, and the entire assets of the banks may be invested in Government securities.

The farm mortgages, which a Federal land bank might desire as investment for its funds or as security for its bonds, can not be obtained by making loans directly to farmers. Such a direct method would take away too much of the fees and commissions needed for running the system. The only mortgages which a Federal land bank could handle would be those coming on a high commission basis from some other component of the system. In order to get a loan the average farmer would have to pay, in effect, a flat commission of 1 per cent or one-half of 1 per cent, besides all costs, and also subscribe for shares up to 5 per cent of the principal of his loan. These forced contributions from farmers are expected to remunerate agents and to meet all the expenses and losses of the system, at least in normal times. They ought.

In this way it is proposed to establish a Government land credit system with savings-bank functions; to finance it by deposits, voluntary and obligatory, public and private; to immobilize current funds in long-term operations; and to leave a way open for the use of all or any of its resources in other private enterprises to be conducted by the Government in case farm mortgaging should not be profitable or desired by the bureau or the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Treasury must increase by $6,000,000 every year his balance on hand in the system, but there is nothing to prevent him from diverting the internal revenue and all his disposable funds to the Federal land banks, since the bill declares them to be Government depositaries and financial agents and their bonds to be lawful investment for public and fiduciary funds.

The Hollis land-credit savings-bank system could, if it chose, turn all its funds over to the Federal Reserve System. The relation is to be reciprocal between the two systems. Member banks of the latter system may buy and sell Hollis bonds, invest their funds in them, or use them as collateral for short-term paper. Paper so secured shall be eligible for discount by the reserve banks. Where all this complexity would end nobody, of course, can foretell. Thirty per cent of postal deposits also may be invested in Hollis bonds.

These bonds shall be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, approved by the bureau, signed by its executive officer, and secured by mortgages or Government obligations selected by public appraisers and functionaries and trusteed with public registrars. Manifestly such bonds could not properly be called mortgage bonds or debentures. They would be exactly what the bill declares them and their collateral to be, "instrumentalities of the Government of the United States."

This is not land credit. It is folly; and in devising his scheme for utilizing savings and deposits in long-term operations and for rendering them available for any undertaking on which the United States Government might wish to embark Senator HOLLIS has copied the identical clauses in the laws under which the Agricultural Bank of France went to pieces in 1876, almost wrecking the Crédit Foncier de France, and under which the latter great institution, originally intended solely for land credit, has been divested of practically all of its farm-mortgaging function and transformed into an agent for whatever other projects the Republic of France cares to handle.

As a consequence of this bad legislation land credit in France is still unsatisfactory, although its reform was started in 1852. And it may here be noted that two savings banks, with investment mainly restricted to Government stock and public-service securities, have recently failed in Germany; moreover, that such institutions throughout continental Europe at present are of all banks the hardest pressed for cash with which to meet withdrawals and interest on deposits. On the other hand, the landschafts, the Raiffeisen societies, and cooperative and mutual banks appear to be withstanding every shock of the war.

The improvement of farm mortgaging depends upon mobilizing land values. After the requirements for proving titles and recovering defaulted loans have been provided the most effective instrument for this purpose is the bond or debenture. If the simple methods necessary for giving safety and salability to this instrument are observed, the issuing institutions do not need savings, deposits, or Government aid. Indeed, the best authorities are becoming more and more to believe that they do not need even capital stock or share capital. The Hollis bill, however, has cast these considerations aside without thought of a fair trial, and besides arranging for savings-bank features proposes tax exemptions and State aid on a scale which surpasses what has ever been attempted by any other nation.

The banks and associations of the system, their capital stocks, shares, bonds, mortgages, reserves, surpluses, income, and assets of every description are exempted from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes on their office buildings and the mortgaged properties of the farmers. The latter is specifically, and, one might say, impertinently excluded from the exemption; and so the farmer would be the only person to be taxed under the system.

This total tax exemption for the system would do no public good, because it could not reduce the aggregate of taxes which must be levied. Taxes can not be escaped. Whenever the burden is lightened for a favored class it falls with a correspondingly heavier weight on the remaining classes. So the exemption would simply shift taxes from one kind to some other kind of property, particularly to real estate. The exemption might please persons who live abroad or who have idle money to invest, but it would be unfair to farmers, whether borrowers or not, because practically all their wealth consists of farm land, live stock, and equipment which tax collectors can easily find and list.

Farmers have more taxable property in proportion to their wealth than is possessed by any other class of taxpayers; and this proportion would be increased by the Hollis bill. There is hardly a dollar in a farmer's hands which he can not profitably use in cultivating, improving, equipping, or enlarging his farm. The more activity and fidelity a farmer displays in his vocation the more visible and taxable his wealth becomes. In spite of the tax exemptions, therefore, farmers could not be expected to hold many bonds, shares, or deposit certificates of the system.

The only shares held by farmers would perhaps be those for which the bill obliges them to subscribe upon applying for loans. The other shares, and the bonds, savings, and deposits would be owned by the United States, States, or maybe by corporations, associations, firms, and individuals not farmers. Thus the tax exemptions would be enjoyed by persons who are not the intended beneficiaries of the system; and the injurious result would hit the farmers worse than anybody else—especially the farmers who did not care for loans from the system.

The tax exemption of savings and deposits would indeed be a grand attraction. However, it perhaps would be the only attraction. The shares are to have no voting power; the bonds could not be redeemed before 10 years from date. So investors would not prefer them to deposits, because their dividends and interest would be imperiled by costs and losses anywhere in the system by reason of the mutual liability which all the Federal land banks must assume. An investor would not have to run this risk in order to obtain the tax exemption and the promise of the United States Government to pay handsome returns on his money. He could enjoy these two advantages upon buying but one $5 share of stock, and then by becoming a depositor, so the obligatory subscriptions would be about the only shares held either by investors or by farmers, while the bonds would probably have to be offered at a discount. The requirement that deposit certificates of the associations shall be convertible into bonds of the Federal land banks is simply another way of saying that a Federal land bank must enter into an agreement to pay back deposits which it accepts. Moreover, the arrangement would permit the bank to pay 5 per cent interest to depositors, since the bonds may bear that rate and since (after the system was in operation) there would be countless bonds subject to purchase and immediate redemption which depositors could acquire.

The inevitable result would be that the system would undertake to finance its long-term operations by short-term savings or deposits. And this spells disaster or a continually increasing resort to Government aid. The proof lies in the actual occurrence of such an outcome wherever this arrangement has been tried. Moreover, tax exemption, special privilege, and Government aid have never won lasting sympathy for any Government. The billions of dollars of loans to serfs which Russia wiped out did not prevent the agrarian uprisings of 1910, nor have the billions of dollars of guaranteed stock issued by England to buy land for peasants stilled the mutterings of revolt in Ireland. The $100,000,000 of free money which the United States advanced for the western irrigation projects have brought discontent among the settlers and a demand for more Government aid.

The total tax exemption and the Government-guaranteed interest on any amount in the Hollis bill is a device, admitted by its report, to catch the idle surplus of wealth as well as the fruits of thrift; and there is no moneyed concern organized under State laws, large or small, which would not be placed by it at a disadvantage with the new Federal institutions to be formed. This, with the free and the 2 per cent money supplied by Government, would cause interest rates to rise for the benefit of the millionaire, while it would put mutual savings banks, building and loan associations, and fraternal orders practically out of business.

This could not be avoided unless the States themselves would free personal property from taxation and use their cash and credit for private purposes in the way proposed for the United States. And this use of public resources for some particular class of individuals would increase the taxes wherever they could be levied. No wonder the Hollis bill and similar measures are being condemned from all sides in terms as strong as appear in these resolutions of the American Federation of Labor:

"We believe that national conditions vary so widely with the several sections of the country that it would be unfair, if not actually dangerous, to undertake to prescribe one system of plan for the guidance and control of all.

"We would therefore recommend that the matter of rural credits, aside from the enactment of a general law to govern the fundamentals, be left to the determination of the different sections or States for the carrying out of the matter in detail until such time as experience shall have determined what, if any, is the better course to pursue to insure the rights and properly safeguard the interests of all."

What would the system have to offer to the farmer in the midst of this disregard of the rights of taxpayers and violation of correct principles? A loan which no average American would accept, unless driven to the last extremity. The borrower must subscribe for shares in some Federal land bank or in one of its associations. The subscription shall at least equal 5 per cent of the loan. He must pledge his shares and give a first mortgage to secure his share subscription and loan contract.

The total must not exceed one-half the value of the mortgaged property unless he join an association. In this case the share subscription and costs may be added to the principal, if the part of the loan not invested in shares is to be used in buying a home. If not so used, the share subscription shall be paid in cash or deducted from the principal; and so the actual amount of the loan would be only 45 per cent of the value of the property.

The bill provides that the shares are to be withdrawn as the loan is paid, but a tangle of inconsistencies would prevent this and make the investment last for at least 10 years, and perhaps become permanent. If the subscription is made for stock in a Federal land bank the shares would be liable up to their face for all losses in the system, because of the mutual liability of such banks. The shares of an association impose either double or unlimited liability. The association must be a stockholder in its land bank, and maintain its holdings at 5 per cent of its outstanding loans. So, a borrower could never escape a liability for losses anywhere in the system, while if he joined an association he would become personally liable for any of its losses.

In spite of this support, by cash and credit forced for the system, the borrower would not have the free use of his loan. He could use the proceeds only for buying, improving, equipping a farm for a home, or for lifting a debt contracted for any such purpose, while he must undertake to live upon and cultivate the farm himself, and not to dismortgage, sell, or by any other lien to encumber it, until his loan is fully paid. This could not be less than 5 and might be 36 years. These clauses appear in Europe only in the laws enacted for the poorest and most degraded peasants. The official report of the bill clearly indicates that there is no intention of reducing interest rates below 6 per cent per annum. So the question is, What is intended for the farmer?

Irresponsible parties are boosting the bill by promises of 3 per cent money with no perquisites. But such a low rate would wipe out profits and destroy the scheme of the bill. The amount of the obligatory shares exceeds present fees and commissions. No relief from present excessive costs of lending is proposed by facilitating the proving of titles and the recovery of defaulted claims, while the terms and conditions are more restricted, if not more severe, than what are now exacted by brokers and existing banks and companies for loans.

The bill does contemplate long-term loans reducible by periodic installments, but it lacks the essential clauses for this beneficent and much-desired process of extinguishing debts. Very likely under the bill's plan, usury could not be avoided nor the lien of the mortgage preserved in all cases of partial payments made in advance of the due date. The bill lacks even the clauses which make installment loans safe and practicable for American building and loan associations, while it ignores the need of such new legislation as a large industrial finance corporation has found advisable to obtain in order to legalize its services for the poor in various States.

A loan contract under the Hollis bill might be difficult to change so as to allow prepayments or leniency for defaults. If a mortgage must remain on record until the last dollar of a long-term loan be paid off, a farmer in need of more funds would be forced to resort to his personal credit at high interest and on the most oppressive terms. Long-term mortgaging is dangerous unless the size and period of the annuities can be altered at the option of the borrower and without endangering the lender's lien. It is doubtful whether this could be done under the Hollis bill. If the bill should become a law, and if the land should be encumbered with mortgages representing loans of only 45 per cent of its value, but immobilizing all its credit value, the probabilities are that the United States would have to establish another system for second mortgages, exactly as has been done for this very reason in Denmark.

The years of a long-term loan have no significance except as a measure of the borrower's annuity and as a process of calculation by which the lender may determine how to refund his obligations. Amortization is of no importance or value to the borrower unless it enables him to adjust his annual dues to his income. This the Hollis bill appears to have overlooked. Seemingly in fright at a fair-sized devisor, it adopted a figure which would obligate the borrower to pay at least about 14 per cent of principal and interest a year.

What farmer would willingly obligate himself to such an annual charge and also to an additional share subscription of 5 per cent of his loan? Could a farmer be expected to assume this heavy burden, especially since he could not rid himself of it at his volition? A less burdensome arrangement with free money has swamped the settlers on the Government irrigation projects and immobilized the $100,000,000 investment of the United States. Last year Congress voted $21,000,000 for the irrigation projects, and the service must have $75,000,000 more to be enjoyed without interest by the settlers. What will Congress do about the irrigation projects?

The clauses for prepayment in the Hollis bill apparently were drawn on the wrong assumption that an annuity contract always remains a lump-sum loan. They are impracticable, especially when taken in connection with the fact that the bonds against the mortgages can not be redeemed before 10 years from date. Constitutional amendments—as for the Torrens systems—would perhaps be required in some States in order to give full play to amortization and to preserve the lender's lien, while allowing the borrower to apply prepayments as they should be applied for reducing the size of all his annuities. Long-term mortgaging is about the only benefit which the Hollis bill offers to farmers. Failing in this, the reason disappears for its enactment, unless the object be to accumulate funds under Government control for other purposes.

The Hollis bill purports to be cooperative, presumably because membership in the association is to be confined to borrowers, and the associations are eventually to have control of the Federal land banks. But the associations would not be even voluntary, much less cooperative. They are to be formed only with the consent of a Federal land bank and upon approval of the bureau. Their creation or dissolution can not be effected at the will of members. Their directors and chief officers are not required to be members. They can make no loans except those allowed by a Federal land bank and public functionaries, while the profits of the system to which they belong may be distributed among outsiders. This eliminates cooperation entirely, while the only mutual feature left is the collective liability of the members for losses. The Federal land banks, with directors elected by such associations and by the United States, would not be cooperative.

In trying to fathom the meaning of this complicated system to be invested with powers so useless to farmers I sometimes amuse myself by thinking that the Hollis bill is the present administration's way of playing quits with the carpetbaggers of old post bellum days for their plan of "40 acres and a mule." I am surprised, however, that Senator HOLLIS is its proponent, because most of the carpetbaggers who did not hail from Ohio came from New England.

Sincerely,

MYRON T. HERRICK.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the letter from Gov. Herrick inserted in the RECORD as a letter. I do, however, wish to call the attention of the Senate, and particularly of the Senator from Massachusetts, to the fact that a communication that was put in the RECORD last week, purporting to be a report to the United States Chamber of Commerce, was not a report at all; it was merely a letter that Gov. Herrick wrote to the members of the committee. I have in my pocket letters from three members of the committee saying that they not only did not agree to the report but they thoroughly disapproved of it. So far as the letter represents Gov. Herrick's individual opinion, of course, there is no objection.

I wish to say, in short reply to the Senator from Massachusetts, that I heartily agree to what he said about the civil service. I believe in the civil service. I believe they are doing a splendid work. I believe the present commission is a fine body of men, and that they are carrying out the civil-service laws in letter and in spirit; but this is a very different matter. Here is a new system to be started, and it ought to be started speedily. The Civil Service Commission is hampered. It has not enough office force to do its work. It would take several months to get men certified under its procedure and rules.

There is not to be a great army of employees, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said. There are very few. All the employees of the land banks are business appointments; they are not political appointments; and the farm-loan board will have nothing to do with those. The only officers appointed by the farm-loan board will be its office force here in Washington and the examiners and the land-bank appraisers and the farm-loan registrars. Those men would not be appointed under civil-service rules anyway, any more than the present bank examiners are. No one would think of having the attorneys appointed under civil-service rules. The attorneys never are, nor the experts. That leaves a few clerks and stenographers to be appointed here in Washington. While I do not blame the Senator from Nebraska for pressing his amendment as a matter of principle, since he feels that this is breaking down the principle so far as having any wide effect is concerned, it will not.

I hope the roll will be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I had forgotten that the order had been made for the yeas and nays, but I desire to say one word only with regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I do not wish at all to interfere with the Senator from Iowa. I am perfectly willing that he shall proceed, but as a mere matter of precedent, the yeas and nays having been ordered and the call of the roll begun, while I am perfectly willing that it may be waived for the time being, I should not like to have it established as a precedent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nobody had as yet responded; and the Senate, the Chair thinks very unfortunately, overruled the Vice President at the last session of Congress on that question.

Mr. STONE. Then I understand the Chair to rule that although half a dozen names, for example, might be called, unless there is some response, the calling of the roll has not been begun?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled at the last session of Congress that when the yeas and nays were ordered the question could not be amended and the yeas and nays should be called. An appeal was taken. The Senate did not sustain the Chair. The Senate clearly announced that, although the yeas and nays were ordered, there might be amendments introduced, and free discussion, and that until the roll call had proceeded to the extent of some Senator answering the roll call Senators were entitled to discuss the question.

That is the Chair's recollection of the ruling of the Senate, and he thinks there is no mistake about it.

Mr. STONE. I am not going to enter into any discussion about the rule. If that is the rule, then we will proceed with it in that way. Really, when I rose, I was not aware that there had been no answer.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if there had been an answer, possibly I would not have risen.

I was about to say that in my opinion this amendment directly challenges the position of every Senator with regard to the merit system—that is, appointments under competitive examination and certified by a nonpolitical board. I am perfectly aware that there are differences of opinion with regard to the value of the merit system. There are Senators upon this side and Senators upon the other side who believe that as a whole the Government service would be better conducted if appointments were made without examination and if removals were made without cause. Everybody must realize that the moment any question of this sort comes up in the Senate, because we have heard such opinions expressed over and over again. But the Senator from New Hampshire avows his belief in the merit system.

I may pause to say that I think there is no considerable country in the world which does not appoint its civil-service employees in that way. Our country was a laggard in the reform when we adopted the present system in 1883, I think, or at least began it at that time. It is unfortunate that we are never able to discuss it without political controversy and political criminations and recriminations. I wish we could dismiss all those things from our minds and think of the amendment upon its merits, without regard to the probability that men of one party or men of another party will enter the public service in the event the system is abandoned or in the event the system is maintained.

The system has just two points, and only two. The first is that admissions to the service are upon competitive examinations, it being believed that the capacity or ability of the applicant is beter determined in that way than by a choice into which many other influences may enter. Now, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] does not believe that. He apparently believes that an uneducated man is just as likely to be a valuable public servant as an educated man. He believes that one who has given no evidence whatever of skill, and who can exhibit no skill in an examination, is quite as likely to become proficient in the public service as one who can give evidence of his training and his ability in an examination.

There are a great many people who so believe, but that is not the system under which we are now conducting the Government of the United States. If we are to return to the system of individual appointments, influenced in any way that the appointing power can be influenced, well and good; but it is idle to disguise or attempt to disguise the fact that we are making an inroad upon the service, and, in so far as this bill is concerned and the farm-loan board is concerned, we are destroying the service.

I should like, if possible, at some time, to have a genuine test of strength in the Senate, rid of all political advantages or disadvantages, just to see how many of us believe that the ordinary employee of the Government should enter the service through a competitive examination, open to everybody who cares to subject himself to the test. I believe that in the long run that system will give to the United States a better body of employees than the other system, and I should like to see the system universal.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment. I am not now suggesting that it ought to include every employee of the Government, because it would be foolish to say that the places of confidence, places that involve a peculiar relation between the employee and the head of a department, should be filled in this manner. Advocates of the civil service have never so contended, and there is in this bill provision for the appointment of employees who I think ought to be appointed by the farm-loan board without the competitive examination to which I have referred.

I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Senator has said that he fears that if this provision of the bill is adopted it will make an inroad upon the civil service. I will ask the Senator if he does not understand that precisely the same provision was in the Federal reserve act?

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then does the Senator think that that has resulted in any inroad on the civil service as applied by this administration?

Mr. CUMMINS. Why, Mr. President, I think the Federal reserve act simply struck down the kind of civil service I have suggested.

Mr. HOLLIS. Will the Senator kindly point out any particular in which it did so?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not insisting that the Federal Reserve Board has not been able to get good stenographers and good clerks or other good employees. I do not know what patience and what care the board has exercised in appointments. I know that if it has exercised the care which it could have exercised, it could get employees just as capable as could be had under the merit or competitive or examination system. I do not doubt that. The United States has now in its employ something like five hundred or five hundred and fifty thousand employees; possibly more. I am not counting the postmasters. It is perfectly well known that the appointing power with respect to many of these employees will not be exercised according to the merit, the capacity of those who are brought to the attention of the appointing power; and that is the reason why this Government, as well as any other Government of which I know in the whole world, has adopted the plan which we call civil service. "Civil service" in itself means nothing. What it means as we are using the term is the plan of admitting upon competitive examination, and of dismissing for cause. These are the vital elements in what we know as the civil service.

It may be that the farm-loan board would exercise its judgment in the selection of its employees so that it would surround itself with competent men and women, but nevertheless it would be an invasion, an inroad, upon the merit system. If we are to disregard this system in the case of the Federal farm-loan board, why should we not disregard it with every department of the Government? If as we add functions and commissions and boards to the Government, we abandon the civil-service law, why should we adhere to it with the thousands of employees of the State Department and the War Department and the Interior Department and of all the other departments in the District of Columbia? I can conceive of no possible justification for the departure.

I have no doubt the Senator from New Hampshire feels and believes that in this particular instance the board will be able to obtain competent employees, more competent from his point of view than though they were certified by the Civil Service Commission; but however firm that belief, a man as intellectual and keen in his analysis as is the Senator from New Hampshire does not dare to say that he is not striking down the civil-service system.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I do dare to say exactly that, and to believe it most sincerely. Here is to be appointed a board with a very few assistants, most of them experts and attorneys, and a few stenographers and clerks.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. HOLLIS. I can not see how we are making any inroads on the general civil-service system in doing that in a special case where I believe it is necessary. It is a small mind that cleaves to a great principle when it is not applicable.

Mr. CUMMINS. Every case is a special case. Suppose we add a hundred men to the State Department, as we did add that number or more to the Department of Commerce and afterwards to the Department of Labor, might not a Senator have said with equal sincerity that the Secretary of State, or his chief clerk, or whatever person in his department is given the power of making selections, could determine the fitness of those who applied for positions better than the Civil Service Commission could do it, and that the result would be 100 employees more skillful than if they had come from the Civil Service Commission? That could have been said, and that possibly could have been believed, but nevertheless, when we begin to make these exceptions wherever employees are added to the civil force of the Government without competitive examination, we have begun the destruction of the system, and it is bound to proceed, if that be the spirit of Congress, until it is entirely overcome.

Granting, of course, the honesty which exists, I know, in the minds of those who are opposed to the system, I can not quite grant the fairness of those who insist that this provision is not a departure from the system. I understand how it has been used in the past. I do not defend the action of either Democratic Presidents or Republican Presidents, with respect to some practices that may have obtained. That, however, is not for us to consider at this time. The question for us is whether we desire to have the system maintained. If we do not, let us abandon it like men, but if we want it maintained let us not undermine it in the way proposed in this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). In the absence of my general pair, the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr.

WARREN], I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator frobm Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. For that reason I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. WEEKS] from the city on unavoidable business. He stands paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent, I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. BECKHAM. Has the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BECKHAM. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). I neglected to announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], and I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan], who is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], which I am not able to transfer. So I withhold my vote. I would vote "yea" if I were not paired.

Mr. CURTIS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and vote "yea." I wish also to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—24.

So Mr. NORRIS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I entertained the hope yesterday that we might be able to reach a vote on the bill to-day. I think that is evidently impossible. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has said that he wishes to offer an amendment striking out the exemption from taxation. I hope the Senator will offer that amendment this evening, so that it will be pending to-morrow, and I shall try to get a vote on the passage of the bill to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from New Hampshire must have misunderstood me. I am quite willing to go on.

Mr. HOLLIS. I hope the Senator will go on. I did not suggest that he should not. I hoped he would offer his amendment, so that at least that might be pending.

Mr. CUMMINS. What I said to the Senator from New Hampshire was that I did not care to present my amendment while the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was pending.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is exactly what I understand, and that is in accordance with what I have just suggested. I hope the Senator will suggest his amendment and go ahead with it.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is what I asked the Senator to do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move to strike out section 29 of the bill. I understand that the Senator from New Hampshire is willing that the argument upon the amendment shall go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOLLIS. I would very much prefer to go on to-night. I would like to run until about a quarter to 6.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the section to which I have directed my motion may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, beginning in line 13, it is proposed to strike out section 29, in the following words:

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION.

SEC. 29. That every Federal land bank and every national farm-loan association, including the capital stock and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section 11 and section 13 of this act. First mortgages executed to Federal land banks, or to joint-stock land banks, and farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act, shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, to one who is interested in the power of Congress to regulate commerce and who believes it will be accomplished most efficiently through the Federal incorporation of the agencies to which commerce among the States is to be carried on, the proposal that Congress can exempt the property, stock, deposits, mortgages owned or issued by the land bank to be organized under the bill now before us, is somewhat startling and very disconcerting.

If Congress could constitutionally either grant or withhold the right of a State to tax the property of a corporation organized under a Federal law, I would not be so much concerned; but, as I view the subject, if the property named in the bill is or can be exempted, it is through the constitutional relation between the State and the General Government. If, therefore, this property is exempt, all such property of Federal incorporation would be likewise exempt.

I can not conceive that Congress has the authority to exempt anything from taxation by the States. When the United States acquires property in a State or creates an instrumentality operating in a State exemption from taxation is a judicial question and can not be affected by legislative action.

These are suggestions, Mr. President, from which I intend to submit to the Senate some observations with respect to the authority of Congress to do what is proposed in section 29 of the pending bill.

I hope that I will not be misunderstood. I do not assert that Congress can not give its assent to State taxation of property which, without such assent, would not be taxable by the State. I doubt whether Congress is empowered in any instance to give such consent; but I do not now dispute it, for it is unnecessary to consider that phase of the question in the discussion of the matter before us. I do assert, however, with the utmost confidence, that Congress can not in any form or in any way by declaration remove property from the power of State taxation. It has never been attempted before, I believe. I have never heard it asserted until I found it in this bill. Now, mark you, I do not say that Congress has not power under some circumstances to create an instrumentality which the Constitution itself or the constitutional relation between the States and the Federal Government will exempt from the power of State taxation——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall do so in a moment.

But I reiterate that Congress has no power to declare that any given property situated within a State shall not be subject to the power of the State in taxation. I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Iowa is fully aware that a condition of admission of the newer States to the Union is that they shall forego the right to tax the public domain within their respective States. There is an exemption, which, but for its existence, would enable the State to levy taxes upon an immense amount of territory which the Government holds, and upon which State taxation would otherwise be levied. It seems to me that, inasmuch as the Government, as to that property, held not for governmental purposes but merely as a proprietor, provides that it shall not be subject to taxation, that this is not an exception to the general proposition which the Senator makes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Colorado again state the early part of his proposition? I did not hear him distinctly.

Mr. THOMAS. I called attention to the fact that a condition of admission of the new States into the Union is that they shall forego the right to tax the domain within the territory of the State belonging to the General Government, but for which exemption all property held by the Government merely as a proprietor would be subject to taxation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Supreme Court has held——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. The Supreme Court has held that the property of the Government situated in a State is not subject to taxation by the State, and that entirely without regard to any legislation upon the subject, entirely without regard to the covenants or agreements under which the State came into the Union.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true, Mr. President, with regard to the property which forms an instrumentality of the State, but it is not true with reference to the property which the State holds merely as any other proprietor. Hence the necessity of an insertion in the enabling act of all of the States where there is public domain of the provision to which I have referred.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from Colorado evidently did not hear my statement.

Mr. THOMAS. I heard the Senator's statement, but perhaps I did not comprehend it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I said that there might be—I do not affirm that there are—instances in which the Congress can, on behalf of the United States, assent to the exercise of the taxing power on the part of the State; but that Congress had no power to declare that a given property should not be taxed by the State, inasmuch as the latter is purely a judicial question.

Mr. THOMAS. I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. CUMMINS. And the court must determine in the proper procedure whether or not the property, either owned by the United States or used as an instrumentality of the United States, may be subject to taxation.

Mr. THOMAS. I understood the Senator's statement quite clearly; but the fact remains that while they might have the exempting clause in the enabling act in States where the public domain is situated, each State would have the power, and it would be its duty, to tax all parts of the public domain owned by the United States not used as instrumentalities of the Government. If Congress has the power—which it certainly possesses and has exercised—of requiring that before the State shall be admitted it must withhold its taxing power over a great extent of territory, which, but for that condition, would be subject to that taxing power, I think it is going too far to say that this is the first time that the attempt has been made by congressional legislation to deprive the State of the power to tax, which it would otherwise possess.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think my statement is absolutely accurate. It may be that a qualification which I had in mind, and which I assumed all Senators would have in their minds, was not made clear enough.

I repeat, that from my standpoint Congress has never attempted to declare with respect to any instrumentality or the property created and owned by any agency of the Government and used in effectuating some purpose of the Government that it should not be subject to taxation upon the part of the State. That is a conclusion which must be deduced from the relation of the States to the Union, and it must be found by and through a judicial procedure. I think I will establish that very clearly before I finish the discussion of the matter. I now yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has partially answered the question which I had in mind to ask; but there is a still further thought which occurs to me with regard to this matter. I should like to ask if, in the opinion of the Senator, the creation of property that does not now exist would also come under the line of his argument? For instance, Congress creates under this act certain property which it exempts from taxation. Would the same rule apply to the exemption of that property as applies to property formerly existing? That was the thought in my mind.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I understand the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota, and the answer to it will fully appear as I proceed in the discussion of the subject. Generally speaking, however, it may be answered in this way: If Congress creates property in the manner proposed in this act, it creates only the franchise to be a corporation. Under this act Congress does not create any other kind of property. It authorizes certain persons to associate themselves together as a corporation, with certain privileges and certain duties and rights. That is the only property conferred upon the association by the Government. The agency itself, namely, the corporation, proceeds under the rights given it by the sovereign to acquire certain property; and, although I am anticipating what I had intended to say later, I at once submit that, if the property created by the corporation is not to be used by the corporation in carrying out a governmental function, whatever that may be, in harmony with State taxation, then the State can not tax the property; in other words, the State can not impede or obstruct the governmental function, even though performed by a corporation, by imposing a tax upon the property.

In this case, however, the chief purpose of the corporation, as avowed by all who have spoken in its behalf, and, as I think will be admitted by everybody, is to secure a lower rate of interest to those who borrow from the land banks; that is its only object. It is necessary, however, to find some governmental purpose, however slight or insignificant, in order to invoke the authority of Congress in the incorporation, and therefore it is declared that these land banks shall be public depositaries, and it may be that there is one other governmental function which they may perform.

If the imposition of State taxes upon the property of the incorporation impedes, obstructs, or destroys the power of the land banks to serve the Government of the United States in the way here appointed, then such taxes are unconstitutional; the State can not impose them, and the State could not impose them no matter what Congress might say or do with respect to the matter. The State could not impose the tax because of the relation which the State sustains to the General Government, a relation which the Supreme Court has declared over and over again does not permit the Federal Government to lay a tax upon a State instrumentality or a State government to lay a tax upon a Federal instrumentality.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator proceeds with his argument, perhaps he will pardon an interruption to permit me to remark that the proposition asserted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has not had anything like a universal acceptance in this country, namely, that the State governments would be entitled to tax the public lands of the National Government within their boundaries were it not for stipulations to the contrary in the acts under the provisions of which they were admitted, respectively, to the Union. That question, as I recall, was the subject of some considerable comment in connection with the admission of California into the Union. The act so stipulated. Mr. Webster, as my recollection now serves me, however, took the position that that provision of the act was entirely unnecessary, as the State would have no right to impose such taxes.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I remarked to the Senator from Colorado, I intend to consider that phase of the question, although I do not believe it to be material to the amendment I have proposed, a little later in connection with one or two authorities from the Supreme Court of the United States.

I assume the Senator from Colorado called it to my attention because I had asserted in a preliminary way that Congress was powerless to deny to the States the right of taxation. If they—the States—are denied the right of taxation, it is by the Constitution and not by Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I also called it to his attention because of his statement that this was the first instance in which legislation of this kind was attempted.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that even if it be true that these public lands would not be taxable by the State in the absence of a compact, that does not in any manner affect the argument which the Senator from Iowa has been making; namely, that Congress, by an act of legislation, can not accomplish it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If it is accomplished in the instance which the Senator from Colorado gives us, it is accomplished by a compact between the State and the Federal Government, and is one of the conditions upon which the State is admitted into the Union. Now, if the State has the power to tax these lands in the absence of that compact, then I think the Senator from Iowa is quite correct in saying that the Congress of the United States can not take that power away from the State by a mere act of legislation.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah is undoubtedly right. The Supreme Court has passed over the whole subject in the Tennessee case to which I shall presently call attention, and which very clearly sets forth the obligations of the States to the Union, and the Union to the States, with regard to the taxation of public property or land.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will withdraw the request I shall be entirely willing to adjourn at any time. I am willing to adjourn now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well; I withdraw it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it the desire of the Senator from New Hampshire that I shall proceed further?

Mr. HOLLIS. Why, no. I suggested that I was ready to adjourn at any time when the Senator wished to desist. I do not want to stop him if he prefers to go on, however.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; if it is entirely agreeable to the Senator from New Hampshire, I should be glad if I might resume my discussion to-morrow.

Mr. HOLLIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 3, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 2, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the Author of life, the Dispenser of every gift, out of the abundance of Thy grace impart unto us that we may conceive readily, see clearly, act fearlessly and nobly our part in the great drama of life and so fulfill the obligations resting upon us here, now, and always, ever keeping before us the ideal in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT DAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, the other day when the House gave unanimous consent to take up the Philippine bill on Monday it was understood we would have a day for unanimous consent as soon as we could. I ask unanimous consent to transfer the business which was under the rule in order last Monday to Thursday of this week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to transfer the business in order last Monday to next Thursday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEPOSIT OF ASSETS OF INSOLVENT BANKS.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill H. R. 3575, to amend section 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to permit the Comptroller of the Currency to deposit upon interest the assets of insolvent national banks in other national banks of the same or of an adjacent city or town, with a Senate amendment and now on the Speaker's table, be laid before the House.

Mr. GARRETT. Is there a similar House bill?

Mr. ROGERS. This is a House bill with a Senate amendment. It passed the Senate with a minor technical amendment.

Mr. GARRETT. What is it about?

Mr. ROGERS. It provides for the deposit of bonds for the security of the payment of the money, and the new words inserted by the Senate are "with the Treasurer of the United States"; it simply perfects the language and was recommended by the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. GARRETT. Is the gentleman willing to let that go over for a time?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it go over for the present.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 759. An act to provide for the removal of what is now known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and for the building of a bridge in place thereof.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4856) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 125. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept assignment of patent for improvements in the manufacture of gasoline, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed, on May 1, 1916, joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

S. J. Res. 121. Joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a representative of the United States Government to appear at the celebration of the landing of Sir Francis Drake on the coast of California; and

S. 5415. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Fox River at Geneva, Ill.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 3205. An act to amend "An act to protect the birds and animals in Yellowstone National Park, and to punish crimes in said park, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1894; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. 3405. An act for the relief of the Maine Central Railroad Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1741. An act for the relief of certain homestead entrymen for lands within the limits of the Glacier National Park; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3646. An act to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., 807), providing for the opening of the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the gasoline situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717).

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time the committee rose there was an agreement for two hours' debate on the last paragraph in the bill, with reference to the foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. MANN. The paragraph has not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Eradication of foot-and-mouth and other contagious diseases of animals: In case of an emergency arising out of the existence of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, or other contagious or infectious disease of animals which, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, threatens the live-stock industry of the country, he may expend in the city of Washington or elsewhere, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as he determines to be necessary, in the arrest and eradication of any such disease, including the payment of claims growing out of past and future purchases and destruction, in cooperation with the States of animals affected by or exposed to, or of materials contaminated by or exposed to, any such disease, wherever found and irrespective of ownership, under like or substantially similar circumstances, when such owner has complied with all quarantine regulations, and said sum shall be immediately available for the purposes specified: Provided, That the payment for animals hereafter purchased may be made on appraisement based on the meat, dairy, or breeding value, but in case of appraisement based on breeding value no appraisement of any animal shall exceed three times its meat or dairy value, and except in case of an extraordinary emergency, to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, the payment by the United States Government for any animal shall not exceed one-half of any of such appraisements.

Total carried by this bill for the Department of Agriculture, $24,501,093.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, the time was limited to two hours, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and the other half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. LEVER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVER. Will the arguments on the point of order be taken out of the time fixed by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. LEVER. I will suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he make his point of order now so that we will have a basis upon which to offer amendments.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in place of the paragraph stricken out, the following:

"Eradication of foot-and-mouth and other contagious diseases of animals: In case of an emergency arising out of the existence of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, or other contagious or infectious disease of animals which, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, threatens the live-stock industry of the country, he may expend in the city of Washington or elsewhere, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as he determines to be necessary, in the arrest and eradication of any such disease, including the payment of claims growing out of past and future purchases and destruction, in cooperation with the States of animals affected by or exposed to, or of materials contaminated by or exposed to, any such disease, wherever found and irrespective of ownership, under like or substantially similar circumstances, when such owner has complied with all quarantine regulations: Provided, That the payment for animals hereafter purchased may be made on appraisement based on the meat, dairy, or breeding value, but in case of appraisement based on breeding value no appraisement of any animal shall exceed three times its meat or dairy value, and except in case of an extraordinary emergency, to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, the payment by the United States Government for any animal shall not exceed one-half of any of such appraisements."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

Mr. MANN. What is the difference in the amendment and the paragraph?

Mr. LEVER. I simply strike out that portion which makes the amount immediately available. I think, however, the amendment as offered is subject to a point of order and I concede it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in place of the paragraph stricken out the following:

"Eradication of foot-and-mouth and other contagious diseases of animals: In case of an emergency arising out of an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, or other contagious or infectious disease of animals which, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, threatens the live-stock industry of the country, he may expend in the city of Washington or elsewhere, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as he determines to be necessary, in the arrest and eradication of any such disease.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, as much as I feel that the question of foot-and-mouth disease among cattle and now before this House for consideration is of vast importance, yet I want the House to listen to a few remarks in reference to the dairy and dairy products resolution introduced by me and of equal importance to the health of the consuming public.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly, but I shall have to object to the discussion of any matter not before the House.

Mr. LINTHICUM. If the gentleman objects, Mr. Chairman, I shall not make any remarks at this time; but on the 14th of last month, when I was absent from the session on public business, remarks were made by two gentlemen from Iowa, and it is important——

Mr. RUBEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will not object if that will not bring up a discussion on that proposition which will take away the discussion of this matter of the foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman prefers to discuss something else and gets the time, what is the difference? The time is limited.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, on the 14th day of last month the gentlemen from Iowa, Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. GREEN, in speaking on the Agricultural bill, referred to my resolution No. 137, introduced by me and asking that a committee be appointed to determine what legislation, if any, is necessary for the supervision and inspection of the dairies and dairy products of the country, said:

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will refer to the hearing the other day before the Committee on Rules he will find that the attorney that appeared before that committee let the cat out of the bag and showed clearly that the investigation was made at the instigation of the packing industry of the country.

And the other gentleman from Iowa, Mr. GREEN, remarked:

Mr. GREEN. That is about what I anticipated would be discovered. The packing interests are connected very closely with the great central creameries that collect their cream from a long distance, and that, as I believe, is mainly responsible for the bad condition of any butter or cream that gets to market, because it is carried so far, without any sanitary precautions, that it naturally becomes fermented or injured in hot weather.

I want to say to these gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. GREEN and Mr. HAUGEN] that, so far as I can discover in the testimony of the witnesses before the Rules Committee and of my friend Mr. Case, the counsel referred to, there is no phrase or expression in that hearing from which could logically be drawn deductions to indicate that the meat packers or the packing industry or any other interests of this country are in anywise connected with this resolution. I say to this House, and say frankly, that this resolution was introduced by me not at the instigation of any packing industry nor any other industry—I do not know any packing industry; I do not know any men connected with it—but it was introduced at the suggestion of the president of the Maryland and District of Columbia Federation of Labor, Mr. John H. Ferguson. This organization is endeavoring to improve the condition of the food products of the country not alone in the interest of its vast membership, but for the equal benefit of the great mass of people who look to us for protection of their health and well-being. I introduced this resolution after I had searched the records and reports of the Bureau of Animal Industry and found reported that the dairy industry is insanitary and dangerous to the health of the people. It was not introduced until I had collected a vast array of testimony from the dairy journals of the country, appearing as late as March 16 of this year. Those journals say that the condition of the creameries of the country is deplorable. The New York Sun came out on the 1st day of May, yesterday, in an editorial, in which it said that the condition of the creameries, or of the dairy industry, of this country ought to be investigated and something out to be done to clear up the situation in that important industry, and without delay. Here you have a product consumed not alone in its original state, but that is manufactured into butter, manufactured into cheese, and goes directly to the people in that raw state, carrying whatever impurities it may contain. Dr. Melvin, the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry, tells you that there are 22,000,000 dairy cattle in this country, and Dr. Schroeder, the authority connected with the bureau and a specialist on tuberculosis in butter and milk, says that 1 in every 10 of these cows, or, in other words, 2,000,000 cows, are infected with tuberculosis; Dr. Schroeder calculates from available data that 6,000 children in this country die every year from bovine tuberculosis and that many more are afflicted with bone troubles, the result of infected dairy products. Numerous other authorities tell you of this situation in a similar manner. I say upon the vast proof produced something ought to be done by Congress to clear it up and put it upon a high plane.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] asserts in that quotation that the "packing interests are connected very closely with the great centralizer creameries that collect their cream from a long distance, and that," he continues, "I believe is mainly responsible for the bad condition of the butter and cream that goes to market, because it is carried so far without any sanitary precautions that it naturally becomes fermented or injured in hot weather."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not caring who is at fault in this deplorable creamery situation. If it is the packing industry who, through their creameries, are turning out bad butter and selling it to the great consuming public, then let us go after them. It is not a question with me as to whether it is one industry or another. I believe we should strike at the people who are causing this condition.

It is no excuse to say that some other industry is causing the trouble, because this resolution aims at no particular corporation or people except to clear up the situation as to the dairies and dairy products of the country. It is no answer to say that somebody is back of this resolution or that some interests are in favor of it who are opposed to the creamery industry—that is merely dragging a herring across the track. When we institute ejection proceedings we do not proceed by telling the court that the title of the other fellow is bad and that ours is better, but we proceed to prove that our title is perfect, and for that reason we are entitled to the property.

Just so it is in the dairy industry. It is not well to simply say that the meat packers or the oleomargarine or any other people are not doing the right thing or are interested in this resolution or that it would benefit them. It is for the dairy industry to prove that their business is being conducted properly and that the people are obtaining a clean and healthy product.

The dairy journals of the country are anxious to place the business upon a high plane. They are interested in the business; they want to see it have the confidence of the great mass of the people, and if those interested will take the trouble to read the hearing before the Rules Committee, they will discover that the dairy interests of the country are condemned in the very dairy journals themselves for present conditions.

In a letter just received from Mr. George H. Brownell, editor of his Dairy Farmer, he contends that a certain meat company is running a large centralizer and that this company advertises that it will accept any sort of cream that farmers will send to it and pay the same prices for it that is paid by competing creameries for first-class cream. He contends that this company is doing this thing in order to injure the creamery business.

I wish to say in this connection that if any such condition prevails in this country it ought to be broken up, whether it is fostered by the packing industry or any other concern. I do not ask in this resolution for immediate supervision and inspection of the dairies and dairy products of the country. What I do ask for is that a committee be appointed to look into these matters, hear the testimony, and ascertain the real conditions throughout the country, and after they have ascertained these conditions, then to propose, if conditions warrant, such legislation as will remove the trouble.

The charge is made against the dairy industry by the Bureau of Animal Industry, by numerous dairy journals of the country and other papers, by many letters from health departments of various States, indorsing the resolution and, if the charges are untrue, then nobody more than the creameries themselves should demand that an investigation be made. If they are without fault let the people know them to be in proper condition and their products clean and sanitary.

No one has a greater desire than I have to see the great mass of creameries and dairies of the country in proper shape. That there is great trouble in some of them; that bad products are being turned out by a number is certainly true, and until this condition can be remedied to the satisfaction of the public this great industry which affects the life and happiness of all the people and which more particularly affects the health of the unprotected children of the country, is bound to rest under suspicion.

I sincerely hope that the two gentlemen from Iowa will take the trouble to read the hearing recently held before the Rules Committee and ascertain for themselves the strong indictments against the dairies and dairy products of the land. I feel that if every Member of this House will take the trouble to read this hearing he is bound to be convinced that this resolution ought to be reported to the House and passed; that the committee may be appointed to decide upon what legislation, if any, should be enforced.

The health of the people is of vast importance, and we can not obtain this health unless we see to it that they have pure food, especially in dairy products.

I note that Dr. A. D. Melvin, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, has called a conference of the representatives of the various dairy, creamery, and butter manufacturing concerns to be held on the 4th of this month. I am very glad to see that the department is taking such a very deep interest in this subject, and I wish them much success in clearing up the atmosphere concerning this great industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. LINTHICUM was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 78, line 18, after the word "destruction," insert the words "and also through the operation of Government quarantine regulations."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that there is no such word and line in the amendment pending which the gentleman seeks to amend.

Mr. LEVER. I suggest to the gentleman that that went out on a point of order.

Mr. KING. I will ask to correct that amendment by having it come after the word "disease" in the seventeenth line.

Mr. STAFFORD. After the word "disease" of the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks to modify his amendment, which, without objection, will be done, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the pending amendment insert "and also through the operation of Government quarantine regulations."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that until I can understand what it means.

Mr. KING. The amendment was prepared, of course, before the gentleman's amendment was offered.

Mr. LEVER. I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw his amendment for the present.

Mr. KING. Very well, I will withdraw it, and put it in proper shape.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer at the end of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I rose to offer an amendment some time ago, but was advised that the time had been allotted, and that we would have to offer amendments through the gentlemen who controlled the time.

The CHAIRMAN. At that time there was a point of order pending, but the Chair is in sympathy with the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. By unanimous consent, all time for debate is under the control of the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Iowa. It would relieve the Chair of some embarrassment if gentlemen wishing to offer amendments would be yielded time by the gentlemen controlling the time. Of course the time taken in reading amendments is not taken out of the time for general debate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All I desire is to have an opportunity to offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have that opportunity. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Following the pending amendment insert:

"Provided, That in addition to the payment made for any animal there shall also be paid to the owner or owners thereof such sum as may be found, upon investigation, to have been expended on orders issued by the Government for care and treatment during the period of quarantine."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that. I do not think this amendment comes at the proper place.

Mr. MADDEN. It may not come at this point.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think it relates to anything. If the gentleman would offer it in the shape of a proviso, it might be in order.

Mr. MADDEN. I suggest to the gentleman that he make the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order in order to determine the matter, and I make the point of order on the ground that this is legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I submit it is not subject to the point of order. In the first place, we are proposing to appropriate $2,500,000 for the payment of cattle killed as the result of the foot-and-mouth disease.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, to which there was no point of order made, does not provide for the payment of animals slaughtered.

Mr. MADDEN. It appropriates the money, which, of course, must be construed to mean that it is to be paid. The language may imply it is not connected with the appropriation, but the fact still remains that the money appropriated is intended for a given purpose, and you can not evade it.

Mr. LEVER. If the Chair will permit, I would like to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the principle involved in the gentleman's amendment was offered to this bill two years ago, or one year ago, and it is the same principle as is involved in the language which has just gone out on the point of order. At the time and when this item was first inserted in the bill the point of order was made that there was no authority to pay these claims, and the Chair sustained that view.

Mr. MADDEN. I am trying to show the Chair there is authority to do it, and I hope I will be able to convince the Chair, who is a reasonable man and of more than ordinary intelligence, that there is only one thing to do with the amendment which I propose, and that is to rule that it is in order, and the next thing to do with it is to adopt it. Now, we are appropriating $2,500,000 for a given purpose. What is that purpose? It is to pay for cattle which are slaughtered under the direction of the Department of Agriculture or the State authority because they have the foot-and-mouth disease, and the proposition that I present in the form of an amendment simply adds to that, that where the Government directs that expenditures be made prior to the killing of the cattle and while the quarantine is in force, that whatever expenditures are made on that order shall be added to whatever price may be paid for the cattle. Now, I submit that that is a reasonable proposition, that it is in order, that it is germane, that it is just, and that it ought to be held in order, and I am quite sure that if the Chair should find himself able to hold it in order the House would be glad to approve it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the original item in the bill provided first for an appropriation for the arrest and eradication of foot-and-mouth and other contagious diseases, and then it provided that out of that appropriation certain claims could be paid. The matter was up before the House last year and the Chair held that it was not in order to provide an appropriation for the payment of claims. Now, the Chair has ruled out, following that authority, that portion of the original paragraph in the bill which provided for the payment of claims. Last year there was no specific ruling of the Chair on the item that did go into the bill. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] made the point of order on the paragraph that was in the bill, and it went out on the point of order. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] offered a further amendment, which still provided for the payment of claims. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] made a point of order on that, and the Chair sustained the point of order. Then the gentleman from South Carolina offered the provision that went into the bill, which was simply an appropriation for the eradication and control of these diseases, and the gentleman from North Carolina said that he would not make the point of order, that in that case it was not subject to a point of order. Now, the Chair was not called upon to make a ruling then, and I think the statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina at that time was correct. The appropriation is in order under the organic act of the Department of Agriculture. That is to be expended under the law by the Department of Agriculture. I doubt very much whether the Secretary of Agriculture under that provision of law can pay any claims of any kind whatever to any private individual. He can engage employees, experts, or other people connected with the Bureau of Animal Industry or otherwise for this purpose. I doubt whether he is authorized to pay any claim, but certainly Congress, or the House, under the rules of the House, can not specifically appropriate for the payment of any kind of a claim over a point of order. I think, so far as the rules are concerned, it is wise to observe the rules to a paragraph like this. I think that under the rule the amendment offered by my colleague is subject to the point of order equally as the provision in the original paragraph was subject to the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Just a word, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. The amendment that is under consideration is entirely different from the original provision in the bill. The amendment that has been submitted by the chairman of the committee merely provides an appropriation of $2,500,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture in the arrest and eradication of these respective diseases.

There is nothing more fundamental in the parliamentary decisions of this House than that you can not add a distinct piece of substantive legislation to another piece of substantive legislation that carries merely one idea or one proposal. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] carries a distinct legislative proposal, providing for the care and treatment of these animals that are supervised by the Department of Agriculture. But the amendment under consideration does not go to that extent of authorizing even the condemnation by the Secretary of Agriculture of animals that are affected with this foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. COX. If I understood the reading of the language of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina, it is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to arrest the spread of the foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. STAFFORD. To arrest and eradicate such disease.

Mr. COX. Now, suppose the Secretary of Agriculture in his pursuit of this disease comes to the conclusion that in order to enable him to arrest and eradicate the disease it will be necessary to kill the animals suffering with the disease. Is the language of the proposed amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina strong enough to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to do that?

Mr. STAFFORD. I question whether under the language embodied in the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend any money in payment of claims for the destruction of these animals.

Mr. LEVER. May I make this statement to the gentleman? When this item was put into the bill a year ago this language providing for the payment of these claims was stricken out on a point of order, and only that portion of the language that I am now offering remained in the bill. The bill went to the Senate, and for fear that under that language the Secretary would not have the authority to pay these claims, it was amended specifically to provide for their payment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin contend that under the authority granted to the Secretary of Agriculture to eradicate he would not have the power to order the owner of the cattle to expend money in endeavoring to carry out the plan he had in mind for the eradication of the disease, and if he did so order he would not have the power to pay?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think he might order, but I do not know whether there would be any sanction back of the order carrying it into effect. But, assuming that he would have that authority, nevertheless you are checking the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture by limiting his discretion in the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule. The present occupant of the chair has held on at least one occasion, and other Chairmen have held uniformly, that in the face of a point of order a provision authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to pay claims can not stand. The Chair presumes, of course, that the gentleman from Illinois in offering his amendment proceeded upon the theory that the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina provided for the payment of slaughtered animals. The Chair thinks that the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina does not bear that construction.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the Chair contend that the appropriation of this $2,500,000 is not for the purpose of paying for the cattle?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not presume that much. The appropriation may be too large or too small. That is not a matter for the Chair to pass upon, but unquestionably as the pending amendment now reads, "for the eradication and arrest of such disease." the Chair, of course, can imagine that the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out this provision might conclude that it is necessary to kill the cattle. But the Chair can not conclude that he could presume then that he had authority to pay for the cattle killed without some direct authority by Congress, and this committee on an appropriation bill can not give him that authority in the face of a point of order. The Chair is therefore compelled to hold the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois out of order.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Probably the need of the inquiry comes from the fact that I did not clearly hear what the Chair said. Did the Chair hold that no portion of this sum of $2,500,000 would be available for the purpose of paying for animals that were necessarily slaughtered, or was the reverse of that the ruling of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hold anything about that. That was not the province of the Chair to hold. It would be a question for some other greater and more powerful authority to decide. The Chair simply made a statement, perhaps unnecessary, but due to the fact that it was in answer to a statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, that part of this $2,500,000 was undoubtedly intended to be used to pay for the killing of stock. The Chair said he could not conclude, under the wording of the amendment, that it was to be so used.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I merely wanted to understand what the Chair said. I would not attempt to controvert what the Chair said.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to be inserted after line 17, of page 78, employing the language of the item in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up his amendment and let it be reported.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hope no one will urge a point of order against my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the Lever amendment insert: "including the payment of claims growing out of past and future purchases and destruction, in cooperation with the States, of animals affected by or exposed to, or of materials contaminated by or exposed to, any such disease, wherever found and irrespective of ownership, under like or substantially similar circumstances."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves a point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I was promised time. If I can not get it in my own right, I will offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the pending amendment insert a comma and the following words: "whether such disease be detected in the field, in transit, or after the cattle have arrived at an abattoir."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. MANN. Let us have the amendment read again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina provides an appropriation to be paid for cattle destroyed as the result of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, and so forth. My amendment proposes that those cattle shall be paid for, whether they happen to be seized and destroyed in the field or in transit, upon a railroad train or upon a steamboat, or whether found in a stockyard or an abattoir. I admit it raises a very large and serious question, but I contend it is in line with the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina and is simply in continuation of the amendment offered by him, and is entirely germane.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. The gentleman admits himself it is in pay for claims.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] catch the reading of the amendment?

Mr. LEVER. I thought I did.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to refer to the payment of claims——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the Chair permit me for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. If that is true, it would not be in order; but the Chair is about to make a suggestion. The amendment, on the face of it, has no provision that would require the payment for any cattle or anything. It simply extends the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to attempt to eradicate and arrest the disease even while the stock would be in transit or after their arrival at their destination.

Mr. STAFFORD. The payment is merely a limitation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know whether it is or not. I think it is in harmony with the present law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is really not subject to a point of order, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to do my duty in submitting the matter to the committee. If the committee is not satisfied with the amendment, it has its duty to perform in either voting it up or voting it down. A very large question is raised by the amendment. Under the food-inspection law the Secretary of Agriculture may condemn and have destroyed cattle found in the stockyards, and the owner gets no compensation for those cattle. It appears that we are not operating under the foot-and-mouth disease appropriation when we kill cattle in the stockyards, and that the allowance is made only when they are killed on the farm. My amendment proposes there shall be a square deal to the owners of these cattle wherever found, and that such owners shall participate in whatever Government expenditure is made and whatever State cooperation is to be had, just the same as is the case on the farm. In furtherance of the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk to have read this letter, which explains a case in point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, January 8, 1916.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MOORE: Referring to your letter of December 27 relating to the claim of the D. B. Martin Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., amounting to $4,184.15 for 84 cattle condemned under the meat-inspection law on or about February 15, 1915, you are informed that the company's claim for the value of these animals has been rejected. This action was taken for the following reasons:

Paragraph 1 of the meat-inspection act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat., 674), provides, in effect, that the Secretary of Agriculture may, at his discretion, cause an ante-mortem inspection to be made of all cattle before they are allowed to enter into any slaughtering establishment in which they are to be slaughtered and the meat and meat-food products thereof are to be used in interstate or foreign commerce, and that all cattle found on such inspection to show symptoms of disease shall be set apart and slaughtered separately from all other cattle, and when so slaughtered the carcasses of said cattle shall be subject to a careful post-mortem inspection as provided by the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. Paragraph 2 of the act provides for such post-mortem inspection and also that the inspectors shall mark as "Inspected and condemned" all carcasses and parts thereof of animals found to be unsound, unhealthful, unwholesome, or otherwise unfit for human food. This paragraph further provides that all carcasses and parts thereof thus inspected and condemned shall be destroyed for food purposes by the said establishment. Paragraph 19 of the act provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall make such rules and regulations as are necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of the act. Pursuant to this authority, the Secretary of Agriculture prescribed regulations governing both the ante-mortem and post-mortem inspection of animals at slaughtering and other establishments. Inasmuch as the cattle in question had been brought into the regular ante-mortem pens of the D. B. Martin Co., at an establishment operating under Federal meat inspection, they thereby became subject to the provisions of the meat-inspection law and the regulations prescribed thereunder. Upon an ante-mortem inspection the animals were found to be affected with foot-and-mouth disease. They were, therefore, condemned in accordance with the meat-inspection law and the regulations. The meat-inspection act does not provide for the reimbursement of owners for losses sustained on account of animals condemned as unfit for food purposes. Inasmuch as the animals were brought into an establishment operated under Federal meat inspection, they were not subject to the provisions of the act of January 25, 1915 (38 Stat., 795), for the reason that there was no "purchase and destruction" of the animals within the meaning of the latter-mentioned act.

In this connection it may be stated that the D. B. Martin Co. presented a claim for 50 per cent of the value of a bull which was found affected with foot-and-mouth disease in the pens of the National Stock Yards, at Philadelphia, Pa. Inasmuch as this animal, however, had not been brought into the company's establishment where inspection is maintained under the provisions of the meat-inspection law and consequently had not been offered for inspection under this law, this claim was allowed.

Very truly, yours, D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The point referred to in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture is that if the cattle are killed in an abattoir they are destroyed under the food-inspection law, and therefore there is no compensation; but if they are killed elsewhere under this appropriation for the foot-and-mouth disease, payment may be had.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that in such time as I have remaining I may offer another amendment and have it pending.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I offer this amendment? It involves an important question. I may have no other opportunity under the agreement that has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 79, line 17, after the word "disease," add the words:
"Provided, That no meat of cattle shall be admitted to the United States from any foreign country where the foot-and-mouth disease prevails."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to say that there is a widespread rumor that Argentine meat has come into this country from cattle afflicted with the foot-and-mouth disease; and if it is true, I think it ought to be stopped. That is the purpose of the amendment.

If I have any time left, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan, who asked a question.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I was going to ask the gentleman if his amendment was offered for the purpose of requiring the Federal Government to pay for a diseased animal that was sent to a packing house, condemned, and not permitted to enter on account of the disease?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad to answer the gentleman if I have time to do it. I believe that if the honest farmer whose cattle are seized can get pay from the Government for the cattle that are destroyed, the man to whom the honest farmer sells the diseased cattle ought also to have the same privilege. I hope that answers the gentleman.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it not a fact that the same rule that is applied to animals suffering from the foot-and-mouth disease ought also to apply to animals suffering from hog cholera?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Secretary of Agriculture is fearful, I think, that if an amendment like this one of mine is adopted, then there will have to be appropriations for hogs destroyed under the law in abattoirs.

Mr. HAUGEN. The same rule should be applied to all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think so. I do not see why the farmer should have a right to pass a diseased steer on to the abattoir and stick the man to whom he sells the animal. There are some David Harums left in the country, and the innocent should be protected. I think the same protection ought to be extended all along the line.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by showing what Pennsylvania has done in the way of cooperation on the foot-and-mouth disease.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The matter referred to above is as follows:

STATE FREE OF HOOF-AND-MOUTH DISEASE—VALUE OF ANIMALS SLAUGHTERED IN SUPPRESSING EPIDEMIC WAS $668,441.

HARRISBURG, January 26.

Pennsylvania is now virtually free of the foot-and-mouth disease, which last year was epidemic throughout the country. The cost to the Commonwealth in clearing out the disease on farms and in stockyards, where 28,551 animals were slaughtered, was $668,441.

Three premises were released from quarantine last week by the State live-stock sanitary board. Only one quarantined place now remains in the State. The new development of the disease in Illinois is being closely watched and every precaution is being taken to prevent the spread of the malady through shipments from the Chicago cattle yards.

During the outbreak, which was first noticed in this State in October, 1914, there were 788 farms infected. All animals were immediately destroyed at these places as the only remedy known to prevent its spread. A detailed report made by State Veterinarian Dr. C. J. Marshall shows that 15,166 cattle, 380 sheep, and 13,005 swine were killed.

Pennsylvania's share of the indemnity allowed under the law to the owners of animals destroyed amounted to $452,881 and for property destroyed $41,029. The cost for disinfectants and labor was great.

Lancaster County had 192 premises quarantined and 6,917 animals destroyed. Berks County had 125 places quarantined and 3,326 animals slaughtered. In Montgomery County there were 87 premises placed under quarantine, and 2,914 animals were killed. Allegheny County had 58 quarantined places and lost 1,368 animals; while York County had 52 premises under surveillance and 1,730 animals were slaughtered. Chester County had 44 places quarantined and 1,534 animals slaughtered.

The outbreak was the largest ever experienced in the United States, and the infection in Pennsylvania was nearly eight times as great as in 1908. The disease extended through 34 counties.

MUST KEEP MEAT SCREENED—VIGOROUS PROSECUTIONS WILL FOLLOW FAILURE TO OBSERVE LAW.

HARRISBURG, January 26.

Vigorous action on the part of the State live-stock sanitary board in enforcing the meat-hygiene law, passed by the last legislature to prevent prospective purchasers from handling steaks and cuts and making it mandatory on butchers to screen their products from flies, will follow the test case in Altoona.

The court there upheld the act, and a fine of $25 was imposed on John Snyder, a butcher. Snyder had been warned at a time when there was a typhoid epidemic in the city to screen his meats. With this as a basis, immediate action in prosecuting other dealers who refuse to obey the law will be taken.

FOREIGN MEATS SCORED—LIVE-STOCK ASSOCIATION SECRETARY RAPS SOUTH AMERICAN PRODUCT.

"As long as foreign hides, wool, and meats are permitted to enter the United States under present lax regulations foot-and-mouth disease will be a constant menace," said T. W. Tomlinson, secretary of the American National Live Stock Association, who was in Chicago recently.

"I believe England's infection is due to South American meats. The danger does not lie in the dressed meats, but in the burlap containers used. Every slaughterhouse in South America is infected with foot-and-mouth disease germs, and a more effective conveyer than burlap could not be imagined.

"The Federal Government is now investigating the cause of foot-and-mouth disease outbreaks in England, and it is probable that needed light will be thrown on the subject. What veterinary science does not know about this animal plague would fill a bulky volume."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the gentleman's amendment that it changes existing law. The act providing for the inspection of cattle is section 25 of the Agricultural appropriation act of April 23, 1897, and is as follows:

SEC. 25. That the importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle from any foreign country into the United States is prohibited: Provided, That the operation of this section shall be suspended as to any foreign country or countries, or any parts of such country or countries, whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall officially determine and give public notice thereof that such importation will not tend to the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious diseases among the cattle of the United States, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered, and it shall be his duty, to make all necessary orders and regulations to carry this section into effect, or to suspend the same as herein provided, and to send copies thereof to the proper officers in the United States, and to such officers or agents of the United States in foreign countries as he shall judge necessary.

This law provides for a prohibition against importation, but gives the Secretary discretionary power to waive the prohibition under certain conditions. The gentleman's amendment provides for a straight prohibition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. During the earlier consideration of this bill did not the gentleman say, in answer to an inquiry from the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that there was some inspection of carcasses now by the Bureau of Animal Industry?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I said that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then why would not the Bureau of Animal Industry have the power to continue the inspection as to foreign beef?

Mr. LEVER. The Bureau of Animal Industry has that power now; but the point of order I make is that the Bureau of Animal Industry also has the power, under the proviso that I have just read, to suspend the inspection. Now, the gentleman's amendment puts an absolute prohibition on the importation of cattle that are suspected, and so forth, whereas there is a certain discretion left to the Secretary of Agriculture under the present law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the contention of the gentleman from South Carolina can not be substantiated. He admitted during the course of the discussion, and I think his statement was correct, that an inspection of carcasses was already justified and in operation. I made these inquiries several times, with a view of ascertaining whether foreign meat from cattle destroyed in foot-and-mouth-disease areas, was coming into the great congested centers to be sold for food for the people, and the gentleman from South Carolina then stated that an inspection did prevail. I said I had my doubts about it, that I had made inquiries——

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from South Carolina had his doubts about it, and as the gentleman will remember——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I had the assurance of the gentleman from South Carolina that the matter was already covered by the Bureau of Animal Industry, which did make inspection of carcasses.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; that is very true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In this amendment I am submitting that if the Bureau of Animal Industry has the power now under the law to make inspections of carcasses at home, it has the power to make inspection of carcasses that come in from foreign countries.

Mr. LEVER. But the gentleman does not catch my point of order at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Therefore the amendment is entirely germane.

Mr. LEVER. No; the present law provides an absolute prohibition upon the importation of these cattle from foreign countries, but a proviso to the law lodges in the Secretary of Agriculture a certain amount of discretion. Now the gentleman's amendment is a complete prohibition against the importation, and therefore suspends, abrogates, and repeals the discretion that now exists under the law in the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that if the Secretary of Agriculture has the power to inspect and prohibit the use of carcasses of animals afflicted with the foot-and-mouth disease in this country, he would also have the power under direction given him by this body to destroy and prohibit the use of carcasses from animals afflicted with the foot-and-mouth disease coming from the Argentine Republic or any foreign country. These carcasses come in in competition with the cattle of the United States, and are a menace to the health of the consuming public of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, is there another amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry. The point of order was sustained as against the last amendment offered by me?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the first amendment—that is, the amendment as to abattoirs—was held to be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, how are we going to dispose of these amendments—vote on them now?

The CHAIRMAN. No; these amendments will be voted on at the end of the debate. The Chair has been proceeding on that theory——

Mr. MANN. There was no agreement to that effect.

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order that there was no agreement to postpone the vote on these amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entirely right, and the point of order is sustained. The Chair was interrupted before he had finished his statement. He was proceeding under that impression, but the moment his attention was called to it he realized his error. There are two amendments pending.

Mr. MANN. Let us vote on them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In view of the confusion, may we have that amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of Mr. LEVER's amendment insert a comma and the following words: "whether such disease be detected in the field, in transit, or after the cattle have arrived at an abattoir."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is that all animals which go into the packing houses which are found to be affected with the foot-and-mouth disease shall be slaughtered and payment made for them. The present method of expending this appropriation has been not to pay for such animals at all. The meat-inspection law governs in this case, and the meat-inspection law requires that animals found unfit for human food are slaughtered in the abattoirs, and no payment is made for them whatever.

The truth of the matter is that after the animal is found to have this disease and is slaughtered, it is of no value whatever and payment ought not to be made for it. More than that, if we should adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania it would be only fair that we should extend it for the payment not only of cattle that are suffering from foot-and-mouth disease, but cattle suffering from tuberculosis and lockjaw and all other diseases which, under the meat-inspection law, require their slaughter. Not only that, it would be necessary and fair to extend the same provision with reference to hogs that are coming into the slaughterhouse which are killed and rejected on the ground that they have cholera or tuberculosis, or some other contagious disease. The result would be to open the doors of the Treasury to all kinds of claims which are not allowed payment under the meat-inspection law. I trust the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The appropriation here is for a specific purpose—the foot-and-mouth disease, pleuropneumonia, and so forth. How can the gentleman extend it so far as to cover hogs and such things as that?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman's amendment would not extend it, but I said that probably a fair reasoning would be that the owner of hogs and cattle suffering from tuberculosis in the course of time would come to Congress and ask that it be done.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is not altogether fair that an allowance should be made for cattle destroyed on the farm and that cattle from the same herd, detected on the train or in the stockyards 10 days later, should go without allowance. There ought to be some equality about it. The gentleman ought to provide some kind of legislation to cover the apparent inequality of paying one man who is caught with diseased cattle and refusing to pay another one who is in the same boat.

Mr. LEVER. I say that the gentleman's amendment would set a very dangerous precedent, and I hope it may be voted down.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. If I want time, must I get it from the gentleman from Iowa?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought not to prevail for many reasons. Under the situation we have here now, as I understand it, the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] having been sustained, no payment will be made unless under very exceptional circumstances, for cattle destroyed in the hands of the farmer. This provides that cattle that get into the hands of the packer may be paid for, whereas if still in the hands of the farmer they are not to be paid for. The packers have made an enormous allowance on anything of that kind which will more than cover any loss they can sustain. While the foot-and-mouth disease was prevailing, as I understand it, the cattle were put in a division by themselves and bought by the packers at a price of 50 cents or $1 less per hundred. My colleague can state about that; but they were bought for very much less than the regular price. Altogether more than a million dollars was taken off the price of cattle bought during that time, and still we are asked to pay the packers what they lost or may lose in some similar cases.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The gentleman's position is that the packers have already discounted any loss that they may sustain by reducing the price to the farmer or shipper.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. COX. Let me put a hypothetical case to the gentleman. Here is a farmer in my district who has a herd of cattle afflicted with foot-and-mouth disease, but he has not discovered it. He puts the herd of cattle on the train and ships them to Chicago. They are put in the stock pens, and there it is discovered that they are afflicted. Does not the gentleman think that they ought to be paid for, when, if the disease had been discovered on the farm, they would have been paid for?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This amendment does not provide for that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not think that a packer or an abattoir keeper would deliberately buy cattle knowing them to be afflicted with the foot-and-mouth disease and knowing that he would have no chance to recover for them under the law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; they buy thinking that they may be afflicted, and they discount the price accordingly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think the packer would deliberately buy diseased cattle?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; he does not do that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Where does the farmer come in as to that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He will get his pay before the shipment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the packers would get left.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; the packer can take care of himself. The gentleman need not worry about the packers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not arguing the case from the standpoint of the packers, as the gentleman thinks, but here is a case of one concern that bought $7,000 worth of cattle which were condemned and destroyed, and when the claim was put in they said, "Oh, no; we destroyed them under the pure-food law. You have no right of recovery for foot-and-mouth disease under the pure-food law. If you want to recover from the Government, get your cattle destroyed under the law with reference to foot-and-mouth disease." The fact is that the cattle were killed and the loss occurred because of this Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde arrangement of the pure-food law.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not got the right law; it is not the pure-food law but the meat-inspection law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Illinois is right; it was the "food-inspection law." The gentleman's pure-food law is a pretty good law as far as it goes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If my time has expired, Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes longer.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not grant the gentleman any more time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, they would be no worse off than the farmer.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE].

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment. I think it would be opening a dangerous field. In the first place, in the sale of cattle infected by the foot-and-mouth disease the farmer is largely protected by quarantine law. There is a very small amount of cattle shipped into the markets that are infected by the foot-and-mouth disease, and no farmer would make a shipment if he had knowledge that anything of that kind existed. Another thing: The infection of cattle by the foot-and-mouth disease is so rapid in development that the farmer making the shipment is bound to know the condition of his cattle before the shipment is made. According to the line of argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], if the farmer is to be paid at the stockyards for his cattle that may be infected by the foot-and-mouth disease, we ought also to make payment to the farmer who ships hogs that are affected by cholera. The difference between the two classes of stock is that hog cholera is slow in its inception and operation. No farmer is making a claim under the pure-food act for his property that happens to be destroyed in the stockyards. But if we are to proceed upon the philosophy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that that ought to be done, it ought to extend to the farmer who ships his hogs that are infected by cholera.

To show that the farmer is active in this proposition to take care of his own stock before he puts it on the market, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that last year more than 4,000,000 hogs were infected by hog cholera, and that was only 50 per cent of the amount infected the year before, involving something like $40,000,000 lost to the farmer, for which he is making no claim, and under the theory of the gentleman from Pennsylvania he might have gotten that money if he had lost it in the stock shipped into the markets at Chicago or in one of the other great stock-market centers. Last year demonstrated how easily and quickly the farmer takes precaution to take care of his own stock in case of its infection. Last year there were between three and four hundred thousand hogs treated for hog cholera, and less than two-tenths of 1 per cent were lost under that treatment. So I say that if the farmer has the encouragement given him under this bill, we will get rid of a lot of this difficulty, a lot of the expenses that we are trying to hitch onto the Agricultural appropriation bill in payment for lost stock; and I send now to the Clerk's desk a letter that is full of good information that the general public ought to have with reference to hog cholera, because this is the only opportunity I shall have to bring the matter to the attention of the general public.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman sends to the Clerk's desk a letter, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1916.

Hon. CYRUS CLINE,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CLINE: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of April 11 asking for information concerning the losses from hog cholera and the progress being made with the serum preventive treatment.

Statistics for 1915 have not as yet been completed, but the indications are that the losses were between three and one-half and four million head, which would represent between thirty and thirty-five million dollars, or 50 per cent less than for the year 1913.

The bureau began hog-cholera work in the field in 1913 in three States, and has since extended it to 22 States. Part of this work has been referred to as hog-cholera county-control investigations, which have been along the line of experiments to determine the possibility of controlling the disease by quarantine and sanitary measures and the use of antihog-cholera serum, under which 15 stations have been established, two of these being in Indiana. The Indiana experiments cost the department during the calendar year 1915 about $32,000, and the indications are that the work will be continued in the same manner until the end of the present fiscal year. We hope to conduct work in Indiana during the fiscal year 1917 under some plan which will lend assistance to a greater number of districts along the line of control measures looking to eradication of the disease.

In connection with these experiments, to December 31, 1915, there were treated 234,136 hogs in infected herds, with a loss of 13.1 per cent. Of this number treated there were 85,547 hogs that showed evidence of cholera. During the same period 19,208 hogs were treated in well herds for protection, in which the loss was two-tenths of 1 per cent.

In addition to these county experiments, educational and demonstrational hog-cholera work was conducted in 10 States. This work is more or less State wide in advising farmers, through organizations and otherwise, of measures which may be taken to reduce losses and prevent cholera from reaching their herds.

Very truly, yours,

A. D. MELVIN, Chief of Bureau.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not wish to be understood to convey the idea that the number of hogs treated were diseased hogs?

Mr. CLINE. No; not all of them.

Mr. HAUGEN. They were well at the time they were treated.

Mr. CLINE. What I wish to say is 85,547 of these hogs that were treated had cholera, and were in herds with well hogs, and the loss was less than two-tenths of 1 per cent.

Mr. HAUGEN. But probably not a single one would have had cholera.

Mr. CLINE. I do not know. One thing is true, more than 85,000 of them had cholera, and according to Dr. Melvin and his associates the proper application of serum prevented the spread of the disease and in many cases cured it.

Mr. HAUGEN. I simply want it to appear in the RECORD, and I do not want it to go out here that the hogs were cured. Well hogs were treated.

Mr. CLINE. Oh, I know the position of the gentleman upon that subject and so do other Members of the House, and that is he does not believe the serum furnished by the Government to be either a cure or a preventive.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman should have the facts, and there should be no misrepresentation here.

Mr. CLINE. The facts are set out in the letter, and there are no misrepresentations. The letter speaks for itself, and the gentleman's voluntary statements do not impeach the fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD].

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the confusion that has arisen concerning the various points of order I think we are apt to lose sight of the fact that there is and has been a very serious condition existing in the Central States from a contagious disease among animals which is ravaging or has ravaged that part of the country. Of course I refer to the foot-and-mouth disease.

The legislation as it now stands, with a portion of the original bill stricken out upon a point of order, leaves the question of relief for the farmers and stock raisers who suffer loss from this disease in a most precarious condition.

I want to read the latter part of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]:

The Secretary of Agriculture may expend, in the city of Washington or elsewhere, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as he determines to be necessary, in the arrest and eradication of such disease.

Mr. Chairman, it has been a theory that has governed legislation for a great many years that there had better be no legislation than legislation that is uncertain.

Nothing can be more uncertain than this bill, as it now stands, upon the question of payment for losses caused by the foot-and-mouth disease.

There is no gentleman within this Hall to-day who can say what is meant by this amendment or the bill in its present condition, and I say that in no unkind criticism of the chairman of the committee who has introduced the amendment, as best he can, to obviate the points of order that have been raised and sustained against section 34 of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. I am very glad the gentleman has stated that. I am doing the best I can to avoid points of order being made against my proposition.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I realize the gentleman is offering as much as can be offered, by way of amendment, but that will not satisfy those who are in the future to sustain loss by reason of this disease or those who will have to rely upon this bill for the furnishing of the relief in that respect that they so much require.

In the State of Illinois—and I speak primarily for that State—the situation has been about as serious as the mind of man can well imagine.

The live stock of Illinois is valued at $308,000,000.

We have 5,000,000 head of swine in the State of Illinois, valued at $36,000,000.

We have two and a half millions of cattle in that State, valued at some $73,000,000, and for several years we have been afflicted with this disease, this plague, to an extent that has threatened the farmers and the stock raisers of our State with absolute bankruptcy consequent upon the loss of their property and their stock and the arbitrary and unnecessary interference with their business.

Now, that kind of a situation demands a real remedy at the hands of the Congress of the United States instead of a mere makeshift, as is provided by this amendment.

This condition has not only affected those who raise the stock of Illinois, but we have had numerous inspectors coming from the Department of Agriculture into the State of Illinois, who have most vigorously said to those who desired to assemble and hold meetings or gatherings, "You can not do so." They have said to our farmers that none of the products of the farm, the wheat, or the oats, or the corn, or the hay, may be marketed in those parts of the State where the disease existed.

They have said to those who desired to sell their property, "You can not hold public sales of property as you have advertised to hold them," or, in other words, to make the story as short as possible and consume no more time than is absolutely required, these inspectors from the Department of Agriculture absolutely laid an embargo upon all kinds of business or social activity among the farming population in those portions of the State where this disease was supposed to exist. And in doing so they added, in many instances, extreme insolence to the inconvenience which they caused.

In many cases, and I wish to make no unwarranted accusation, they have gone to the farming portions of the State and have wholly isolated certain districts, and within such areas imposed an absolute embargo upon all business on the part of the farmers and stock raisers.

Their justification for such acts has been that they desired to establish a quarantine against the hoof-and-mouth disease.

They have said that men shall not go from farm to farm within such district.

They have said that men and women shall not attend public meetings or gatherings; they have said that men shall not hold sales of farm property, that there shall be no form of communication that requires travel from one place to another, and they have done these things in many instances, as I personally know, in a manner that was absolutely and entirely arbitrary and that was wholly unwarranted.

And then at stated times, whether for the purpose of enabling the stockyards to handle the products of the farm, and obtain the same at a greater profit to such buyers, I do not know, but at stated times the embargo for a short period has been raised by such inspectors.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. In a moment I will—and when raised a glut of animals was thrown upon the buying markets in the city of Chicago, and when that market had all it could use or might require for that time the embargo and quarantine was put on again, with the result that the farmer was absolutely deprived of a large part of the benefit of the stock that he raised and was denied a large part of the money that he should have received for the same. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KINKAID. Does not the gentleman know that notwithstanding the restrictions which have been imposed that in many instances they have failed to be entirely efficient to prevent the spread of the malady?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. That question, it seem to me, is answered by the fact and circumstances so well known to us all.

It has not been effective, it has not even been efficient, and one of the things that has been absolutely amazing to me is that these inspectors, without the slightest precautions, come and go upon the farms where the foot-and-mouth disease exists, and where such farms are quarantined, and then insist no one else shall likewise go from farm to farm upon even necessary business.

Without taking the slightest precaution, these inspectors went from one farm to another farm, and traveled all over the country, and if there was any method of infecting the herds of Illinois more dangerous than another, it was by the acts of these traveling inspectors sent out by the Government of the United States for the alleged purpose of suppressing this disease.

It is extremely questionable if the United States Government has any right or authority to conduct a local quarantine.

This right was questioned by many of our farmers during the past few months, but, desiring to cooperate, the right of the Government was not tested in court by them.

The right to conduct this quarantine was vigorously asserted by the Secretary of Agriculture and all of the officers of that department.

In the future there will be a legal struggle in court caused by the arbitrary acts of the officers of this department, and the matter will be there tested, and when it is, in my judgment, it will be held that the United States Government does not have the right to conduct a local quarantine of stock and farms within a State.

I recognize that there was need of a quarantine.

I freely confess that energetic action was required to stamp out this disease and for the good that was done by the department I am willing to give praise, but I vigorously condemn the harsh and unnecessary actions of the officers of the Department of Agriculture during the existence of this epidemic.

I deplore the fact that the quarantine was so conducted by the Department of Agriculture as to give rise to a belief on the part of a great many people of the country that it was being manipulated in the interest of the stockyards and the stock buyers and was being used to the detriment of the farmer.

A quarantine of this kind should be conducted in such a manner as to be entirely free from suspicion.

This quarantine was not so conducted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I quite agree with what the gentleman has been saying as to the effect of this measure, but the point of order having been made, unfortunately, and this matter having been ruled out, has the gentleman now any amendment which he would suggest to cure the defects of which he speaks?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I was about to get to that point and will proceed at once.

This bill as it now stands leaves the matter entirely optional with the Secretary of Agriculture to say how he may expend this two and a half million dollars.

It is very doubtful if this bill, as sought to be modified by the pending amendment, will be found to be broad enough to warrant and require the payment by the Secretary of Agriculture for the stock killed on the farms of the country for the purpose of stopping the spread of hoof-and-mouth disease.

There should not be the slightest uncertainty about the remedy being complete when this large amount of money is to be expended, and we should make sure that the funds reach the place for which they are intended—that is, the hands of the farmers and stock raisers whose property has been destroyed.

The farmers and stock raisers have the absolute right to be properly recompensed for the loss which they sustain from this disease, when such loss is caused by the action of the Government in quarantining their premises and destroying their farm property or their live stock.

The only excuse upon our part for appropriating two and one-half million dollars or any other sum is that the farmers and stock raisers of the Nation shall be recompensed in a proper way for that part of the losses which they sustain from the ravages of the disease caused by the governmental effort to check the same.

To appropriate these sums and have a doubt exist as to whether the money will reach the ones we desire to protect and reimburse is wholly inexcusable.

It is much better to correct the doubt at this time than to complain about it when it is too late.

My next greatest objection is the fact that the provisions of this bill, if they are broad enough to furnish this relief, are to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture at long range from Washington.

The distance between the seat of Government at Washington and the farms of Illinois is too great to permit the proper and intelligent handling of this situation.

The fullest discretion and power is, by this proposed amendment, placed in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, and the action of his department is to be wholly unrestricted and may be entirely arbitrary.

I have always been opposed to giving the head of any of the administrative departments of the Government full power and unrestricted regulation of any subject.

When Congress abdicates its power to prescribe what shall be done by any department and turns such power all over to the Secretary thereof it is establishing a bureaucratic form of Government of which I do not and will not approve.

It is, of course, the easy way to legislate, and saves Congress much thought and trouble, but it does not serve the people as they are entitled to be served or safeguard them as they should be safeguarded.

Congress should by law prescribe what is to be done by the departments, and direct how it shall be done, and not leave the entire question to be handled by the departments as they may see fit.

No secretary of any department sitting in Washington unrestricted by legislative limitation, can understand the needs of a community as fully or as well as can its representative in Congress sent by such community to there represent it.

When a matter is so handled by a secretary of a department it will not be done either as efficiently or as understandingly or as sympathetically as the case may require.

If this be true of the heads of the departments, then how much more certain it is that the matter will be mismanaged, when it is left to a subordinate, as was the case in the management of the hoof-and-mouth disease in Illinois and the adjoining States.

The Department of Agriculture sent its inspectors to Illinois, and they mismanaged the epidemic of foot-and-mouth disease about as badly as it could be mismanaged.

There was not only mismanagement, but the attitude of many of these inspectors was insolent and arbitrary and unreasonable to the last degree.

Carrying out the thought of unrestricted power they established unwarranted quarantines, failed to establish quarantines where needed, declared stock to be affected that was not ill, and, where protest was made by the farmers, added threats of prosecution and imprisonment to their many mistakes.

From the arbitray acts of these men there was no appeal, and to submit—although with poor grace—was the only alternative.

It is safe to say, and entirely within the bounds of truth, that the actions of these inspectors has produced a very unfavorable opinion of this particular department in the minds of the farmers and stock raisers of Illinois.

Having these things in mind, I want to have this bill contain the safeguards that will prevent repetition of these unpleasant experiences and gross mistakes—experiences that not only were unpleasant but that entailed untold thousands of dollars of loss on the people of my State.

To this end this amendment should be broadened and perfected, and the arbitrary power it now gives to the Secretary of Agriculture should be taken from him.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. With reference to the conveyance of the germs of this disease from one farm to another within a segregated area, as I understand, these germs are carried by dogs or birds, by men themselves, going from one farm to another?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. That is the popular impression.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That is the testimony of science.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. We have heard their statement. Now, what would the gentleman substitute in place of these restrictions of indiscriminate travel from infected districts to one that is not infected? Must there not be restrictions?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Undoubtedly. I would adopt a greater degree of common sense than the inspectors sent out by the Department of Agriculture adopt. If it is dangerous for you to go from your farm to your neighbor's farm without going through the process of being cleansed of these germs, then it is equally dangerous for the inspector to do so. And yet a protest to these inspectors would be answered by threats of imprisonment and prosecution.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But the inspector claims he has cleansed himself of these germs and that he has been disinfected.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. The only thing about the inspector's claim is that in instance after instance, where I personally know the facts, it is not true.

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. At what date was the State of Illinois quarantined?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I can not tell you. I have not now in mind the precise date, but I live in the center of the territory affected, and I know the situation. My recollection is that a quarantine has been established several different times.

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. Do you know the time that the live-stock commission of the State acquiesced in the quarantine?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I am not trying to praise the officials of the State of Illinois or wrongfully condemn the officials of the United States, for I do know both were negligent of their duty. I do condemn their wrongful acts and their harsh and arbitrary actions.

I do know that this disease spread most rapidly to a disastrous extent and now again threatens to be revived.

We are at the point where we have got to have some relief by a suitable enactment of Congress.

And we do not get it by this paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. I understand that there are two amendments pending?

The CHAIRMAN. That is true.

Mr. GOOD. And the discussion is not on the amendments?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that we have a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent that I may extend further my remarks in the RECORD on this subject?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, just a word as to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. It seems to me he has offered an amendment that is impossible of adoption. He speaks of the foot-and-mouth disease, but the part of the section to which he offers the amendment relates to—

Foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, and other contagious or infectious diseases of animals which, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, threaten the live-stock industry of the country.

If the amendment were adopted, any animal infected with a serious disease, found anywhere—on a train, in the stockyards, in a slaughterhouse, no matter how it reached there—must be paid for by the Federal Government. It seems to me that the very reading of the amendment, in the light of what we know of the section of which it would become a part, shows it to be impossible.

Now, as to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] said of the gross misconduct of officials and employees of the Bureau of Animal Industry, there was an outbreak of that disease and an emergency existed. There was doubt, in the first instance, as to whether or not it was foot-and-mouth disease. It was first analyzed and diagnosed as stomatitis. There was some delay. Perhaps the officials were at fault in the first instance. I believe they were, and perhaps some blame attaches on that account. There was delay, which is always serious in a matter of that kind; there is no doubt about that. But afterwards the officials went to work skillfully and vigorously. It was not boys' play in which they were engaged; it was not a picnic; and when they imposed hardships upon farmers and stock raisers it was because it was necessary for them to do so. It is idle, it seems to me, for these gentlemen to come here now and air the complaints of their constituents upon whom these onerous conditions were imposed.

And I know, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that when gentlemen came here and appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and voiced complaints of this kind, when they were cross-examined and confronted by testimony of others, they did not hold to their original statements. Their statements, made with so much feeling and so positively, were materially modified and softened. And I venture to say, with all consideration to the distinguished gentlemen who here relate stories they have heard, that many of the stories they relate are not entirely correct. I accept without question the statements of gentlemen who here speak from personal knowledge, and I know also that they relate correctly what they have heard; but in many instances there has been lack of full information, and I am sure that many stories have been told by parties who suffered loss and who are aggrieved at the action of officials of the bureau—stories that are not entirely correct in their statement of facts. Interested parties who think they have a grievance because their property was destroyed or their business was interfered with have indulged in exaggeration and misstatement. After the bureau officials had properly diagnosed the disease they acted promptly, vigorously, and with splendid effect, as the result shows; and now, after the disease has been stamped out, the story of the difficulties and trials, the hardships and loss, imposed upon and suffered by the owners of live stock is not at all interesting; it is certainly of no value to us in the framing of law for taking care of another outbreak, if it shall unfortunately come.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GOOD. Before that is put, I think it is in order to vote on the amendment that is pending.

Mr. LEVER. They have perfected the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I offer this, then, as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting at the close the following:

"Provided, That no part thereof shall be used to enforce any quarantine order, rule, or regulation requiring or permitting the separation of any live stock in any live-stock yards where live stock is offered for sale on account of any such live stock having come from or through any area of the country that had been quarantined in any way for foot-and-mouth disease, and no part thereof shall be used to enforce any quarantine rule or regulation providing for the maintenance in any such stockyards of any quarantine section thereof where live stock are offered for sale that are separated from other live stock in said yards because such live stock came from or through any area of the country that had been quarantined in any way for the foot-and-mouth disease."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, without examining that, I reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, according to the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, there were slaughtered last year under quarantine orders 168,000 animals affected with foot-and-mouth disease, valued at $5,700,000. But this sum does not measure the damage to the farmers and cattle feeders because of the ravages of that disease. Col. French, a large stock raiser and prominent citizen of Iowa, stated before the Subcommittee on Agriculture and Forestry of the United States Senate, which investigated the subject, that the actual loss to the cattle feeders and growers of the Nation because of a quarantine regulation requiring fat cattle coming from a modified quarantine area to be placed in the quarantine section of our stockyards amounted to more than $113,000,000, or twenty times the loss sustained by the farmers, because their cattle were slaughtered under quarantine regulations.

The amendment which I have offered to prevent a duplication of this loss is as follows:

Provided, That no part thereof shall be used to enforce any quarantine order, rule, or regulation requiring or permitting the separation of any live stock in any live-stock yards where live stock is offered for sale on account of any such live stock having come from or through any area of the country that had been quarantined in any way for foot-and-mouth disease, and no part thereof shall be used to enforce any quarantine rule or regulation providing for the maintenance in any such stockyards of any quarantine section thereof where live stock are offered for sale that are separated from other live stock in said yards because such live stock came from or through any area of the country that had been quarantined in any way for the foot-and-mouth disease.

I have drawn a rough sketch to illustrate my amendment. I have marked here a quarantined area from which matured cattle will be permitted under quarantine regulations to be shipped to a live-stock market for immediate slaughter. Under the quarantine regulations when they arrive at the market they are placed in the quarantine section of the yards. This point [indicating] I have outlined on the drawing would represent the stockyards. The shaded portion is the quarantine section. At the same time that cattle are coming into the yards from a quarantined or modified quarantined area cattle are also coming into the yards from free areas. The cattle that come from the free area are sent to the other section of the yards. These cattle are then all offered for sale, whether in the free or quarantined section. Twenty-six buyers are reported to be on hand to buy the matured cattle, but only 6 of the buyers buy stock that is placed in the quarantine section. When night comes and all the fat cattle in yards are sold and disposed of the 6 buyers that have bought the fat cattle from the quarantine section at a reduction of from 50 cents to $1 per hundred over the price commanded by cattle of like grade in the free area drive their purchases out of the same gates together to the same packing houses, where they are slaughtered together, and the consumer who purchases the meat pays the same price for his beefsteak that comes from steers sold in the quarantine section that he pays for steak made from steers sold in the free section. It must be remembered that all cattle for immediate slaughter from a section that is under any kind of quarantine must be thoroughly inspected by a Government inspector and pronounced free from all disease before a permit will be granted giving authority to move them. The net result of maintaining this quarantine section is that the feeder whose cattle are sent to that section must accept from 50 cents to $1 per hundred pounds less than he would otherwise receive for them, and the consumer pays the same price for the beef products of such cattle that he would be compelled to pay if they had been sent to the free section. And the loss, therefore, to the farmer and feeder, as estimated by Col. French, since the outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease in this country totals the enormous sum of more than $113,000,000.

The hearings before the committee to which I have referred are very illuminating. It is remembered that at the outbreak of this disease the quarantined or modified areas usually comprised a whole county. Obviously the six packers buying in the Chicago yards would be interested in having this area as large as possible, and so it was made coextensive with county lines. And yet in many instances thousands of matured cattle, ready for shipment, were held at a loss for more than 90 days, and when shipment was permitted such cattle upon arrival at Chicago were placed in the quarantine section.

Some idea may be obtained from the testimony of Wilbur W. Marsh, Democratic national committeeman from Iowa, who testified before the Senate committee as to the real author of these quarantine regulations. Testifying under oath, Mr. Marsh said:

I think the veterinarians connected with the Bureau of Animal Industry have been largely trained by the stockyards interests of the United States. I think they approached this question thoroughly imbued with the ideas that the stockyards people desired them to have. I think that a veterinary surgeon who visits with these able gentlemen, the splendid, able fellows who run these stockyards, comes away taking the interest, perhaps, that a particular crowd of people want him to. And they have been watching and taking care of the Bureau of Animal Industry, so far as the veterinary part of it is concerned, for a very long time.

In this connection I wish to remind the committee that it was developed at said hearings that a very prominent official connected with Swift & Co., Mr. John J. Ferguson, is the secretary and treasurer of an organization composed of veterinarians and of the officials of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, and seems to be very closely associated with those in authority who have made these quarantine rules and regulations.

I do not want to be understood as opposing quarantine regulations. I recognize that very stringent quarantine regulations are necessary to stamp out and eradicate a disease so destructive as the foot-and-mouth disease. The regulation could not be too stringent to secure such results. They would work hardships no doubt, but they ought not to be made at all times to operate against the weak and to add to the profits of the strong and the wealthy.

I personally took up with the Secretary of Agriculture shortly after the outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease in this country the proposition that there ought to be a quarantine effective at all of the principal stockyards of the country, which would prevent a reshipment of cattle. This was on the theory that the owner of matured healthy cattle should be permitted to market them and that only cattle and live stock for immediate slaughter should be sent to the live-stock markets. By such a quarantine regulation those who deal in feeders and stockers would have their business curtailed, but the man who had matured his product could have a market for it, especially when after inspection it was found to be healthy. The Secretary of Agriculture told me when I proposed this regulation that the stockyards interests of the country would never stand for such a regulation. On this subject I quote again from the testimony of Mr. Wilbur W. Marsh:

I would say this, that with a large percentage of the business of the stockyards, and consequently their profits, coming from reshipments of cattle back into the country, their inclination would be to magnify the danger of any infectious or contagious disease which would interfere with their business, and the veterinarians coming in contact with those people constantly would reflect their business.

And so it was not until after the lapse of months and the spread of this disease to 21 States of the Union that the Bureau of Animal Industry finally adopted a sensible method of preventing a reshipment of live stock from certain of the yards to which live stock from quarantined or restricted territory had been sent.

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. Who created that quarantine section?

Mr. GOOD. My understanding is that it was created by the stockyards, in cooperation with the State and National authorities.

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. It was created by the Live Stock Commission of the State of Illinois and the veterinarians, was it not?

Mr. GOOD. It may have been created by them; but my point is that large sums of money were appropriated out of the Federal Treasury to keep Federal inspectors there. It would have been an empty order without large expenditures of public money to carry it into force and effect. My amendment simply provides that not a dollar appropriated by this act shall be expended to discriminate against the farmers and feeders and in favor of the stockyards and their allies, the packers.

Mr. Leonard, the president of the Union Stock Yards & Transfer Co., was asked by Senator KENYON who got the benefit of that reduction of from 50 cents to $1 per hundred in the price of these cattle sent to the quarantine section, and he answered that he did not know; that he did not; that he supposed the buyers did. He was asked, "Do not these cattle all go to the packers?" And he answered, "Yes."

It is hardly conceivable that such a thing could exist in this country. Yet not only did it exist, but it had the sanction of a great department of this Government. My amendment provides that we shall not spend a dollar to maintain a quarantine section in any public stockyards where live stock is offered for sale and thus discriminate against any man whose cattle may be shipped from the quarantine section. If you want to read a scathing denunciation of this method, read the testimony of Mr. Wilbur W. Marsh before the Senate committee.

I do not know whether these men at the head of this Bureau of Animal Industry are Democrats or Republicans. It is not a political question. I am as much opposed to a bureaucracy that exists under one administration as I am to a bureaucracy that exists under another, and I am unwilling to give to a few men in the Department of Agriculture, whom Mr. Marsh, perhaps the most prominent Democrat in my State, says are controlled by the live stock and packing interests of this country, the power to discriminate against the grower and feeder of cattle in favor of the packers. This bureaucracy ought to be shorn of some of its power. In its attempt to stamp out the foot-and-mouth disease it struck hard and expensive blows at the cattle feeders and soft and profitable blows at the packers and owners of stockyards. Its plans showed not only the lack of business experience but exhibited the vice of favoritism. Its plan of eradicating the foot-and-mouth disease was as expensive to the feeder as it was profitable to the packer and stockyards interests. I hope the amendment I have offered, which will put a stop to this procedure, will prevail.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to dispose of the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. I will state that the amendment I have offered certainly is not subject to a point of order. I have one in my pocket that is; but I drew that as a limitation, pure and simple, and if words can be employed that are a limitation upon an appropriation I have attempted to employ them here.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman very frankly that it is a very close question—I appreciate that—as to whether or not it is in order. But it occurs to me, from a hasty examination of the amendment, that it interferes with the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, the discretion which he exercises under the law, and to that extent it would be a change of existing law, and therefore subject to a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. May I ask the gentleman this question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. I very frankly confess that it is a very close question.

Mr. GOOD. The only thing it interferes with is the discretion of the Secretary in the power to spend money to maintain that quarantine in the stockyards. That is clearly a limitation.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that unless the Secretary has that discretion, you almost destroy his entire plan of operations in the eradication of this disease.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, whether on this point of order or on the merits of the matter, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the time for debate has been limited.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It has been limited by the committee. I have not taken any time on this bill——

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes, not to be taken out of the time already fixed.

Mr. LEVER. May I couple with that the request that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] be allowed five minutes?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. And with the further statement that I will object to any further extensions.

Mr. MANN. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] may have five minutes, and the gentleman from South Carolina asks that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] may have five minutes, the time mentioned not to be taken out of the time already agreed upon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, there is not in this country anything more autocratic than a small representative of a Government bureau exercising authority out in the country. [Applause.] One of the representatives of the Department of Agriculture a year ago in February, a little bit of a whippersnapper who had probably just graduated from a veterinary college somewhere, was appointed by the department with all authority. He went into Cowley County, Kans. An old brindled cow was found in that section of country that had had foot-and-mouth disease. This little 2 by 4 fellow put under quarantine every feed yard in Cowley County, one of the largest counties in the State of Kansas. No feed yard was closer than 15 miles to where that case of foot-and-mouth disease was found. Many feed lots had matured their stock. They were ready for the market. They were kept there for 60 days and 90 days after the stock had matured. This was done by order of this little fellow who kept feed lots locked, and was backed up by Mr. Melvin, the chief of the bureau, the chief autocrat of bureaucracy in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is there any redress whatever for that?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Absolutely none. The owners of the cattle in the quarantined feed lots lost hundreds and thousands of dollars at the mere whim of this little fellow whose authority ought to have been revoked and the gates unlocked and the cattle taken to the market and sold, because there was absolutely nothing the matter in any one of these feed lots or with any steer in them.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does the gentleman know that with all this inefficiency and all this arbitrary action this is the only country on the face of the earth in which an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease was ever eradicated? [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do know the work of eradicating the disease could have been done with ordinary intelligence. What the people object to who were directly affected, and what I object to is the unnecessary things that were done, that the exercise of plain common sense and even a little experience with practical affairs would have avoided.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Did the brindled cow have foot-and-mouth disease?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not certain.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. If she did have foot-and-mouth disease, then the brindled cow ought to have been segregated, ought she not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. These feed lots were 15 miles away from where this brindled cow was, and no case of foot-and-mouth disease developed nearer than that, and there was nothing to show that any steer in any of these feed lots was in any way infected.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Were any of these feed lots close to the county line?

Mr. CAMPBELL. One of them was, but the stock in the adjoining county was sent to the market ad libitum.

Mr. CULLOP. That is the point I want to bring out, that within 2 miles of it in another county they permitted stock to be shipped to market.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, certainly; and stock went through on the train, through that county. The quarantine was against Cowley County only in that part of the State.

Mr. CULLOP. And quarantine by counties is absolutely wrong.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; but the law is administered by these little fellows who have the authority of a bureau that is more autocratic than any bureau outside of Russia, and is un-American. It does not fit in with a republican form of government. It does not fit in with common sense, and is not necessary in the operation of a good law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I should not have asked for this time if it had not been to explain this diagram, which has been prepared by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. The gentleman speaks about a quarantine area. When quarantine regulations were first formulated by the Department of Agriculture no stock at all could be shipped out of an area under quarantine. This absolute restriction, or rather prohibition, as to the shipment and sale of stock worked hardship in many cases, and as a result the department modified its policy. Now, what was the modification? It was agreed that any live stock in any area under quarantine, after an inspection by a competent veterinary doctor, might be shipped to any market in the United States and sold, subject to immediate slaughter at that particular market. This was a method devised by the department to permit live stock in good health and free from infection to be marketed from those sections which were under quarantine. Such live stock when received at any stockyards was yarded in a particular part of the yards, known as the quarantine or closed section. Stock was sent into this area only from the sections of the country that were under quarantine, and if it could not be reshipped from that market it had to be sold for immediate slaughter. The man who shipped his stock to the yards shipped it knowing the fact that it had to go there to be sold for immediate slaughter.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Not at present, thank you. Now, at the same time from free areas of the country stock was being shipped to this market, and the stock from any of these free sections could be sold to be shipped to any markets in this country or in the world. There was thus in the same yards two sections, because stock was received under two conditions. Live stock from unaffected areas enjoyed all the benefits which an unrestricted market bestows. It was under no disability because it had not been subject to any possible infection. Live stock from infected areas did not enjoy such privileges nor could such privileges be extended with safety. These restrictions were not wholly imposed by Federal regulations. Many States refused to permit stock from infected States to come within its borders. I recall very distinctly that the State of Pennsylvania refused to permit any cattle from Illinois to pass over its territory, and thereby placed a practical embargo on cattle shipments from the Union Stock Yards at Chicago to all eastern markets.

This arrangement to permit the sale of stock held within quarantine areas was purely and solely for the benefit of the owners of the live stock. They did not have to ship it to Chicago; they could ship it to Indianapolis or any market in the United States with the understanding that when it got to that particular market it must be sold for immediate slaughter. The confining of such stock to a particular area of the yards was for convenience in inspection and tracing such shipments. Here was a common-sense solution of an extremely difficult matter vital to the live-stock producers of the United States, and suggested wholly in their interests.

Now, replying to the criticisms which have been made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], I want to call attention again to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan.

This country is the only country in the world that has been able to eradicate the foot-and-mouth disease after it had been distributed over a large area of its territory. The great country of Germany has failed to do it, and the farmers have this dread disease fixed on them permanently. It will stand as one of the great achievements of our Government that the Bureau of Animal Industry has been able to do in America what no other Government on the face of the earth has ever been able to do under like conditions. [Applause.]

It is a fact that when the disease suddenly broke out in many sections of the United States before anyone detected its presence the bureau ordered a quarantine by counties, because a county is a political unit common to all our States, and it was the easiest way to establish quickly an effective quarantine; but as soon as the situation was well in hand they limited the quarantine area, and where a single outbreak occurred the area placed under quarantine was often limited to a circle of 5 miles in diameter from the center of the outbreak. Thus, as soon as it was possible in a practical way, the Department of Agriculture modified the rigid quarantine in every possible manner. They only quarantined the counties in the first place, as I say, because they recognized it as an existing legal unit, and it was so recognized by States and by the National Government. It was the obvious action to take in an emergency.

In my own State I am glad to say that our State authorities cooperated with the department and we stamped out this dreaded scourge. In doing this we recognize that it was the greatest service the Department of Agriculture ever gave to the State of Indiana since it was created. It is easy enough for gentlemen to come here, now that the danger is past, and criticize the Department of Agriculture. It may be safe, after your constituents feel for the moment that they are past the danger, to come here and talk about the autocratic power exercised by the Department of Agriculture in suppressing this plague; and yet I want to say to these critics that when this dreadful disease was spreading over the United States, threatening absolutely the financial interest of every man owning cattle or hogs in the United States, if such speeches had been made against the department it would have probably beaten the men that made them on the floor of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STEELE].

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have not taken much of your time during this session. However, I think this is one of the most important items in this bill. I feel keenly the criticisms that have been heaped upon the Agricultural Department here before this committee. I feel that an injustice has been done. These people who tried to stamp out and did stamp out one of the greatest scourges this country ever had in so short a time seems to me ought to have commendation at your hands instead of this criticism. [Applause.] I am very sorry I have not the time to fully go through this case with you, but I have prepared a few statements which I will read.

Mr. Chairman, since the beginning of the consideration of this bill it has been very disappointing to me to see so much time taken up by some Members who make few if any suggestions for the betterment of the bill, but who seem to think that the agricultural interests of the country will be furthered by the use of their eloquence on this floor in attacking certain bureaus of the Department of Agriculture and finding fault with the administration of their work. It is not to be supposed that the work of such a great arm of our Government as the Department of Agriculture could be administered without making an occasional mistake, for we here who have been farmers all our lives realize that there is no farmer, no matter how well educated and experienced he may be in the science and practice of farming, who does not make an occasional mistake or who is not guilty frequently of an oversight or an error of judgment in solving the problems of the farm. The particular adverse criticism against the department which I have in mind is that which has been directed against the Bureau of Animal Industry for winning its battle against the last terrible outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease. At this point, in order to show the extent of the ravages of the disease, which covered 22 States and the District of Columbia, I shall ask permission to have incorporated in the RECORD in connection with my remarks a statement published by the Department of Agriculture showing the progress of the work of eradication up to February 9, 1915:

[1] Number of counties in each State given n order to show approximate area of State involved.

Illinois: All premises where herds have been slaughtered have either been disinfected or are being disinfected. Animals of herds awaiting slaughterare not included in total number of animals, as reports on herds awaiting slaughter are not complete.

Pennsylvania: Work of disinfection started as soon as slaughtered animals are buried. Few new herds.

Never before in the history of the country had there been such an extensive outbreak of the disease, but our Department of Agriculture performed the unparalleled achievement of completely eradicating it by March 31, 1916, just 18 months after the first case was discovered. This great achievement seems all the more remarkable when one considers that in England, Germany, and Denmark, and in countries in South America they have never succeeded in stamping it out. Despite the fact that this victory of the Department of Agriculture has been lauded in the editorial columns of our leading agricultural publications and by leaders in agricultural work in this country, just a few days ago, to my utter amazement, my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] arose on this floor and severely censured the agents of the bureau for the methods they employed in their successful fight against the disease. If these gentlemen had been Members of the House in 1908, during a Republican administration, I wonder if they would then have attacked the men in charge of the work of fighting the outbreak of the disease in that year, who happened to be the selfsame men whom they now criticize so severely for accomplishing the conquest of the ravages of the plague in 1914 and 1915. The time allotted to me will not permit of my answering fully the unwarranted attacks upon the department by these gentlemen, whose speeches it is plain to see were made for political effect; but I hope to have my remarks extended in the RECORD, and thus present some facts in regard to the history of this disease, the methods employed in its eradication abroad and in this country, and a detailed account of how the Department of Agriculture succeeded in wiping it out in the years 1914 and 1915.

The tenor of the remarks on this subject by my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HULL] on April 13, 1916, would seem to indicate that the quarantining of infected districts is essentially a State prerogative, and that the Government was guilty of usurping State rights when it stepped in and proceeded to put into practice the methods of combating the disease in the past which experience had proven to be the only successful way of destroying the plague. I am amazed at the stand taken by the gentleman on this question, and especially after he has stated that he kept in full touch with the situation in Iowa. I wonder if he knows what was said on the subject of the control of the disease by "Tama Jim" Wilson, former Secretary of Agriculture, and one of the greatest agriculturists Iowa or any other State ever produced. [Applause.] Here is what Mr. Wilson said at the hearings on the question before the appropriations committee of the Iowa Legislature in March, 1915:

> Foot-and-mouth disease is one of the most contagious of all the maladies that affect domestic animals. When the outbreak occurred at Portland, Me., an importation of affected animals was driven to the quarantine station. A yoke of oxen crossed the path where the affected cattle had been driven the day previous and got foot-and-mouth disease. Mature reflection leads me to conclude that in the future the Federal Government should handle the whole matter and pay the bills. It is a foreign invasion that should be suppressed by the General Government of all the people, which has the power to raise money by taxing the people.
> A litigious spirit encouraged by a local court makes delay, and delay endangers all the States.
> The Federal Government has in its service the ablest scientists in the land along lines of animal diseases. The Department of Agriculture has control of all the telegraphic dispatches for an hour every morning. It can learn of any outbreaks sooner than any State can and act more promptly.
> During the uncertainty brought about by the fever-tick insect some years ago, States quarantined against States, and local courts upheld local jurisdictions and also charged fees from cattle owners crossing the State lines, which was exceedingly annoying. Some States at this time are behaving queerly regarding foot-and-mouth disease, and we may have repetitions of what was done some years ago on account of cattle-fever ticks.

Now, I agree with Mr. Wilson. I believe that since the spread of the disease in the past has always been a national calamity, the Nation should exercise sole supervision of the work of fighting it. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, which framed this bill, I shall vote for it as it now stands, although I should personally prefer to have the appropriation provided for in the bill for the purpose of meeting future outbreaks of the disease increased to $5,000,000 and this amount set aside in order that, in the event of future outbreaks, the infected animals could be slaughtered immediately and the farmers reimbursed promptly by the Government in full for the loss. Such a plan, I believe, would be more effective in gaining the cooperation of the farmer in stamping out the disease. It would eliminate the usual red tape necessary to be gone through with when the Government pays one half and the State the other half of the loss. I believe that the Secretary of Agriculture should be authorized to draw on this fund yearly for enough money to send a dozen or so of inspectors from the Bureau of Animal Industry to Europe and South America for the purpose of studying the causes of the outbreaks of the disease in the countries affected and their methods of the control of it.

If this were done yearly, the department would always have trained men available for supervising the work of checking future outbreaks of the disease in this country. I believe also that the salaries these inspectors should be paid should be on the basis of a graduated increase, in order to make the service sufficiently remunerative to induce them to remain in it instead of going out of the service, after a few years' experience, into other fields of activity more attractive from the salary standpoint. I am informed by the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry that of the seven or eight hundred trained men who made up the army of the department which stamped out the disease in 1908 only 145 were still in the service in 1914. In 1914 and 1915 the bureau had approximately 900 men in the field battling against the spread of the disease. It can reasonably be expected that if conditions in this work are not made more attractive to those men from the salary standpoint a great majority of them will enter other fields within the next few years, and should another outbreak occur the bureau will again be handicapped by a lamentable lack of trained men.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is the gentleman in favor of eliminating that part of the bill which provides for the payment to the farmers for cattle killed by the Bureau of Animal Industry?

Mr. STEELE of Iowa. I am not.

The origin of foot-and-mouth disease, like that of many other contagious diseases, is a mystery. Foot-and-mouth disease is supposed to have reached Europe from Asia about 200 years ago. From Europe it was disseminated through channels of commerce, and has appeared at one time or another in nearly every civilized country of the world, and it is now indigenous to many foreign countries, especially in Europe, Asia, and South America.

It is recognized as the most highly contagious animal disease, and none of the species of our domestic animals is immune from it. Cattle, hogs, and sheep are most susceptible, but dogs, cats, poultry, and even human beings have frequently been known to succumb to it.

The germ that causes this disease has never been seen nor isolated. It is presumed from analogy to be an organism of such small size that it easily finds its way through the finest filters, and no one has been able to see it by the aid of any microscope even of the highest power. For over a century this strange enemy has been attacking the live-stock industry of Europe, and often with terrible effect. It hides in crevices and cracks; it survives in dark, damp places; it is dropped from the wings of a bird in flight; it is borne on objects carried by the wind; it travels in vehicles on the lines of commerce; it clings to the clothing of man; it hides in the hair and fur of animals; and it is carried on the bodies of insects. Nature has wonderfully provided for the perpetuation of this dreaded enemy, and it has not only successfully defied annihilation but gradually it has extended its domain.

In those countries where it is permanently implanted it is dreaded more than any other animal scourge and causes more damage than all other contagious diseases combined. Dr. Cope, an eminent English authority, states that as nearly all classes of animals on the farm are susceptible, the indirect losses are much greater in the case of foot-and-mouth disease than rinderpest or pleuropneumonia, and that in England it has caused enormous losses and inconvenience, greater than all other contagious diseases combined. Heffner, speaking of the prevalence of foot-and-mouth disease in Germany, states that it has caused much greater losses in that country than all other enzootic diseases combined.

The loss suffered by Germany in 1892, when over 1,500,000 head of cattle, over 2,000,000 sheep and goats, and over 400,000 pigs were affected, is estimated at $25,000,000, and the outbreak of 1911 cost that country considerably more.

In the small country of Denmark, which compares in size with the States of Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Massachusetts, the disease has caused enormous losses. In 1892 about 400 herds were affected, in 1911 no fewer than 1,285 herds were attacked, and in 1914, at about the same time the disease made its appearance at Niles, Mich., the disease began to spread in Denmark again, and continued to spread so rapidly that 5,734 infected herds were reported between November, 1914, and August, 1915, a period of nine months. Dr. Bang, of Copenhagen, at the present time probably the most eminent authority on foot-and-mouth disease, has stated that by the end of that period of nine months the aggregate loss to the owners of the diseased cattle in milk alone amounted to about $1,250,000.

These are but two of many similar examples of the losses in Europe at the high tide of the disease. The live-stock producers are obliged to suffer such losses because the sanitary authorities have been unable by their method to eradicate, and in many instances even successfully control the spread of, the disease, notwithstanding the unlimited police power given to sanitary authorities, including military assistance and the most scientific application of quarantine, isolation, and disinfection.

The United States is again free from foot-and-mouth disease. We should feel very grateful that the Federal and State sanitary authorities have again succeeded in eradicating the disease, notwithstanding almost insurmountable obstacles. This has been accomplished in spite of injunction proceedings and all the criticism and unjust abuse that have been heaped upon the shoulders of our sanitary authorities that were already bending under a heavy load of responsibility to hold above the tide the general live-stock interests of the country regardless of the clamor that arose from those who had never before experienced the necessity for taking such measures as must be used to control foot-and-mouth disease.

This dreaded animal pest has been carried to our shores six different times during the past 46 years, and each time it has been successfully eradicated. Our first invasion occurred in 1870, when the disease was introduced into New England, New York, and New Jersey by way of Canada, where the infection was brought by an importation of cattle from Scotland. The conditions were highly unfavorable for the spread of the disease, and nature contributed freely in stamping it out. In 1880 there were two or three lots of animals imported which were found to be affected with the disease on arrival. The introduction of foot-and-mouth disease in 1870 and again in 1880 through the importation of live stock revealed the necessity of some protective measures against the introduction of disease from that quarter, and in 1884 the American quarantine of imported stock was imposed. Since then we have had but one outbreak in this country traceable to imported live stock. That outbreak was detected at the Portland (Me.) quarantine station in 1884 and spread to a few herds outside of the station. Since the development of a stringent system of inspection and quarantine of imported live stock no instance of that kind has occurred. In 1902 the disease is supposed to have resulted from an importation of cowpox-vaccine virus from Japan that was contaminated with the virus of foot-and-mouth disease. This outbreak was confined to four States—Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Vermont—and was entirely eradicated in six months. The next outbreak occurred in 1908, and was also caused by the importation from Japan of virus contaminated with foot-and-mouth disease. The disease appeared first in Michigan, and from there spread to four States—Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland. This outbreak was stamped out in about five months.

In all the previous outbreaks the disease was limited to small areas, the infection traveled in an easterly or southeasterly direction generally, and it did not reach the big live-stock distributing centers. From 1908 to 1914 this country was free from this cattle plague, but suddenly it appeared in a port of the country where such a thing would be least expected.

The latest invasion is supposed to have reached the farm of Mr. W. E. Hoadley in August, 1914. Its source is unknown to this day. The disease smoldered there for weeks and was not recognized, owing to its mild character and its apparent disinclination to spread. From September 3, the date the first Detroit inspector made his visit, to October 7, the date of the second Detroit inspector's visit, the disease had only spread from two to six herds, but at this time it began to increase in virulence and to assume a more typical form. Upon the receipt of the latter's report, on October 10, an expert from Washington was immediately sent to Niles, Mich., and the disease was positively diagnosed by animal inoculations on October 15.

In tracing back to the farm shipments of live stock that had gone out of the infected area it was impossible to get any information from the farmers that indicated that any of the animals shipped by them were diseased at that time, and there was some hope that the Chicago stockyards might escape the infection.

The slaughter of the diseased herds in Michigan commenced, the quarantine was being effectually enforced by the Michigan State authorities, and the work of eradication was progressing rapidly and hopefully when, on October 27, a report was received from Blissfield, Mich., that a carload of steers shipped out of the Chicago stockyards were sick. On October 28, 1914, the steers were inspected, and three were found to be affected with very acute lesions of foot-and-mouth disease, while the others in the carload lot had not, as yet, developed any symptoms of the disease. The Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry was immediately notified, and a telegram was sent to Dr. S. E. Bennett, inspector in charge of the yard work at Chicago, notifying him of this instance and instructing him to take every precaution. The discovery of the disease near Blissfield resulted in the immediate quarantine of Lenawee and Monroe Counties in Michigan, and pointed with such grave suspicion to infection in the Union Stock Yards that an order by the Secretary of Agriculture was prepared, effective October 31, 1914, "quarantining those yards as a precaution and permitting animals to be shipped from them only for immediate slaughter." No disease had yet been discovered in the yards, and there was yet some hope that they might escape, for on investigation it was learned that the 3 steers that showed the disease October 28 at Blissfield came from a lot of 49, the other 46 of which went from the Union Stock Yards to Chenoa, Ill., and among which the disease had not developed, and it never did develop in them. This seemed to indicate that the steers that went to Blissfield, Mich., might have picked up the infection outside of the Union Stock Yards, possibly in a live-stock car.

On the eve of October 28, soon after word of the outbreak at Blissfield was received at Chicago, the stocker and feeder division of the Union Stock Yards was closed by request of Dr. Bennett. He says in his official communication that "the stocker and feeder division of the Union Stock Yards was closed and locked, and no cattle were permitted to be taken either in or out of this section." Dr. Bennett knew that stockers and feeders might be shipped to several States within 24 hours, and if the yards were infected, as suspected from the Blissfield incident, some of the animals in that section might probably be exposed. Any stockers and feeders that went out at this time might develop the disease in time to infect the cars in which they were shipped, the pens in which they were unloaded for feed, water, and rest en route, and finally start a new area of infection at destination. Dr. Bennett received the support of all interested parties in closing this division of the yards, and his action was approved by the department. In addition to closing the feeder and stocker division on the night of October 28, 1914, steps were taken immediately to clean and disinfect this entire division under Government supervision, to locate all shipments of stockers and feeders that had gone out from the Union Stock Yards, and all available veterinary inspectors were sent out to make inspections throughout the State of Illinois. Notices were also sent to bureau and State officials advising them of shipments that had gone into their territory, with the request that these animals should immediately be located and inspected.

Arrangements were made with the various railroad companies and their live-stock cars were called in for cleaning and disinfection, especially those that had carried live stock out of or through the infected districts of Michigan and Indiana. All this work was done before any disease appeared in the Union Stock Yards and when there was but a suspicion of it. The railroads responded willingly to the request of Dr. Bennett for cooperation, and an endeavor was made at this time to supply cleaned and disinfected cars for all shipments going out of the fat-stock division that might be diverted as feeders. The fact that such cleaned and disinfected cars were furnished for shipments of stockers and feeders collected from tail ends in the fat-stock division, is now interpreted by some to mean that infection was in the yards at that time and the department knew it was there, and that was the reason freshly cleaned and disinfected cars were supplied. This is not true. The Government and State officials and the members of the Chicago Live Stock Exchange lived in hourly dread and expectation of a visitation of disease at the yards, but no one knew then or even now that any infection existed in the fat-stock division, or any other division of the yards, on October 28, when word was received of the outbreak at Blissfield in cattle that had left the feeder and stocker division of the yards on October 19, 1914. No foot-and-mouth disease ever developed in any live stock that passed through the yards prior to October 19, 1914. The bureau officials at Washington and the inspectors in charge of work in the field did everything that could be done to protect the live-stock industry. Suppose that the Department of Agriculture had closed the Chicago Stock Yards and all other yards that were endangered from infection in Michigan and Indiana, that no disease developed outside of the infected areas in Michigan and Indiana, and that these yards were kept closed until there was no more danger. The result would have been great losses to shippers and stockmen, and there would have been more people charging the department with inefficiency than there is now.

The disease did not appear in the Union Stock Yards proper until November 3, 1914, six days after the cattle in the stocker and feeder division had been placed under lock and key, and two days after the disease had appeared in the National Dairy Show herd quarantined at the exhibition barns outside of the stockyards proper. After the disease appeared in the dairy show, the animals confined under lock and key in the stocker and feeder division since October 28 for observation came down with the disease. There was no hesitation in regard to what should be done with them. A trench was dug in the stockyards and the 616 stockers and feeders that had been held since October 28 were slaughtered and buried. At least half of these animals showed no evidence of disease when they were slaughtered and buried, and the Department of Agriculture and the Illinois State authorities were severely criticized at what was termed a wanton waste of the healthy animals. The fact is, that an endeavor was made to have the healthy animals inspected, slaughtered, and dressed in the packing houses, but the packers refused to handle them.

The Department of Agriculture and the State authorities were again criticized, and are yet being censured, because they did succeed in saving to the Federal Government and State about $1,000,000 through the slaughter at a Chicago abattoir of the well animals of the Peoria distillery herd. In connection with the disposition of the Peoria herd, please note the precautions that were taken. Dr. Bennett, who had charge of the handling of the Morris & Co. cattle found diseased at Peoria, states:

All cattle visibly affected were isolated. The Washington office was gotten on the telephone and made acquainted with the facts in the case, and instructions were given to the inspector in charge to make arrangements at once to ship those cattle not visibly affected to Chicago for immediate slaughter. Instructions were also given at the time to ship the visibly affected ones to Globe, Ill., for slaughter and disposition. Arrangements were at once made to ship 96 loads of cattle to the plant of Morris & Co., Chicago, Ill., for immediate slaughter, with the understanding, of course, that these animals should not show visible signs of the disease. Every precaution was taken in handling these animals upon their arrival in Chicago. After they were driven over the platforms, through the alleyways and chutes, and over the viaducts to the Morris plant, these were at once cleaned and disinfected under Government supervision. At the time of slaughter all these animals were given a most rigid post-mortem examination; also every precaution was taken with the butchers and other employees on the slaughtering floor, none being allowed to go to their dressing room, but were compelled to remove their working clothes upon the killing floor. The same procedure was carried out each day until the entire lot of cattle had been slaughtered, after which all outer clothing, boots, and shoes of the employees were either boiled or destroyed by burning. The visibly diseased cattle, which were isolated at the Peoria distillery barns, were prepared for shipment to the rendering plant at Globe. Cars were provided which were lined inside and out with roofing paper. Baseboards were placed on the inside of the cars, and fresh sand put in them, which was saturated with a 5 per cent cresol solution. The interior of the cars was also sprayed with a compound cresol solution, and after the cattle were loaded and the doors closed and sealed, the outside of the car was sprayed with a 5 per cent cresol solution. These cattle were received at Globe by two inspectors of the Bureau of Animal Industry, who had entire charge of their disposition. The animals were slaughtered; their hides removed and placed in a 1 to 1,000 bichloride solution in a 3 per cent solution of formaldehyde. The remainder of the carcasses were placed in the rendering tank. Each employee removed his outer clothing every day before leaving the plant and was thoroughly disinfected and fumigated. After all the diseased cattle had been placed in the rendering tanks the premises were cleaned and disinfected under Government supervision. This transaction saved the United States Government and the State of Illinois approximately $1,000,000, without jeopardizing in any way the live-stock interests of the country. The cars in which the animals showing no disease were shipped to Morris & Co. at Chicago were also lined on the inside with strong roofing paper.

If those who are addicted to the habit of criticizing will take the trouble to investigate for themselves, they will learn that the facts concerning the Peoria distillery herd are different than has been represented, for some reason, by some of those who seem to be bitterly opposed to the department methods and policies. Written statements in the files of the department show that at the time the disease was diagnosed there were 8,714 animals in the distillery herd at Peoria, Ill. The inspection at Peoria showed 408 affected with symptoms of the disease, and they were shipped immediately to the Globe Rendering Works, at Globe, Ill., for slaughter and disposition. The 8,306 animals which showed no symptoms of the disease were shipped to the Morris & Co. abattoir, Chicago, for immediate slaughter. The ante-mortem and post-mortem inspection of these 8,306 animals showed 544 of them to have developed the disease since they were last inspected prior to leaving Peoria.

The 544 animals and carcasses found on ante and post mortem inspections at Chicago to show the disease were condemned and tanked under Federal supervision for fertilizer. In all 7,762 of the total number, 8,714, were passed for food. More than the usual number of inspectors were detailed to the Morris & Co. plant to conduct the inspections, and a very rigid ante-mortem and post-mortem examination was made, and every animal showing the least sign of the disease by elevation of temperature or otherwise was condemned. It will therefore be seen that these figures and facts which I have obtained from the department are quite different from those that have been submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING]. In fact, Dr. Melvin states—and from past experience we know there is no reason to doubt his veracity—that the foot-and-mouth disease germ was not transmitted in that dressed beef, as the dressed beef was from carcasses which passed careful inspection and did not include "over 150 of which cattle were suffering with foot-and-mouth disease."

Much has been said by those critics who stake their judgment against the judgment of those who were charged with the responsibility of eradicating the disease and succeeded concerning the policy pursued by the department in establishing quarantines. The measures that were employed have been termed "hysterical quarantine orders," which "will be recorded as the most amazing spectacle of incompetence, ignorance, and usurpation of authority that has ever been witnessed in a similar event." In this connection I desire to quote some significant statements made in a recent address by Dr. V. A. Moore, of Cornell University, who is recognized as one of the most eminent authorities on foot-and-mouth disease. In his address Dr. V. A. Moore said:

It is difficult for those not trained in the habits of microscopic life to appreciate that viruses are vital forces that take no heed of the opinions of men. The fact can not be too forcefully emphasized that naturally infectious diseases are spread in accordance with the means, simple or complicated, provided by the laws and forces of nature for that purpose. The agencies for the transmission of infectious diseases were not designed for the convenience of animal owners or sanitary officers, but rather to enable the virus of the disease to perpetuate itself and to be transferred from the infected to the uninfected individual. We should not forget that the virus of foot-and-mouth disease, for example, is a definite factor in nature's economy and is provided for quite as much as the perpetuation of other living things. We look upon the transfer of pollen by the insect in the fertilization of clover as a wonderful provision of nature, because clover is useful to man. The transfer of the virus of a plague from one host to another is often just as wonderful and always just as securely provided for, but because its effect operates against human interests there is a tendency to condemn and to pass judgment without knowledge.

The fixing of a quarantine period and defining its specifications are dependent upon the character of the disease and the nature of its etiology. There must be knowledge of the location of the virus within the host, of the time in the course of the disease it is eliminated, and its ability to spread after escaping from the body in order to adequately safeguard against it. Again, the purpose of the quarantine modifies both its duration and requirements. If it is to protect a community against the introduction of a foreign disease, it is obviously more drastic than if it is used only as a temporary means of combating the malady. When employed for a permanent protection it should remain for the maximum period of incubation and for the longest known time required for the lighting up anew of arrested lesions. In case of certain diseases the virus after it escapes from the body is able by numerous and insidious ways to disseminate itself to such an extent that it is difficult or impossible to confine it to the quarantined area. These are all-important considerations in determining just what procedure shall be followed. In any case a margin of safety must be allowed.

We are dealing not with a local question, but a nation-wide problem. Because of this greater responsibility our quarantine regulations should be safe, reliable, and sound.

There is a common tendency to yield to the findings in a limited number of cases. There are people willing to formulate regulatory measures suggested by a personal experience. While such experiences have their value, and while they may represent the majority, it is well to remember that although it is the usual that ordinarily happens it is the unusual that most often causes the trouble.

The question regarding the proper area to be quarantined is a mooted one. We must be governed by results rather than by opinions. In this country the identical methods pursued in overcoming the 1902 and 1908 outbreaks were adopted for the 1914 outbreaks, and the results were successful in all three. Compare these methods and results with those of the old countries where small areas are quarantined, as have been advocated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. Those countries that have failed to control the disease have followed the methods and small quarantine areas advocated by the critics of the Department of Agriculture. On the other hand, those countries that have been successful in stamping out the disease, like Norway, Sweden, Ireland, England, and Scotland, have adopted a quarantine policy of large areas similar to that followed by our Department of Agriculture. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] states that England has resorted to the slaughter method for 50 years and that the disease still exists there. If my colleague had looked into the matter carefully, he would have found that the disease is occasionally being brought into England through its numerous commercial channels, but each outbreak has been stamped out by slaughter and the quarantine of the infected and sometimes the adjacent counties. In 1913 England had but 73 animals infected with the disease; in 1914, 143 animals; in 1915, 692 animals; and in 1916—one outbreak on February 11—60 animals, all these outbreaks being separate from one another and caused by different importations of the virus from the infected countries on the Continent. A few individuals are still loud in their acclamations of disapproval of the department's policy, but throughout the country I find the vast majority are in hearty sympathy with the work that has been done and the methods employed in accomplishing the results. As evidence of this general feeling of satisfaction and approval, I wish to submit the names of only a few of those who have indorsed this foot-and-mouth work as conducted by our Department of Agriculture:

I am greatly surprised to learn that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] indicated by his questions that foot-and-mouth disease has existed among western sheep for the last 25 years. In my section of the country we call this disease of sheep lip-and-leg ulceration, and it is as different from the foot-and-mouth disease, which was brought into this country in August, 1914, as measles is different from smallpox. The gentleman from Missouri makes the same mistake as the first veterinarians who saw the true foot-and-mouth disease and thought it was lip-and-leg ulceration, which the doctors sometimes call necrotic stomatitis. The Department of Agriculture has published on this lip-and-leg ulceration as it has on foot-and-mouth disease, and we farmers have been able to control the former by smearing the parts with sheep dip and lard, as recommended in the department's publications. This lip-and leg ulceration is not catching like foot-and-mouth disease, and while you are treating a few sheep it does not spread like wildfire, as foot-and-mouth disease does when you keep animals alive to treat them. If foot-and-mouth disease was as widespread and as tightly saddled on the country as hog cholera, this country would not think of slaughtering the sick animals. But in Canada, where hog cholera is only occasionally found in a few herds, the Government buys and kills the sick hogs just as we do in foot-and-mouth disease, and they thereby control hog cholera. Notice the difference between the position taken by a country when a disease is saturating the soil everywhere and when a disease is brought in from the outside, at which time by the slaughter method the farms are kept from becoming impregnated forever. Denmark was one of the first countries to slaughter for foot-and-mouth disease, and has been successful in overcoming all outbreaks until the one of November, 1914. Again the slaughter method was begun, but this time the disease spread faster than the authorities could act, with the result that 8 per cent of all cattle and hogs became infected and the slaughter method had to be stopped for economic reasons. Of course, if foot-and-mouth disease in this country had continued to spread, there would have come a time when so many animals would have had to be slaughtered that the economic factors would have stopped this method of handling and our soil would become permeated with the virus as it is in Russia, Italy, and other European countries to-day, or as hog cholera is in this country to-day. As it was, only 4,000 of the 6,500,000 farms became infected in our outbreak, and each of these farms was quarantined, cleaned up, thoroughly disinfected, and now restocked with healthy cattle, without any foot-and-mouth disease drawbacks. And you gentlemen know these drawbacks as well as I, involving producer, feeder, breeder, dairyman, banker, transporter, commission man, buyer, seller, and the ultimate consumer. Instead of knocking the men who worked day and night, Sundays and holidays, to accomplish these results, let us show them our appreciation of their efforts, even though they, like others, have made a few mistakes; and, gentlemen, I can assure you that if this herculean task had been accomplished in one of the European countries, these men, whom some of you have so severely criticized, would be wearing badges of honor or of merit for the results obtained. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair thinks that there are just two propositions to be considered in passing upon this point of order: First, whether it is a limit on the discretion of an executive officer in carrying out his duties under the law. If so, then it would clearly be subject to a point of order. If, on the other hand, it is in fact only a limitation on the appropriation carried in the paragraph, then it would not be subject to a point of order.

The Chair very frankly states that his first impression of the amendment was that it specifically limited the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture and therefore would not be in order, but on a more careful reading of it he does not now think so. It says "provided no part of the money reappropriated will be used to enforce any quarantine order," and so forth. It does not limit the discretion of the Secretary, but it does limit the expenditure of the money in enforcing certain specific rules and regulations, and the Chair thinks that the amendment is not therefore subject to a point of order. Point of order is overruled.

Mr. LEVER. Then I ask for a vote on the amendment, and I hope that the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOOD) there were—ayes 15, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KING: Amend amendment offered by Mr. LEVER by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided, That if in the arrest and eradication of such disease it becomes necessary to slaughter animals, the same shall not be slaughtered for such purpose without just compensation to the owners thereof, the amount thereof to be determined by an appraisement based on the meat, dairy, or breeding value; and in the event that either party to the appraisement is dissatisfied with such appraisement appeal may be taken to the United States Court of Claims, without delaying slaughter, where final adjudication may be had according to law, fixing the value to be paid by the United States Government."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I had the honor of having allotted to me some 30 minutes in general debate when the bill was first brought into the House, and of course I do not care to cover any of the points that I covered in those general remarks, which are printed in the RECORD.

In the first place, I want to congratulate the members of the committee for their long and laborious work here day after day, and especially I wish to commend the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], the chairman of the committee, who has been so patient and considerate with all of us during the consideration of this bill.

I came here this morning expecting a certain line of procedure, but of course I have already learned that what you expect you do not receive, and the line-up has been entirely changed. I regret very much that the members of the committee saw fit to consent so readily to the point of order which was raised striking out that part of this section which provides for the payment to the farmer or a stock raiser for his cattle, and making certain other provisions relative thereto. I had expected to offer an amendment which would probably be subject to the point of order, that a provision be added that in addition to payment for cattle and swine destroyed, the farmer and the stock raiser be permitted to have a claim against the Government for money which he lost by reason of his stock and swine having to be put into quarantine alley in the stockyards in the city of Chicago. Contrary to the explanation made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STEELE], the facts are that the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States started out to make as large a quarantine as possible. They insisted if they found one solitary case in a county that they would put the whole county under quarantine. What was the reason for that? I do not say that they did it corruptly by any means, but what was the result? The result was that the larger the quarantine area the more cattle and more hogs shipped went into quarantine alley in Chicago, and when they went into quarantine alley for immediate slaughter, although they were just exactly as good as another man's cattle across the line, nevertheless they sold for from 10 to 20 per cent less than if they had been put in the free alley, where they ought to have gone, as long as there was no foot-and-mouth disease in the section from which they came. That is the whole proposition.

I had intended to offer an amendment adding, after the word "destruction" in that part which was stricken out on the point of order, the words "and also through the operation of Government quarantine regulations." That would render the Government liable for the loss; and think of it, gentlemen, $22,000,000 worth of cattle and hogs went into quarantine alley and finally went into the refrigerators of the packing concerns. I am not blaming the packers. It has been stated here that they are human, and of course they are, the same as anyone else, and they would take advantage of that; but it is an artificial condition created by making a large quarantine area, simply transferring thousands and thousands of cattle and lowering the price on them through the Bureau of Animal Industry from 10 to 20 per cent. That is the point about this quarantine-alley proposition in the city of Chicago.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. What does the gentleman mean by this quarantine alley, and then later on by the meat going into the packing houses?

Mr. KING. I did not go into the details of that because I had explained it before—I looked for the gentleman, but he was absent at that time, at lunch. They have two areas in the stockyards in Chicago. Let us, for illustration, divide this House into two parts, and instead of drawing a Mason and Dixon line down the center, as is frequently done, we will draw a line here, and say that the Republican side is a free area and the Democratic side is a restricted area.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. A quarantined area?

Mr. KING. Yes. I am not speaking of the area in the country, but I am speaking of the stockyards. Here comes a carload of stock from Henry County, Ill. It comes from a restricted area, although there was only one case in one corner of the county. That carload of stock goes on the Democratic side in the restricted area for immediate slaughter, and another car comes from right across the line in Knox County, where it was not restricted, and they go on the Republican side into this free area, and now comes the packer or the commission man, and he goes down there and looks them all over and he finds a very fine bunch of cattle on the Republican side in the free area and he bids on them, competitive, of course. He buys them. And then over here he sees in this restricted side, quarantine alley of the stockyards, a fine lot of cattle, but he says, "I can not pay you within 10 or 20 per cent for them, because they are in quarantine alley."

So do you not see if down in my State they would gradually increase the area to a county unit for quarantine, finally the Republican side would dwindle down to four or five seats and the Democratic side, using it as an illustration merely, would be the quarantine alley of the stockyards of the city of Chicago, and of course the bigger that is the cheaper the cattle to the packer. But everything finally is the same; both Republicans and Democrats finally get to the refrigerator and the consumer pays the same price.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Recognizing the difficulty that the gentleman describes, is it not necessary, after all, that there should be what you called a restricted area?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Now, inasmuch as it is necessary there should be a restricted area, what does the gentleman propose to do with the cattle that come from that restricted area? How are you proposing to obviate the difficulty in connection with the stockyards restriction?

Mr. KING. It is not necessary to have a restricted area of immediate slaughter. There is no disease there. It seems to me the department is now perhaps operating on the right theory of a 5-mile limit, but a township would perhaps be a solution of the whole proposition, because there the lines will be all recognized the same as the county lines by the inhabitants included in the disease area.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. In my State we do not use the county as the unit. They divided one county, as I remember it.

Mr. KING. I admit I do not accuse the department of anything on earth. I recognize that they are seeking to do the proper thing, and, as it has been stated here, we do not attack them on the Republican side. I do not attack them as a Republican because they have succeeded in putting down this great plague, but the objection is made, and the objection of the farmers is that it permitted it to get a start, and even after it was discovered on November 27, 1914, for three days they refused, as a matter of fact, to quarantine the stockyards and sent out over 46 carloads of cattle through Wisconsin, Indiana, and Illinois. That is how the disease spread. That is what caused the commotion and criticism of the department, and not the method of handling it after it once got a start.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I intended also to offer an amendment after the word "circumstances," in line 23, which provided that he shall pay for those cattle when such owner has complied with all the quarantine regulations. That was the part which would have been subject to the point of order and the point of order should have been raised against that and against that point only. Now I presume the point of order will be raised against the amendment which I have offered here. Now a point of order, I have learned in my short experience in this House, is a dreadful instrument. It is an instrument both for the purpose of defeating good legislation and for the magnificent purpose of defeating bad legislation. It is absolutely impartial and it is totally without any conscience. Therefore I presume that under the rules of the House what is known, not as "a" point of order but "the" point of order, will be raised against it. I hope, however, the gentleman from South Carolina will see fit not to do so. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the point of order was made against any language inserted in this bill by the committee after a full and thorough consideration. But since the point of order has been made and sustained, everybody in this House, with six months' knowledge, knowing it to be subject to the point of order, and this being a brand-new proposition which the gentleman from Illinois has offered, and going very much further in the same direction than the amendment passed upon by the committee, I must make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER].

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I am well satisfied that if all the experts upon the foot-and-mouth disease in this House were over in the Agricultural Department we might probably have gotten better results out of the treatment of this disease. This is a great big question and ought to be considered in a great big way. I do not think the Agricultural Department is subject to all the criticism that has been leveled against it. Neither do I think their method of treating this disease is a perfect one. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STEELE] said that this was a disease which was seldom cured. On the contrary, the foot-and-mouth disease seldom proves fatal, and there is scarcely any disease to which animals are subject that is so easily cured as the foot-and-mouth disease. I made this statement here the other day when this question was up and I was told by some of my friends the statement was not correct, that I had been misinformed. Now let me read what the Secretary of Agriculture himself says about it. I will give him as my authority. On page 12 of his annual report we find this language, speaking of the foot-and-mouth disease:

> So rapid and sweeping is its spread that when the infection once gains access to a herd or a farm practically every susceptible animal is soon attacked. Although the mortality is usually low, heavy economic losses result from the interruption and derangement of business.

The loss was not from the death of these cattle, but from the interruption and derangement of business. The department did not kill all the animals that were infected with the foot-and-mouth disease. They made exceptions, and they cured them. They had a stock show up in Chicago, a large one, in the fall of 1915. There was one herd of 700 head of very valuable dairy cattle there. They were infected with this disease. Did they kill them? Not a single one. They quarantined those cattle and cured them and sent them out on the farm where they belonged. Now, I take that statement from the report of the Secretary of Agriculture of 1915.

Now, if you can cure the cattle of a man who has 700 head of very fine cattle, you can quarantine and cure the cattle for the farmer who has only a few upon the farm just as easily.

Mr. WHEELER. What condition were they in after they were cured?

Mr. BOOHER. I do not know. I am going to read now what the Secretary said about it. He said:

> This herd consisted of over 700 head of very valuable pure-bred cattle. Their slaughter would have been a misfortune * * * and it was decided to try to save them.

They did save them. They cured that herd of cattle, turned them out cured, and they went back to the owner and the farm, and they are there now. I can not understand why, where a disease is as easily cured as this is, stock should not be quarantined and people learn how to cure it.

Ticks cause cattle fever, yet neither Congress nor the Department of Agriculture orders the indiscriminate slaughter of the diseased cattle; on the contrary, we make very large appropriations for the department to use in the extermination of the cattle tick in the South. Why not find a remedy for the foot-and-mouth disease and cure the cattle instead of the wholesale slaughter method pursued by the department?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, as meritorious as this great Agricultural appropriation bill is, in my humble judgment it contains no item more worthy of the approval of this body than the $2,500,000 provided for the "arrest and eradication" of the foot-and-mouth disease. I think it will be generally conceded that this malady constitutes the greatest menace known to the live-stock industry. Comparatively few outbreaks—six of them, I believe it is; fortunately of short duration—have occurred in the United States, but the prompt attention given these cost the Government large sums of money and owners of cattle great inconvenience, consternation, and loss.

The Bureau of Animal Industry states that, while the foot-and-mouth disease may be regarded as essentially a disease of cattle, hogs would seem to be as easy a prey. Almost in the same grade of receptivity are sheep and goats. Next in order come the buffalo, American bison, camel, chamois, llama, giraffe, and antelope. Horses, dogs, cats, and even poultry may occasionally become infected with the disease, the last three being particularly dangerous as carriers of the contagion. Man himself is not immune, and the frequency of his infection by coming in contact with diseased animals is established by numerous observations. Mr. Chairman, the spread of the malady is so easy, so nearly unavoidable, that it is very manifest that the question of how best to meet the exigencies of one of these outbreaks is of very great importance.

In the main this is what I shall talk of, but for a moment I shall refer to some criticisms which have been made to-day and previously during the discussions of the pending bill to the effect that the quarantine unit has been made too large—specifically, that the county unit, which has been used somewhat, is too large for a quarantine.

Mr. Chairman, if mistakes have in fact been made in some instances by including too great an area in a quarantine, such as a whole county when a township, 6 miles square, might have been sufficient, I can readily comprehend why and how this may have occurred. It is plain to me that where doubt exists as to how large an area should be included in a single quarantine it should be resolved in favor of the larger rather than the smaller area, for the reason that greater damage must result from making the area too small than by making it larger than necessary. For instance, if the area were too small, if infected cattle be left outside of the quarantine limit, there had just as well—even better—been no quarantine at all, for the public would be led to expect that cattle outside of the limit were not infected; therefore people would freely go and come over the area without using precaution against the spread of the disease.

A striking object lesson in favor of resolving the doubt for a larger rather than a smaller area recently occurred in Denmark. There the quarantine limit proved to have been too small, with the result that infected stock was left outside, with the disastrous result that the epidemic spread throughout the entire country, thus rendering further quarantine futile. Practically the disease has become permanently established in Denmark.

Mr. Chairman, I think it spells much for the veterinary profession that while the United States has been visited with six epidemics of the foot-and-mouth disease, the last becoming extended over 32 States of the Union, that the malady is now deemed extinct throughout the United States and that the arrest and the eradication of the malady was accomplished in so short a time. The country is to be congratulated upon the speedy deliverance, and the veterinary profession and the people may justly feel proud of their achievement.

Mr. Chairman, I have already stated that it was my chief purpose—in fact, I had intended it to be my exclusive purpose—to utilize the brief time afforded me to address myself directly to the great problem, as I regard it to be, how to choose between the two alternative remedies for combating the foot-and-mouth disease, whether to undertake to treat and cure, with the risk of constantly extending it to further areas, or to resort to the relatively radical remedy of immediately killing the infected cattle, burning the carcasses, and thoroughly disinfecting the occupied premises.

Of course, it is contemplated that when afflicted animals are slaughtered the Government and the State where they belong shall pay the owner therefor.

The instance of the treatment and curing of the large high-bred and valuable dairy herd in the State of Illinois in the last outbreak was this afternoon urged upon the attention of the House by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER], and the case had been previously mentioned in the discussions by the two learned and able Members from Illinois, who have treated the subject perhaps the most exhaustively, in a concrete way, of any of the Members. I have reference to Mr. CHIPERFIELD and Mr. KING. We all readily recall it was only by the diligent and energetic and successful prosecution of injunction suits against the Federal authorities that the immediate slaughter of this herd was prevented. Inferably we are expected to understand from this example that it would be more economical to treat and cure the infected animals, with as little loss by death as may be practicable, rather than to sacrifice whole herds by an immediate slaughter.

In keeping with this instance in South America, in the countries of Brazil, Argentina, and Uruguay, and in Europe, in Germany, France, Belgium, Holland, Italy, and some other countries, the policy of treating the afflicted stock for the purpose of restoring the animals to good health and preserving them for useful purposes has been and is still being followed, but in all of these countries this practice has resulted in the further spread of the malady, extending it throughout the countries named. The consequence is that at this time neither quarantine nor the slaughter of the afflicted animals is any longer practicable or an economical remedy, for the disease is so thoroughly rooted and permanently established in those countries that arrest and eradication is impracticable, if not impossible. Certainly from an economical standpoint the policy of treating the disease to cure in these countries has not only proven an absolute failure, but has extended and permanently planted the disease.

Mr. Chairman, in contrast with the policy followed in the countries named, of applying medical treatment to the afflicted animals, the United States, Canada, Great Britain, and some other countries have adopted the radical policy of immediate slaughter of the afflicted animals, without regard to the size of the herd found diseased or exposed, followed by the burning of the carcasses of the slaughtered animals and the scrupulous disinfection of the particular premises. The result of this practice is that these countries are most of the time free from the existence of the disease. Notwithstanding the very malignant form of the last outbreak in the United States and that it extended across the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, as the Department of Agriculture views it, the foot-and-mouth disease is now extinct in the United States. Besides the United States, Canada, and Mexico, barring occasional importations and infections from other countries, and Australia and New Zealand, protected as they are by their isolation, are free from the plague, and so far as it has hitherto been ascertained it would seem that these countries may in the future, by yet greater diligence and vigilance of inspection at their ports of entry and the further progress of science to be applied to prevention and extinction of the malady, preserve their jurisdictions virtually free from the vicious affliction.

Mr. Chairman, I do not presume to urge at this time the adoption of a policy to be permanently followed as the only mode of combating the foot-and-mouth disease, but it is my purpose to urge the very great importance of choosing the safer means—the means most likely calculated to keep our country free, if not all the time, the most of the time, from the malady. On the limited information I possess it is my conviction that the wiser course would be to adhere to the policy of slaughtering until and unless it should be positively ascertained that the less radical remedy of the treatment to cure would be the more desirable. I am frank to say I abhor the contemplation that the malady of the foot-and-mouth disease, to which man as well as beast is subject, should be permitted to gain a permanent foothold and become constantly extant in the United States. As I view it, the treatment to cure in a measure resembles the maintaining of a nursery for the propagation of the malady, for it is obvious that every hour of the existence of the disease multiplies the opportunities for its contagion and spread to other areas and to other herds.

I urge the policy of prevention and exclusion rather than cure in our own country. Experience had in the South American States and in European countries, where the policy of treatment is followed, shows that while the animals of one herd are being treated the contagion is carried to other animals and other herds and that it is constantly extended to other localities, with the result that in these countries the condition has become a hopeless one.

Mr. Chairman, I regard it as a gruesome proposition to contemplate the constant existence of the foot-and-mouth disease in dairy cows furnishing milk and butter for our tables and at the same time in the herds of cattle contemplated to be slaughtered for meat for our consumption, as well as hogs and other animals, all of which foods may become infected, and the individual consumers thereof likewise become infected with the virus. Certainly the constant existence of the disease in the country constitutes a great menace to the health and life of both man and beast. Hence the logic in favor of immediate extermination.

Mr. Chairman, with three of the principal States of South America, Japan, the Philippine Islands, and other parts of the Orient, with most of Europe infested with the plague so extensively throughout their jurisdictions that eradication is no longer a practicable remedy, a great opportunity is here afforded North America to become preeminent in producing good healthy cattle and healthy meats for the consumption of their own people, and for exportation, thus securing to the United States an ascendancy over all other countries in the production of healthy animals and inviting and wholesome meats. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have some amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL of Iowa: Page 78, line 25, after the word "specified," insert:

"Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be used in the arrest and eradication of any such disease or in the payment of claims growing out of past and future purchases and destruction of stock unless a strict quarantine, with a radius of not more than 3 miles, shall be maintained around each infected premises."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment. Has the gentleman another amendment which he thinks is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina make the point of order on the amendment?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that if he desires to use some of his time I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am not going to argue the point of order. I first yield a minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in reference to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is recognized for 10 minutes, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there are some things dearer to an American citizen than live stock. One of these is his personal liberty. I was in a foot-and-mouth quarantine for seven months, and I know something about it. During that time I had the same experience that the gentleman from Nebraska spoke about, and I had more. I myself was threatened with arrest by one of these inspectors sent out from a bureau here in Washington. Arrest for what? Arrest for attending a public meeting held in my own little town, and there had not been another meeting called off in all that county, and that meeting was called by 20 farmers in order to plan a campaign against the foot-and-mouth disease—20 of the best farmers in my own county—and this inspector telephoned out the night before to these 20 farmers and intimidated them until they were afraid to hold that meeting.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Was it considered that this meeting was particularly dangerous?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It may have been the inspector, but I do not know. But it was to plan a campaign against the foot-and-mouth disease which was sweeping all over the county.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I thought it was a political meeting.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No, sir; there was not any politics about it. It was to stamp out the disease, and these inspectors called the meeting off, and one of them came to me and told me I could not attend that meeting.

Mr. HELGESEN. What did you tell him?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I told him that I would be there, and that if he had one ounce of authority I wanted him to single me out and show me where he got it.

Now, why do these men claim that unlimited authority? Simply because of one feature in this bill, one clause. And I have told them that when they came into Iowa it was unconstitutional. I have appeared before the executive council of the State of Iowa, and I have told them it was unconstitutional, and I say to you now, the Democratic Party, that it is unconstitutional.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman think that makes it unconstitutional?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It does not make it so, but every lawyer knows it is unconstitutional to do what you have done. That clause simply says that the farmer must observe all quarantine regulations. Do you know what it is? It is subserving the Constitution by quasi bribery, and I have asked this committee to strike it out, and they have refused to do it. And so I raise the point of order on the paragraph; and I will say to you gentlemen that if the whole paragraph had gone out I would still raise the point of order. I am not afraid of the result in my district. If you refuse to correct your own bill and do not want to play the game, all right.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. REILLY. Would you have the farmers have the privilege of violating the quarantine rules?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would not have a bureau here in Washington that can draw rules making a quarantine in the State of Iowa, because it is unconstitutional. You understand?

Mr. REILLY. Have we any other authority besides your statement for that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You can not make a quarantine unless you quarantine the individual, and for the National Government to come into the State of Iowa with police powers and quarantine the individual and deny him his liberty is unconstitutional or else I do not know the Constitution. Do you say that it is?

Mr. REILLY. I am not discussing that. Do you think that hurts the foot-and-mouth disease and helps to exterminate it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know whether it hurts it or not, but I know that the blundering methods the department practiced in my county sent the disease into 10 yards, and it was only after the farmers themselves made a quarantine that an effective quarantine was had and the spread of the disease stopped.

Mr. REILLY. Is that your first experience with the foot-and-mouth disease?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have been where it was. I never was in a quarantine before.

Mr. REILLY. Now, was it not——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, I can not yield. I have only 10 minutes. The trouble is you can not make a quarantine on cattle and make it effective unless you make it effective on the man himself. It was not a quarantine at all. It was an embargo on business.

Gentlemen here talk about disease 15 miles away tying up a certain county. Let me tell you what they have done in the State of Iowa. They not only went 15 miles but 100 miles, and that because one Federal inspector was mad at a veterinarian because the veterinarian would not exhibit his books to him he quarantined the entire county of Greene, which never had the foot-and-mouth disease. Do you think that is right? Do you think that it is a good law for a department down here to deny to the State of Iowa the right to move its hogs from Iowa County to Linn County or within the State of Iowa? It is in the records there that they did it. Is it unconstitutional for a bureau chief here to tell the State of Iowa, acting through its legislature that has passed a bill regulating this thing, that if that bill becomes a law they will quarantine the entire State, when there is not any foot-and-mouth disease in the whole State? In other words, they threaten the State of Iowa for legislation that it had passed and not for foot-and-mouth disease.

Now, the Hilsinger bill was drawn after careful consideration. I came to Washington myself and had an interview with the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, and we agreed upon a bill, and I went back, and the chairman of the Senate committee wrote to Secretary Houston to find out whether he would indorse the bill, and he suggested that instead of 1 mile we should raise it to 3 miles; this was done, and that law was enacted by the Legislature of the State of Iowa. And yet this great bureau that you are trying to defend double-crossed the State of Iowa and said to the governor, after they had indorsed the bill, "If you sign that bill, we will quarantine the entire State." Is that constitutional?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is autocratic.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Is it right? O my Democratic friends, you talked about liberty yesterday—liberty to people 7,000 miles away. And yet in this bill you are going on and on, and taking every liberty of the citizens away from them within the States.

Mr. RUBEY. We not only talked it, but we voted it yesterday.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It did not do you any good. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield to myself three minutes more. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield to a question. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Waiving all questions as to the Constitution, are you not in favor of a proposition to allow claimants who have had property destroyed to receive payment for their stock?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I certainly am, and to that end I offered an amendment here, and the gentlemen on the other side ruled it out on a point of order. The record is clear.

Mr. DOWELL. Just another question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Very well.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understood your reason for raising the question of order, it was because of the intimation or suggestion of bribery, which compelled persons to comply with the quarantine regulations.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly. It places the Federal Treasury behind a bunch of bureaucrats here in Washington, and we will not permit it in Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. If this is stricken out under a point of order, is there any provision in this bill to allow claims of this sort?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, they can fix it up. They are the majority party. We are not afraid of the record.

Now I want to say this, and it sounds strange, coming from a Republican: I sometimes think I am a good deal better Democrat than a lot of these gentlemen sitting over on this side. I want to say this, that when it comes to the personal liberty of the citizen of Iowa, Iowa on local matters is sovereign over all your National Government. When we passed that law we had the right to pass it. And I want to say this, that practically every State in this Union has a law on quarantine, and this bureau never enforced it nor ever asked them to enforce it. They set it aside, and made their own laws here in Washington, and no bureau can do that. You have been revising rural routes by mail, and you want to run a quarantine by mail. You can not do it in the State of Iowa. I am either right or wrong, and this is the time and place to find out.

I want to say in reply to the gentleman that there is a mystery about one of these quarantines. What we are finding fault with is that there is not any quarantine at all, but that the quarantine is an embargo on shipment. It may be county wide, or it may be two or three counties, or it may be anything that some Federal inspector sees fit to place upon the people of the State, and that is what the people are protesting against. Protesting against the illegal and unlimited power claimed by this bureau here in Washington over the property and liberty of the citizens of Iowa.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. Did I understand the gentleman correctly to say that a quarantine was placed by Executive order on a county in which there was no foot-and-mouth disease among the cattle?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Exactly; Green County, and the nearest case was within a mile of my home, and I am a hundred miles from Green County.

Mr. BENNET. On what theory was that done?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hate to take all the time, but I will tell you. They went there and told a veterinarian that he must show them his books. They wanted to find out to whom he had sold serum. I guess they could have found it out if they had not been arbitrary; but they jumped on him, and he had a little red blood in his veins, and he told them they had no authority. He questioned their authority, and they promptly told him, "Show us or we will put you out of business." He called their bluff, and in trying to put that man out of business they came very near putting everybody in Green County out of business.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. SLOAN. Who was it that did this? Was it somebody from the bureau?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It was a Federal inspector.

Mr. SLOAN. How many men did he have with him?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know the name of the gentleman, but it has been testified to in the State of Iowa. The State senate records will show it. There is no question about it. It is known there.

Mr. SLOAN. It used to be the case that an Iowa citizen would not submit to such coercion unless a large number of persons were present for the purpose of enforcing it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They would not enforce it there if it was not for that clause in the bill, but when you put $2,500,000 behind some Federal inspector, you destroy the right of the State to defend its own citizens.

Mr. SLOAN. That used to be a spur to Iowans when I was an Iowan.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, you left the State. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman mean that citizens of Iowa would be tempted in anywise by what he has designated as a bribe?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Let the gentleman go and read the record of the governor's veto of the Hilsinger bill, and he will find that the governor there mentions the fact that he had to veto it simply because this money that you were appropriating would not be available.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, Ohio is placed as the fourth State in its injury from this disease, and I happen to live in what might be called the storm center of the State thus injured.

I am perfectly aware that any quarantine regulation limiting the rights of individuals will inevitably work hardship and can not meet with approval from the standpoint of the individual who thinks that his liberties are interferred with. I realize that any exercise of this police power will fail to receive a friendly reception. Of course, that is inevitable, and I would be one of the last to criticize the authority, either Federal or State, that takes the necessary steps, either to eradicate or to prevent the further extension of this disease.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I am coming to what the gentleman wishes me to say. Realizing that it is not in the thing that is done, but in the manner in which the administration of it is carried on, I want to make an observation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does not the gentleman think that the law ought to be administered with common, ordinary intelligence?

Mr. FESS. I do. I do not think that the exercise of it should be purely arbitrary. I do not believe that the quarantine district should be a matter of mere arbitrary ruling. I have a letter from one of the best citizens in my State, and one of the men who wished to see the quarantine strictly enforced. This letter was written in reply to a letter that I wrote to him, because I knew his answer would have no prejudice whatever. He told me that he thought this law worked a hardship that he did not think was necessary, and I want to read from his letter:

> While the foot-and-mouth disease was handled badly, in my judgment, they did a great work when they got it stopped. I will give you my experience and you will readily see how a big loss might have been prevented. I had 50 hogs weighing 250 pounds per head. They were ready to sell. I was offered $7.50 per hundred, but was told they could not ship them, as the embargo had gone out that morning. I held the hogs that were ready to ship. Cholera was all around me. In a little more than 10 days cholera struck my hogs and every one died. Would it not have been better judgment for the authorities to have allowed those hogs to have been shipped and slaughtered and not have compelled me to hold the hogs exposed to a worse disease than what they were quarantined against?

This is only one of many instances in my immediate vicinity that, I think, argue that the administration of the law might be improved upon. I want to say that I do not oppose the regulation for health, but it ought to be very carefully administered. It will be difficult to justify the procedure which draws an arbitrary line inclosing an area from which no stock must be removed, especially when it includes many farms stocked with herds ready for shipment and free from any symptoms of disease, so far as a Federal or State inspector could discern. There were many cases in my own district where many farmers, forbidden to ship their stock because of this embargo, stock perfectly healthy, as certified by inspectors, suffered a total loss of the entire lots by the appearance of cholera, induced by herding together fat stock which should be marketed. Every day after such a lot is ready for market is not only a loss of the feed consumed, but endangers total loss by an epidemic which could and would be avoided were it not for the embargo. It is this feature which should be corrected.

Mr. LEVER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has said, that nearly all the complaints were against the administration of this law and not against the purpose of the law. It did work great hardship in a great many communities. No doubt the department has learned now by experience better how to administer it so that a great many complaints and difficulties that it has experienced heretofore can now be overcome and obviated, and I hope they will.

In my district, where there were a number of cases of foot-and-mouth disease, many farmers suffered from the administration of this law. Their complaints were not against the law itself nor the purpose of the law, but the manner in which it was administered, and that was because they suffered great loss from its administration.

Now, the department is extending out its lines of activity, entering new fields, and attending to new matters which are of vital importance not only to the farmer himself but to the entire country. There are many things to be done that will relieve certain conditions existing. This can only be done by cooperation, experimenting, by study, and investigating the questions which are vital to the American people and especially to the producers of this country. I only regret that this year the committee did not see fit to take up some other matters vital to the interests of this country and extend the work of this department into the investigation and assisting the farmer in eradicating and correcting things which are doing them a very great injury in their work and which, if properly handled, would be of incalculable benefit to both producers and consumers, improve conditions, and add to the prosperity abounding so bountifully all over the land. If we can improve farm conditions, so essential to the welfare of the whole people, we should do it. It is one of the important industries of the country, a business upon which more depends than on any other single industry in the land. It is prosperous now more so than ever before, and if we can increase its prosperity we are helping all, and it will be reflected in all other business activities. All are now enjoying unprecedented prosperity, as the result of wise policies adopted and beneficial legislation enacted, which is bearing satisfactory results as a reward for the confidence reposed in those intrusted with power.

The business conditions of the country are such as to be a matter of sincere congratulation of every American. Activity is the watchword everywhere, and the industries all over the country are taxed to their capacity; and many are, to meet the unprecedented demand upon them, enlarging their plants and increasing the number of their employees.

The iron and steel business is enjoying an era of prosperity hitherto unknown in that great industry. It is most pleasing to note the following good report from it:

TWENTY-FOUR THOUSAND GIVEN RAISE BY BETHLEHEM STEEL CO.—10 PER CENT—VOLUNTARY INCREASE THIRD IN 10 MONTHS.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA., April 28.

Twenty-four thousand employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co. were granted a voluntary increase in wages of 10 per cent, which will become effective on May 1. The increase will mean the adding of $170,000 per month to the pay roll, which last month was $1,700,000. This is the third voluntary increase within 10 months. President E. G. Grace returned to-day from Atlantic City, where he went to recuperate from an illness.

C. M. Schwab to-day said that the net earnings last month were $5,500,000. Mr. Schwab said that during the next year he was going to spend $18,000,000 in improvements to the local plant and $38,000,000 in improvements to other plants. He said the yearly pay roll is $25,000,000. The steel magnate said the Pennsylvania Steel Co. cost him $53,000,000.

The lumber industry in the West is now, as we learn from the reports of the press of that section, very prosperous and is preparing for the greatest activity ever known in that section. I submit a few of the many reports of prosperity from that section, as follows:

NORTHWEST LUMBER MILLS ARE HUMMING; BUSINESS PICKS UP—MANY MILLS RUNNING OVERTIME; LUMBERMEN EXPECT GREAT TRADE REVIVAL WITH COMING OF PEACE IN EUROPE; NORTHWEST TO REAP BENEFITS FROM RECONSTRUCTION.

The mills of the Northwest are beginning to run full time.

Some of them are running overtime. The hum and shriek of the saws is rising to the old gladsome pitch that used to bring joy to the hearts of the people in this part of the country.

And the gloomy lumbermen are cheering up.

Up in Everett every mill in town is running, including the big, new Weyerhaeuser plant, one of the largest in the world. Everett's pay roll is larger than it ever was before.

Down in the Grays Harbor country the mills are steaming up and the business activity of former days is beginning to return.

SEATTLE BUSINESS STIRRING.

Seattle's mills are stirring under the stimulus of orders from inland. The foreign market is toning up. There isn't a great improvement noted in the foreign trade, but improved it is, say the lumbermen.

The day that peace comes to Europe the lumbermen of the Pacific coast will stand prepared for a mighty invasion of lumber buyers from practically all the nations now involved in the struggle.

Peace rumors are more plentiful now than at any time since the war began. All signs point to an early peace.

Vast areas of the civilized portions of Europe lie in waste. If Europe is to rebuild herself she must have lumber, and much of the lumber must come from the Pacific coast.

DEALERS TALK CHEERFULLY.

The Star for the second time within a few weeks canvassed a number of Seattle's large lumbermen Thursday afternoon for expressions of their views on the immediate future for lumber.

A majority of them are guarded in their utterances and conservative in their statements, but it was to be noted that their tone was more cheerful than before.

Charles H. Cobb, pioneer Puget Sound lumberman, had this to say:

"People generally feel that the lumber business is in a little better shape. There is going to be an advance in price from the logging end shortly. This is in response to the general toning up.

NEW TRADE DEVELOPING.

"There is general talk of better conditions. There is a substantial revival in the East, and a volume of new trade has developed through the placing of orders for crating in which automobiles and ammunition are packed for Europe. This has braced business up, and the West has been stimulated to a certain extent as a result."

Jesse F. Ives, vice president-manager of the Stimson Mill Co.: "The railroads are placing orders with the coast mills for ties. There are unmistakable signs of a substantial revival. Our trade with the Atlantic coast has been temporarily held up by the slides in the canal, but when these are removed we will be able to fill a lot of orders now hanging fire."

SOUTH AMERICA BUYING.

E. G. Ames, of the Puget Mill Co.: "Our mill is running nearer to its capacity now than it has for a long time. The South American trade, which fell off for a time because South America was unable to sell her products in the old markets, and therefore lost her buying buyer, is slowly reviving as the country is finding new markets.

"Freight rates to Australia are high because of a scarcity of bottoms, but this has no material effect on the trade, for when they want lumber they buy, regardless of the rates."

Ed H. Luke, of the J. E. Pinkham Lumber Co., was the most optimistic of those interviewed: "It looks good. Business right now is pretty fair. We deal largely in shingles, and we have more orders than we've experienced before for a long time. I don't know whether to attribute this to the farmers of the Middle West putting on new roofs or to speculation of jobbers who are stocking up, but shingles certainly are going east in substantial quantities. Lumber business has been stimulated in a satisfactory manner within the past two or three weeks."

Here are three bits of the most optimistic news which has come in for some time, and which supplements and surpasses what the Seattle lumbermen say in the above story:

"Tacoma: The Union Pacific system, in a program of improvements involving the expenditure of $1,700,000 in the Northwest, has within the past three months placed orders for 50,000,000 feet of lumber, costing $400,000—all in the Northwest, according to J. P. O'Brien, vice president of the Oregon-Washington Railway & Navigation Co. This includes an order for 400,000 fir ties.

"Chicago: One of the most serious car shortages of years confronts American railroads because of the record-breaking grain crop they have been called upon to move from the farms of the United States and Canada, and because of the heavy demand in transporting steel and ammunition. Orders for new cars are not being filled rapidly enough to relieve the shortage. This statement was made by W. E. Mereham, of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, addressing the Western Association of Car Service Officers.

"Tacoma: Four of Tacoma's largest lumber mills have begun running day and night to fill a heavy list of orders which have suddenly developed. The Tacoma Lumber Mill will open January 1, it is believed. The Danaher Lumber Co.'s mill at Old Tacoma, with a capacity of 3,500,000 feet a month, and employing 125 men, will reopen January 1, according to an announcement by the president, Cornelius D. Danaher.

"The Government has awarded to W. R. Grace & Co. the contract for 7,500,000 feet of lumber for use at the Panama Canal, according to A. C. Hemphill, manager of the company's Puget Sound lumber department."

The foregoing applies to the great lumber business of that section, showing it to be in a most flourishing condition. It is not only, as the report shows, taxed to its capacity but is expecting greater requirements of it than ever known to supply the increasing demands. Prosperity abounds and the people out there realize it.

Now, what is true of the lumber industry is also true of other business enterprises in that section, as the following articles taken from one of the papers show:

BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY REVIVE IN INLAND EMPIRE.

A Spokane business man who keeps in close touch with industry and commerce, A. L. Flewelling, vice president and general manager of the Milwaukee Land Co., is "confident that the next 30 days will show to Spokane, the inland empire, and the entire Northwest a returning wave of prosperity that will reach into all channels of business."

That fairly expresses a conviction that has taken recent root in many conservative minds. The new movement is on and various influences contributed to its starting:

1. Two years of abundant crops and good prices for the varied products of the inland empire.

2. A spirited revival of the mining industry, with enlarged production, high prices for mine products, and extraordinary activity in development of new properties.

3. An abundance of waiting capital, long held in reserve by its owners with a definite object to seek investments on the "turn of the tide." Once the conviction becomes clear that prices of farm lands and city real estate have reached rock bottom millions of dollars of this waiting capital will come out in search of bargains.

4. A healthier tone in the lumber industry, with a recorded advance in the eastern markets of $1 to $5 per thousand feet.

5. A quick return of prosperity to the western railroads.

President Earling reports that the St. Paul's business is the largest on record. Minneapolis advices say that every traffic official in the Northwest is working day and night to prevent car shortage. President Hill says the Great Northern will move 175,000,000 bushels of grain. The Northern Pacific will not let its cars go east.

"Chicago," says a dispatch from that city, "has this week come to the conclusion that there has never been a time when the railroads of the country, especially those in the West, Central West, Northwest, and Southwest, have had a brighter outlook than at present."

All transcontinental roads are handling increased and constantly increasing traffic, with enlarged earnings and marked advances in the market prices of their securities. When these advances are measured as against stock-exchange quotations of last July the rise is seen to be striking:

	July 13.	Recent high.	Advance.
Atchison	100	110	10
Canadian Pacific	143	194	51
C., M. & St. P.	80	98	18
Great Northern preferred	116	126	10
Northern Pacific	103	116	13
Southern Pacific	85	102	17
Union Pacific	125	139	14

It is significant that the improved conditions that are reflected in these advances extend from the zone of the Atchison road on the south to the line of the Canadian Pacific on the far north. Investors have faith in the present and the future of the entire Pacific west.

But this wave of prosperity is not confined to the Pacific slope alone, but is sweeping over the entire country, benefiting all parts of the country. From Jeffersonville, Ind., we find the following press notice of industrial activity:

MEN ADDED TO SHOP FORCE—INDICATION OF RETURNING PROSPERITY IN JEFFERSONVILLE.

An indication of returning prosperity in Jeffersonville is the employment of additional men by the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway shops. Some time ago it was found necessary to lay off as many of the men as possible, but they have been called back to work, and four men have been added. The road has added an additional car inspector in Louisville.

Formerly the only work done at the shops was the repairing of freight cars under the supervision of John Heyn. Later it was found necessary to abandon many of the smaller types of locomotives and introduce larger ones on the Louisville division. These were found to be too heavy for the Fourteenth Street Bridge, and it was decided to yard them in Jeffersonville, and William H. Foster, who was roundhouse foreman in Louisville, was transferred. Practically all of the trains, both passenger and freight, are pulled by the larger engines to Jeffersonville and there yarded. While being held for the next run the locomotives are coaled, inspected, and the crews given oil and waste. The road is doing a heavy business, and it is not an unusual thing to see seven or more heavy engines being cared for at a time.

The people realize that in no time during the entire period of our great industrial history has business been so good as now or the outlook for the future so promising.

Business does not now stand trembling as formerly, fearing financial squeezes or made-to-order panics. The enactment of the Federal reserve law emancipated business from the bondage of a few financial sharks, who had for years terrorized it. Their day is past, and business now is on a firm footing liberated from the menace heretofore which daily harrassed it. Money is easy and can be obtained on satisfactory terms for all legitimate business enterprises and hence prosperity has come to stay.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], who spoke a few minutes ago, commenced his speech by saying that there are some things dearer to man than live stock, and that one thing is liberty. I was amused, Mr. Chairman, as I listened to the gentleman. In the body of his speech he was pleading for liberty for live stock, and I recalled that on yesterday he voted against giving liberty to the Filipinos—human beings in the Philippine Islands. [Applause.]

I pleaded here yesterday for the freedom of the people in the islands. I saw their brilliant representative here, as able a man as any Republican in this House, show that he is as capable of self-government as any Republican here or elsewhere. [Applause.]

I heard his eloquent and pathetic plea for the freedom of his people, and I said how can we in all fairness and good conscience refuse to give freedom to the Filipinos four years from now, when ex-President Taft and Admiral Dewey both said years ago that they were as capable of self-government as the Cubans; and yet we gave liberty to Cuba, but for some curious reason we withheld it from the Philippines.

I saw the gentleman from Iowa line up with the Republicans, who voted in solid phalanx against giving freedom to the Filipinos four years from now, and this after we had cared for them for 18 years and expended $900,000,000 of our people's money. [Applause on the Republican side.] Oh, yes; you gentlemen can laugh and applaud now. Your hog combine on that side yesterday [laughter and applause] with aid mysteriously secured from this side, and uniting the two together you thwarted the purpose of the American people and denied liberty to the Philippine Islands. [Applause.]

I saw the Filipino Delegate yesterday plead for the liberties of his people until he was physically exhausted. I heard his powerful arraignment of the cold-hearted position of the Republican side and that of a few Members on this side. But a few Americans, rich and powerful, who have money invested in the Philippine Islands and who think more of their investments than they do of Filipino liberty and the best interest of this Republic, had arranged for the defeat of that measure.

Mr. Chairman, in the Post this morning is an interview from the Filipino Delegate saying that he would not come back to Congress; that it would be hard to secure independence now, since the whole Republican side had voted against freedom. To me this is a touching and a pathetic thing, and I want to say to him and to his people, Hope on, trust on; that judgment rendered here yesterday was not the judgment of the American people. [Applause.] The time will come, and that time will be in November, when we will have that judgment reversed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is well taken, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I just came in and heard the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Alabama. Would it be in order now to have a word of prayer? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. The Republican side is badly in need of prayer since that vote yesterday. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he has any further amendments to offer?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have sent two amendments to the desk, and I will offer them now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 78, line 25, after the word "specified," insert:

"Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall not enter into any agreement with any men or body of men having in charge the eradication of said diseases in any State or States whereby the State laws providing for the control and eradication of said disease shall be nullified or set aside."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, I offer the second amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 78, line 25, after the word "specified," insert:

"Provided, however, That none of the moneys heretofore mentioned shall be used in payment or part payment for stock slaughtered because it was infected with the disease for which the quarantine was established, unless all other stock which has become infected and died of any disease while restrained under the same quarantine shall have been paid for in the same proportionate value it is proposed to pay for the stock quarantined and slaughtered for said disease."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, that amendment, I think, is probably the only one of the three that is in order. It is a limitation upon expenditures.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that his amendment is not even offered to the paragraph now under consideration.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the amendment as read was not put in the proper place, but that is easily corrected.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman offers it at the end of line 17?

Mr. MANN. At the end of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman press the point of order?

Mr. LEVER. I would like to have the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is subject to the point of order. While the amendment starts out in the form of a limitation, it in fact is a direction to the Secretary of Agriculture to pay certain claims for the destruction of stock.

Mr. LEVER. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. MANN. That makes it out of order, notwithstanding the formal part is in the form of a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is no doubt about that. The only thing the Chair is hesitating about is whether the gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, yes; I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I never have had the misfortune of being present during the excitement of a great plague such as cholera or any of the other dread diseases which occasionally have swept over the country. I have had occasion during my service in the House on the committee on which I formerly served to hear a good deal in reference to yellow fever and some of the other diseases and their control respecting quarantine measures pending. It is very easy when everyone is feeling well to have a very high pride in the idea of the freedom of our people, and equally easy when a plague comes for everyone to forget the freedom in the effort to put down the plague. [Applause.]

I think on the whole the country is to be congratulated on the splendid work of the Agricultural Department in its fight against the foot-and-mouth disease, which apparently has resulted in the actual eradication of the disease from all parts of the country. [Applause.] It could not be done by sending tender love missives to the people who had the diseased cattle. It could not be done by mere request upon people. It could only be done by using authority; sometimes authority which did exist and sometimes authority which did not exist, but which was exercised. It is easy for us to complain. Here was a dreaded disease with which few people were familiar; even the department itself, thank God, not very familiar with it, not familiar from experience, but only in the main from investigation and reading—a disease breaking out and spreading in ways that no one knew how, spreading as no one could tell where—and they took possession and stamped it out. It could not be done without hurting some one. We yield our rights every day. We do not let even one of the free-born American citizens walk through those doors while the House is in session. We shut them out; and yet because the department tried to prevent meetings of men, some of whom had the disease on their farms, who might spread the disease from their boots, transferring the disease from one to another, gentlemen have almost had fits on the floor of the House, and they have had fits outside—I do not mean gentlemen here. Mr. Chairman, wherever men meet in government certain rights have to be yielded, and when great problems of this kind come before us men should not be too tender either of their natural or their civil rights. I am glad that the department had the nerve to go after this and stamp it out, and I think they deserve our warmest praise for what they have done. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Iowa to consume some time. I shall close on this side in one speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has four minutes remaining.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 78, at the end of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina add the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be condemned and destroyed all cattle meat admitted to the United States from foreign countries where the foot-and-mouth disease prevails, in the same manner as domestic cattle meat is condemned and destroyed under the provisions of law relating to the foot-and-mouth disease."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been framed to meet the point of order sustained by the Chair with respect to a former amendment which prohibited the admission of diseased meat into the United States. If the Chair will read the amendment carefully, I think he will observe that it conforms strictly to the provisions of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, and that it refers only to existing conditions of law. It simply adds a direction to the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to the inspection system which already prevails.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order, for the reason that it expressly directs the Secretary to do certain things as to which under the law he has the right to use his discretion. The decisions of former occupants of the Chair are uniform in that respect, that anything that specifically directs an executive officer to do a certain thing when the general law places the matter in his discretion is a change of existing law and therefore not in order. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the Chair hold that the Secretary does not have the power now to inspect and to condemn meat that may be diseased?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not passing on that. The Chair is passing on the amendment offered by the gentleman, which the Chair thinks specifically directs the Secretary of Agriculture to do something, whereas under existing law he is allowed to use his discretion, and the Chair thinks there is no doubt about it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. I withheld it before, but I now make it.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought the gentleman from South Carolina made the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Has the gentleman from Iowa consumed all of his time?

The CHAIRMAN. He has not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes remain.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the indorsement which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] gave to the Department of Agriculture for the stamping out of this disease. We are all glad that the disease is stamped out, but it requires a man from a city district, who knows nothing about how the disease was stamped out in particular to say it was stamped out in the way it should have been done. Here is what Wilbur Marsh says. Now, he is the Democratic national committeeman from Iowa. Here is what he says as to the interests that are back of the men at work stamping out this disease:

I think that the veterinarians connected with the Bureau of Animal Industry have been largely trained by the stockyard interests of the United States. I think that a veterinary surgeon who visits with these able men, the splendidly able fellows who run these stockyards, comes away taking the interest, perhaps, that that particular crowd of people want him to. And they have been watching and taking care of the Bureau of Animal Industry, so far as the veterinary part of it is concerned, for a very long time.

Mr. Marsh says it has been miserably handled from its very inception in Michigan until it was finally stamped out. Why, the gentleman from Illinois tells us about how the farmers were not allowed to meet, but he did not tell you about the inspectors who came from Washington into his own State where they were preparing cattle for slaughter that had foot-and-mouth disease, and while these inspectors had been running around with those infected cattle one inspector would say, "I want to go over and see John Jones a mile or so distant." This neighbor's cattle did not have the foot-and-mouth disease, but they contracted the disease through the visit of this inspector. The farmers of Illinois were prevented from meeting and talking together on the ground that they would convey the disease to cattle in the neighborhood that did not have the foot-and-mouth disease. The gentleman approves that, and in the bill of health he gives to the department he seems to approve the spread of the disease by inspectors.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, doubtless the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] knows a good deal more about it than I do, although I have given some study to the subject, because all the information he has on the subject that has appeared here to-day he has derived from the national committeeman of Iowa. Of course it is a good source of authority for him, but all my information is not derived from a Democratic national committeeman from Illinois. The gentleman opposes the Department of Agriculture because he thinks it is controlled by Democratic influence. All the information on the subject apparently, so far as disclosed to-day, he has received from one Democratic influence. I congratulate the Democratic national committeeman from Iowa on his most recent convert.

Mr. GOOD. No; I have read the testimony of Illinois Republicans and am converted to what the Democratic committeeman from Iowa said. Everybody who knows anything about it concedes that to be the fact.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not know anything about it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not happen to have the honor of knowing Mr. Marsh, the Democratic national committeeman from Iowa. I have no doubt he is a very estimable and amiable gentleman. Certainly he has some good qualities or else he would not be a Democrat. [Applause.] But I venture to assert that he does not know a great deal about the best method of stamping out the foot-and-mouth disease, and I want to say that as far as I am concerned, and I think as far as the members of the Committee on Agriculture are concerned——

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. We prefer to take the testimony and evidence of experts in the business of stamping out the foot-and-mouth disease rather than the statement of a Democratic national committeeman from Iowa, or any other State. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I regret very much indeed that the situation this morning in reference to this item has developed as it has. The Committee on Agriculture gave very earnest consideration to the item which appears in the bill, and we finally came to the conclusion that as an insurance against future outbreaks, in order to have a fund available for immediate use if an outbreak should occur, we should allow an appropriation in this bill of $2,500,000. We did more than that. We accepted the opinions and judgment of the experts of the department and of outside experts, that the best method of handling the foot-and-mouth disease was eradication; that the best method of getting cooperation in eradication was for the Government to pay at least a part of the value of the slaughtered animals.

Therefore the committee, in its wisdom, following expert advice, included in this paragraph appropriating $2,500,000 a provision for the payment of half the appraised value of the cattle destroyed in the process of eradicating this highly contagious and dreaded disease. More than that, in accordance with suggestions of stockmen and cattlemen throughout this country, we fixed in the last proviso of this bill the basis of appraisement, that basis being fixed in accordance with their request of the committee as we understood it. Now, when we bring this item on the floor of the House the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], leading the critics of the Department of Agriculture in its work of stamping out this disease, makes the point of order against that portion of the item which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to pay at least one-half the appraised value of slaughtered cattle in the State of Iowa, or Illinois, or South Carolina——

Mr. GOOD. What gentleman from Iowa does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. LEVER. The distinguished gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HULL. He does not deny that if the gentleman does. Now, my friend from Illinois [Mr. KING] complained that the point of order was readily conceded. It was readily conceded, because any man who has served in this House 30 days knows that the point of order was well taken. The gentleman, his own colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, who is the minority leader of this House, agrees to that proposition, and the Chairman has so ruled on a former occasion. I regret exceedingly that, because the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] can not get the money from the department for the payment of these cattle, and then tell the department how the money should be spent in Iowa, he felt it incumbent upon himself to deny his people, his farmers and stock raisers, and other farmers and stock raisers, the reimbursement by the Government of the United States of half the value of these slaughtered cattle. And yet that is what the point of order of the gentleman from Iowa has done. I hope and trust, Mr. Chairman, that the point was not made deliberately with that intention, but it reminds me to say that it is a very dangerous thing for children to fool with edged tools. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Did not you promise me to let the section as it read, with that one clause, go back in?

Mr. LEVER. Not on your life! [Applause on the Democratic side.] I told you in my office this morning that you might offer your proposition, and I would take it up on the floor of the House.

Mr. BENNET. I raise the point of order. The gentlemen have no right to address each other in the second person.

Mr. LEVER. I apologize to the gentleman for doing so.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understood the gentleman to say that.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman's statement is as inaccurate as to that as it is to this whole foot-and-mouth-disease proposition. Now, here is the situation: We are confronted with the possibility of an outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease at any time. We have recommended the method suggested by the Department of Agriculture as the best method of handling the situation. It is a method that has been used by every administration of this Government since the first outbreak occurred. I regret very much, and I say it again, that gentlemen have felt it incumbent upon themselves to come in here and criticize the methods of the department. The eradication of a highly contagious disease like the foot-and-mouth disease is no pink-tea affair. Of course, somebody suffers, but the individual must always suffer that general good may be done. Of course, mistakes are made. I have no doubt of it. But the important—the everlastingly important—fact remains that with the appropriations given it the department has stamped out the foot-and-mouth disease in this country, and it is the only country in the world in which there does not appear to-day foot-and-mouth disease—I mean the only large country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. FARR. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment be again read.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. May we have it read again?

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendations that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the cotton amendment and also on the warehouse amendment.

The SPEAKER. Two different amendments?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the grain-grades amendment.

Mr. MANN. The amendment is known as parts A, B, and C.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the other amendments en gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the reading of these three amendments be dispensed with. They have been read twice into the RECORD already.

Mr. MANN. It is not essential that they should be read again.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the reading of these amendments be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the cotton-futures amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, No. 2 is the grain-grading bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the grain-grading amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment is the warehouse amendment. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 122, noes 19.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes the gentleman would withhold that for a minute.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12207) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LONGWORTH, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. RAKER, for the day, on account of illness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. KINCHELOE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of George Price, pension, H. R. 27045, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-one gentleman are present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the warehouse amendment will, when their names are called, vote "yea." Those opposed will vote "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 292, nays 42, answered "present" 7, not voting 92, as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. SHOUSE (for warehouse bill) with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN (against warehouse bill).

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I have a general pair with my colleague Mr. SCULLY, who is absent. I wish to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title by inserting, after the word "seventeen," the words "and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be so amended.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. LEVER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OREGON AND CALIFORNIA RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported the bill (H. R. 14864) to alter and amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon," approved July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts of 1868 and 1869, and to alter and amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the State of Oregon," approved May 4, 1870, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 623), ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order on the bill.

AQUEDUCT BRIDGE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to lay before the House the bill (H. R. 759) to provide for the removal of what is known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and for the building of a bridge in place thereof, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Will it take any time?

Mr. ADAMSON. No; I think not. I want to move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 759) to provide for the removal of what is now known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and for the building of a bridge in place thereof, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments. I do not think they hurt the bill much.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, H. R. 12207, and I ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill and asks that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 617).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12207) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 22, 23, 29, 43, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 67, 73, 74, 75, 82, 83, 84, 87, 90, 94, 96, 97, 103, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 114, 115, 119, 121, 123, 124, 125, 126, 129, 133, 134, 136, 138, 139, 142, 147, 154, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 175, 177, 187, 191, 194, 195, 205, 206, 211, 212, 215, 216, 219, 221, 222, 224, and 225.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 31, 32, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 48, 65, 66, 70, 71, 72, 76, 77, 85, 86, 91, 92, 93, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 104, 105, 111, 112, 113, 116, 127, 128, 131, 132, 135, 137, 141, 144, 145, 146, 149, 150, 152, 153, 155, 172, 173, 174, 176, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 188, 189, 190, 192, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 204, 207, 210, 213, 217, 218, 220, 226, 227, and 228, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Transpose the matter inserted by said amendment to follow the word "each;" in line 18, page 2, of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$80,445"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$18,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "twenty-eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirty-nine"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$285,730"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

The bill, as finally agreed upon, appropriates $37,925,690.25. This sum is $284,312 less than the bill as it passed the Senate, $309,641 more than the bill as it passed the House, $1,020,890.50 more than the act for the current year, and $1,823,687 less than the estimates submitted to Congress.

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
T. U. SISSON,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] a question.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. In the final agreement relating to the employees of the State Department I wish the chairman would explain how nearly it conforms to the original estimate of the State Department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman that the conferees allowed the full estimate of the State Department, and if the gentleman will notice we have segregated into a separate paragraph or item in this bill the increases in force.

Mr. BORLAND. As I understand it, that is so that the committee and Congress can keep track of these new and additional employees?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the idea.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I observe that the conferees have restored the provision authorizing the leasing of a building for the Department of Justice at an annual rental of $36,000, and authorizing the rental of a building for the Department of Labor at a cost not to exceed $24,000 a year, each lease to be for five years, with the option of an extension of five years. Of course that option will be exercised, which makes a 10-year lease for those buildings at that rental. I will ask the gentleman how did that provision come back into the bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Senate put the amendment into the bill, and the House yielded, having been convinced that it was necessary for these two departments to have some provision in order to relieve them. The gentleman knows that the Department of Labor is in its present buildings under annual rental; that it is absolutely necessary to make some arrangement for succeeding years, and, having been unable to come to what the Secretary of Labor and the committee thought proper terms with the owner of the present building, it was necessary for Congress to enact some provision, and the conferees believed that this was a proper provision.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like some time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in the Evening Star of last Saturday is an article concerning two provisions in this report, one of which authorizes the Attorney General to enter into a contract for a five-year lease of an office building at an annual rental not to exceed $36,000, and the other authorizing the Secretary of Labor to enter into a contract for a five-year lease for an office building at an annual rental not to exceed $24,000, with an option in each case of an extension of five years. Among other things the article contains the following:

The Attorney General is authorized to enter into a contract for the lease of a modern fireproof office building for the use of the Department of Justice for a period not to exceed five years, renewable at the option of the Government for an additional period not exceeding five years, at an annual rental not exceeding $36,000, and a rate per annum per square foot of available floor space not to exceed 36.3 cents.

The Secretary of Labor is authorized to enter into a contract for the lease of a modern fireproof building for the use of the Department of Labor for a period not to exceed five years, renewable at the option of the Government for an additional period not to exceed five years, at an annual rental not exceeding $24,000, and a rate per annum per square foot of available floor space not to exceed 36.3 cents.

The price per square foot of floor space is inserted merely as a stipulation that 100,000 square feet must be provided for the Department of Justice and 66,000 for the Department of Labor. In the weakness of that provision, without relation to cost, is found the opportunity for making the Government pay an extortionate rental, as I shall show.

WHAT THE UNITED STATES PAYS IN RENT.

The United States Government is now paying $605,000 per annum for rented buildings in Washington. Most of the buildings occupied are remodeled dwellings, warehouses, or commercial buildings. The business of the Government is scattered helter-skelter all over Washington. Several of the departments are working under disadvantages which are almost unbelievable. The Department of Justice is in dire need of more adequate quarters. Plans for a Government building for this most important department have already been made. The building should be built. Yet no one can severely blame the Department of Justice when, failing to get the money from Congress with which to erect the building it needs, it consents to the makeshift disclosed in the above clause from House bill 12207.

The bill introduced into Congress last year by the Attorney General, and providing for the erection of the building for the Department of Justice in accordance with the plans which were accepted by the Government was withdrawn in favor of another bill introduced by the Secretary of the Treasury.

H. R. 12207 also reveals the newest method of mulcting the Government in a most handsome manner. No department can enter into a lease for longer than one year except upon authority of Congress. The authority to be granted in the proposed appropriation would cover a five-year lease at $36,000 per annum in the case of the Department of Justice. In this instance, as in the past, there is no doubt a tacit understanding that the department will renew the lease for another five years, otherwise the building would be almost impossible to finance.

GOVERNMENT PAYS 15 PER CENT.

Let us see what happens in these cases. The Bieber Building and the Navy Building are two of the more recent buildings erected in this manner. The financial process is simple. Preliminary estimates prepared by real estate interests lead the Government to believe that the building is to cost a certain sum of money. The rental is then fixed at 10 per cent of the supposed cost. In the case of the two buildings above cited the buildings were sold, after completion, at a price equal to ten times the rental paid by the Government, and the builders are currently reported to have taken a cash profit on $100,000 in each case. Thus the Government actually pays about 15 per cent per annum on the cost of the investment for rental alone, since the leases provide that heat, light, janitor, and elevator service are provided by the Government. What really happens is that the leases are capitalized at 10 per cent and sold, the building being thrown in!

No more ruinous policy could possibly be pursued. Strong efforts in Washington are now centered upon preventing the erection by the Government of any new buildings. Real estate owners know that they never could rent the buildings now occupied by the Government if they are vacated by the Government. These "modern, fireproof office buildings" such as are called for in H. R. 12207 are thus being scattered all over Washington. The buildings are generally incongruous in character, offensively located; and a continuing policy of erecting structures of this character can only result in the architectural ruination of the great Capital. Some of them are planned and designed to be converted into apartment houses—one of them has been arranged for conversion into a hotel.

Administration after administration has pursued this policy, because it is always so much easier for the party in power to make leases at exorbitant rates rather than to try to justify expenditures which would be infinitely cheaper to the Nation in the long run. The hand of our political system lies heavy on the wise and judicious development of the Capital and upon all effort properly to house the business of the Government in a dignified and efficient manner.

Now, we have for many years owned sites for buildings for the Department of Justice, for the Department of Commerce and Labor, and for the Department of State. Perhaps the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will know just when that land was purchased. It was several years ago, while the gentleman was Speaker. I refer to the land beginning with the square where Poli's Theater is located, at the corner of Fifteenth and Pennsylvania Avenue and running along Fifteenth to the Mall.

Mr. CANNON. It was in 1906.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Illinois says it was in 1906. So that we have owned these three sites for 10 years, and yet now it is proposed to have somebody erect a building for the Department of Justice, for which we are to pay a rental of $36,000 a year. That is 4 per cent on $900,000 or 6 per cent of $600,000.

The Government can borrow money at 3 per cent.

It is proposed also to have some private person erect a building for the Department of Labor, for which the Government is to pay a rental of $24,000 a year.

Not only that, but no person now can tell what either of these buildings will look like nor where they will be located. They will doubtless be located without regard to the general plan for the development and beautification of Washington. This haphazard locating of these boxlike, ungainly structures will surely result—has in some places already resulted—in the gross architectural disfigurement of this great Capital City. Unless stopped this practice will mean the ruin of the city's beauty. The people of the United States want the Capital of the Nation to be in all respects a model municipality. It is their Capital City.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I understood that 12 or 15 years ago the Government bought the property on Pennsylvania Avenue immediately south of the Belasco Theater for a public building; but as soon as it was purchased there was no demand for the public building.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; it was said to be too small.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It was not too small until the Government bought it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. These other sites are ample and their location perfect. If the building for the Department of Justice were erected on the site purchased and long held for it, on the corner diagonally across from the Treasury, all of the Avenue, Georgetown, and Fourteenth Street cars would pass immediately in front of it. Every Member of the Senate or the House and every visitor to the city could go by street car directly to the front of the building.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As everybody knows who reads, the cities in the country are taking up the general subject of city planning. Some most interesting things on this subject, among others, are set forth by Prof. Frederick Howe in a book, in which he speaks of what Germany has done in recent years in the way of city planning and other municipal reforms. It is a most interesting book. Any Member of the Senate or the House who reads it will be convinced that every public building—indeed, every private building—in the city of Washington ought to be located in accordance with the general plan for the harmonious development of the city. That plan already has been of much practical benefit. For example, some years ago there passed through the House a bill to erect a great railroad station on the Mall, between the Capitol and the Washington Monument, but President McKinley and the late President Cassatt, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, succeeded in stopping it, and they afterwards located the station where it now is, in accordance with the new plan. Already several other important buildings have been located in accordance with it—the new building for the Red Cross, on Seventeenth Street; the new building just south of it, for the Daughters of the American Revolution; and immediately south of that the beautiful building of the Pan American Union.

It is altogether wrong for us to permit the promiscuous construction at random here and there in the Capital City of the Nation of buildings of the type going up and rented to the Government. I do not know why these things are perpetually and insistently being done, unless, as the writer of that article declares, there are interests in the city determined to see to it that no more Government buildings shall be erected in Washington. Unless this be true, why is it that these magnificent sites on Fifteenth Street fronting that park, easily accessible from every part of the city to every resident of the city and to every visitor who comes here, are not utilized? Why is it that we let them stand idle, occupied by a few poor, cheap buildings, while we give to private people the right to erect in their discretion anywhere in this magnificent Capital City these disfiguring buildings and have our promise that they shall be leased to the Government of the United States? We already pay between six and seven hundred thousand dollars for rent here, and I repeat what I have said at other times, that it is our duty as legislators to put a stop to this practice of having the Government contract with private parties to erect buildings for it to lease and occupy.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman realizes, of course, that this committee has no authority to report out an appropriation for a public building.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, no question has been gone into more thoroughly by the Committee on Appropriations than the question of rentals paid for office space for the Government in the city of Washington. Ten years ago, as a member of a subcommittee, I visited nearly every building in the city of Washington that was rented by the Government. As to whether it is wise to construct public buildings or to rent space is not a question involved at this time. In 1908, if I recall correctly, Congress authorized the purchase of the property on Pennsylvania Avenue and Fifteenth Street at a cost of $2,500,000 for the purpose, as stated in the bill, of providing for the construction of three public buildings, estimated to cost $8,000,000—one a building for the Department of State, one a building for the Department of Justice, and one a building for the Department of Commerce and Labor. Two hundred thousand dollars were authorized and $160,000 appropriated for the preparation of plans for those buildings which, under the law, were required to be submitted to Congress for approval. The buildings themselves were never authorized and have not been authorized by Congress. Since that time the Department of Commerce and Labor has been divided into two departments by the creation of the Department of Labor, so that if any action were to be taken toward the construction of the buildings authorized at that time legislation undoubtedly would be required to adjust the situation resulting from the division of the then Department of Commerce and Labor.

There are two provisions agreed upon by the conferees relative to rent. One is for the Department of Justice. I undertake to say that the accommodations for the Department of Justice are a disgrace to the United States. Old residential buildings, scattered and apart from one another, renovated and overhauled so as to adapt them as far as possible to the needs of business, have been rented from time to time until the Department of Justice is now housed, not only inadequately, but in places that are fire traps, and impossible for men to perform properly the work put upon them. Several years ago an assistant attorney general stated that he and his clerk were installed in what had been a bathroom in a private house, attempting to transact important legal business on behalf of the Government. That department to-day is paying $36,000 a year as rent for the accommodations which it now has. It has been proposed that authority be given to the department to enter into a lease for five years for accommodations to cost the same amount of money. The cost is to be at the rate of 36 cents a square foot. It is stated that if that be done some one in the city of Washington is going to erect a modern, fireproof building, adapted to the needs of a great law department, where ample, decent, and suitable accommodations will be furnished, greater in extent than are now obtained for the same amount of money. That is all that is involved in this proposition. It is a question whether we shall authorize the Department of Justice to make a five-year agreement for the same amount of money it is now paying for absolutely indefensible accommodations, in order to obtain better accommodations, with more room, so that the employees of the department may more properly perform their duties.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

My BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York such time as he desires.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. If the new building for the Department of Justice were authorized at the present session of Congress, it would be in the neighborhood of five years before it was ready for occupancy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It could not be constructed within five years if it were authorized.

Mr. MANN. It would not be, the gentleman means.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice at present has 76,984 square feet, for which it pays an annual rental of $36,000. Under the provision in the legislative bill it will obtain more than 100,000 square feet of space, an increase of about 33 per cent in the available space. I assume that if people construct a building and make a contract of this character, they are doing it with the intent of making a profit, and that they will make a profit upon their investment, because I think nobody can be found, either in Washington or any other place, so idiotic as to invest money in buildings to be utilized by the Government of the United States and not make a profit from it.

In the investigation that has been made by the Committee on Appropriations it was found that the average rental is about 50 cents a square foot. In some instances it runs as high as 96 cents—in the Southern Building—but a great many of the departments pay 75 cents a square foot. This proposition is for 36 cents a square foot. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. What I want to ask the gentleman from New York is this: The building on Fourteenth Street, right opposite the New Willard Hotel, occupied by the Bureau of Good Roads, I understand, has no other Government tenant in it except the Good Roads Bureau. I want to ask the gentleman if it has not better accommodations; in other words, is not the Bureau of Good Roads getting better accommodations than the entire Department of Justice is now getting?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not familiar with it. I am not brought much in contact with the Bureau of Good Roads of the Department of Agriculture, as the appropriations for that department are not made by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman remember what we are paying for that building now in the way of rental?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a very low rate, but I do not know.

Mr. SIMS. It struck me that the bureau is getting better accommodations, and possibly for less money, than the Department of Justice is now getting for what they have.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I do not know.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the Government formerly paid $16,000 a year for it; but it is not large enough to accommodate this department, and for that reason the Department of Labor left it.

Mr. SIMS. No; but is it not as large a building as that now occupied by the Department of Justice?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has 36,000 square feet; the Department of Justice now occupies 77,000 square feet.

Mr. SIMS. It is a very new building, and certainly much cheaper at that rate than the one the Department of Justice now occupies.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no doubt it is a very cheap rate, 25 or 30 cents a square foot.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. TILSON. Is not one of the difficulties that when the Government erects a building it has always to erect a building of monumental character, so that the cost of building is so great that the floor space, overhead charge, interest charge on the money, really become very great, and is not that a difficulty over that of a private individual who erects a commercial building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In my opinion, there should be in Washington a building for the Department of Justice, a building that would be in keeping with that department and suitable for it.

Mr. TILSON. Both monumental in its character and utilitarian in its construction?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Somewhat monumental and largely utilitarian would be my desire, but just the reverse will happen when it is done.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. MANN. Have the buildings been authorized to be constructed on the Pennsylvania Avenue plots?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have never been authorized.

Mr. MANN. Have the plans been prepared and submitted?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have been prepared twice, if I recall correctly. They were prepared and revised and re-revised, and they are still being revised. The act required that the plans should be submitted to Congress for approval. Gentlemen may recollect that at one time when the plans of the State Department were completed some inquiry was made by the Committee on Appropriations; it was ascertained that the plans for that contemplated building included a suite of rooms in which should be housed visitors of noble birth who might come here from foreign lands, the idea being that they might be contaminated from association with ordinary American citizens in a Washington hotel. That disclosure resulted in one revision of the plans. Then the last administration went out before anything was done. I understand there have been some modifications suggested.

Mr. MANN. Of course nobody expects this administration to do anything. Have plans been formally submitted to Congress under the law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. They would go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. One hundred and sixty thousand dollars of the $200,000 authorized has been spent for the plans. Whether they have been submitted for approval is a different question.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. HAUGEN. The Government now owns a building not occupied much better than that described by the gentleman as occupied by the Department of Justice. I refer now to the Maltby Building——

Mr. FITZGERALD. That building has been condemned several times as being absolutely unsafe by the inspector of buildings of the city of Washington and the Superintendent of the Capitol. The Agricultural Department was authorized to utilize it in the appropriation for the current year, and ascertaining exactly what the situation was they declined to do it, and that building is to be taken down.

Mr. HAUGEN. How about the buildings in the row there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Which building?

Mr. HAUGEN. The buildings in the same row there near the Maltby Building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have been acquired and are to be taken down. They are not suitable for business purposes.

Mr. HAUGEN. They are certainly much better for business purposes than the buildings described by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They may be better than the buildings the Department of Justice now occupies. Most Members of the House are familiar with the buildings.

Mr. HAUGEN. And much better buildings than those occupied by the Department of Agriculture, many of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not an expert on buildings. I know that the Maltby Building is considered unsafe for occupation. Within two weeks the Superintendent of the Capitol said that if fire should break out in that building and any persons were in it he did not see any means by which a very considerable loss of life could be avoided.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman stated that if this Congress should authorize a new building it would be five years before it would be completed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At least five.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state why it will take five years to complete such a building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is about how long it would take to construct a monumental building erected by the Government of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. It did not take that length of time to erect the Woolworth Building in the city of New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, New York is up to date. But it took about four years, I think, or a little longer, to complete the Municipal Building in the city of New York; and that building is of a type that is different from any building that will be erected in Washington—a modern sky-scraper office building, with steel frame and stone shell, and can be erected much more quickly than a monumental type of building which would be considered suitable and appropriate for one of the departments in Washington. The former construction is rapid. It is of steel and stone.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What is the reason the work is not now progressing to complete or construct this building for the Department of Justice?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not speak for Congress. Why can not the gentleman himself speak? He is a Member of Congress; he is also a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which has jurisdiction of the matter. He should not ask me.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have not control of the money, but the gentleman has; and as long as the Government has these activities and as the Government has this great investment in real estate and in the site, and proposes to put up an $8,000,000 building, and the department is ready to occupy it, I have wondered while on that committee, although they have been there two or three times in reference to this matter, why this work was not progressing. The gentleman says that we have paid $200,000 for plans and thrown them away. I do not wonder that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] starts an inquiry. We have a Department of Justice up there, and we might dispose of that place. I think that activity should go on, although there is a great disposition not to authorize.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The fact is, however desirable it is to erect buildings, that we would save a great deal of money if the Government establishments in Washington were housed under leases just as those authorized in this bill. Now, this system was initiated 12 or 13 years ago. Gen. Anson Mills proposed to erect a building for the use of the Navy Department—the Navy Department Annex—and Justice Moody, of the United States Supreme Court, who had been a member of the Committee on Appropriations and then was Secretary of the Navy, made a contract with Gen. Mills, or negotiated one, by which it was arranged that he, Mills, should erect a building upon plans to be approved by the Navy Department, the building to be supervised under the direction of the Navy Department, the cost to be checked up, and the rental to be fixed equal to 5 per cent upon the money invested in the building. That proved so advantageous to the Government that from time to time others have suggested similar arrangements. The only question confronting the Committee on Appropriations in these matters is that here is a department paying a certain amount of money for a certain amount of space, and gets much larger accommodations, much more space, and much more desirable accommodations for the same amount of money if they would be permitted to make a five-year contract instead of an annual contract; and then, not in the interest of the person who erects the building, but in the interest of the Government, provision is made that the lease shall contain a provision for a renewal in five years on the same terms, so that the Government will not be held up at the end of the first five years, when it would desire to renew the lease for five years additional.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I quite agree with the gentleman in the proposal, and I think that some branches of the Department of Justice are very conveniently located; but the main branch, down in the little brick building off of the park, there is a building such as the gentleman has described, but is subject to being destroyed by fire at any time, and irreparable loss would occur. I think there ought to be, for the reasons you have already stated, something being done at the present time to ultimately get the building up, and which does not appear.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I merely wish to add that in nowise do we wish to interfere with the construction of these buildings. I have had persons in the city of Washington call upon me in my office and say that there were certain persons in the city of Washington who would be glad to enter into contracts similar to the ones made between the Navy Department and Gen. Mills to furnish accommodations. The Committee on Appropriations never attempts to control the contracts in any way. When the authority is asked to make the lease the committee inquires as to the needs of the service for space. It fixes a price per square foot for rental and then appropriates the money that will give the space required. So long as the accommodations are provided at a rental that an investigation shows to be an economical rental, we have discharged our duties and performed valuable service to the Government, and that is all that is done in the two provisions of this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Am I correct in my recollection that the original contract for the Mills Building was on the rent basis of $24,500 a year?

Mr. STAFFORD. Thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The assessed valuation of the building and land was $340,000, and under the law that is two-thirds of the value. That would make it worth $510,000. The rent was $24,500. Then when the 10-year period expired there was an attempt made to increase the rent to $30,000, and the Navy Department got authority to make a similar contract, as is proposed here, and have a new building erected. The Department of Labor had to find some place. They got into this building originally at the rate of $16,500 a year. Then they were compelled to pay $20,000 a year. Now they are asked $24,000 a year, which is under the original rental fixed, and because of a dispute as to whether the Government or the owner of the building should expend between two and three thousand dollars on certain repairs the offer of the Government at $24,000 a year has been withdrawn. This bill provides that the Department of Labor may enter into a contract for five years with anybody who will agree to furnish a building affording the space required at $24,000 a year. These provisions are designed to protect the Government rather than to benefit any private interest.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the Government did assume when this building was erected that it was worth $24,500 a year for rental purposes, and paid that sum for a considerable length of time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For over 10 years.

Mr. MONDELL. And I wonder why the committee has now insisted that it shall be had at $24,000, which is $500 a year less than it was originally agreed that the building was worth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee was trying to make a very sharp bargain instead of making this a very profitable transaction with the owner, as was supposed by the writer of this article. The committee was trying to give the Government a bargain and take advantage of the situation. Not only that but the Department of Labor states that it can obtain accommodations that will be satisfactory for $24,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. For information I would like to inquire whether, under the original arrangement recommended by then Representative Moody, it was provided that the return on the investment should be 5 per cent?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Five per cent on the amount of money invested.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to say to the gentleman that there has been considerable criticism on the part of the occupants of the Navy annex, the building erected on New York Avenue and occupied by the Marine Corps after leaving the Mills Building, to the effect that the character of construction was so poor that the department was put to considerable expense; and the fault of the present arrangement of limiting the return on the basis of 36.3 per cent is that it does not take into consideration the character of building that is constructed, but allows the contractor to erect a flimsy building, as has been described by my colleague, of a sardine-box character, which will yield not only 5 per cent but 10 and 12 and even 15 per cent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, that is ridiculous. The plans of the Mills Building were approved by the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman knows that the Mills Building is an edifice of a much higher cost of construction as compared with this Navy annex building, concerning which the Navy people are protesting. The Mills Building cost one-third more than these sardine-box buildings that have recently been constructed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Congress authorized the building under contract at so much per square foot. I understand from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] that the Assistant Secretary of the Navy stated that the building is very satisfactory.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He so stated in the hearings that the building is very satisfactory.

Mr. STAFFORD. And he also states in the hearings that they had considerable difficulty in keeping it in repair.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He stated that there was some trouble with the windows——

Mr. STAFFORD. Owing to poor and faulty construction.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How much time is there, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, so long as we are renting rather than erecting buildings for the housing of the Government bureaus and departments, I think we should rent as cheaply as we can, providing we do not, by attempting to economize, encourage the building of cheap office buildings which are not only unsatisfactory to the Government but are not creditable to this city. Neither should we, in our effort to economize, be unfair to those who have built in accordance with Government specifications and who have constructed buildings that are not only properly constructed to house the Government bureaus, but are built in such a way that they are a credit to the city.

The Mills Building is a case in point, and my opinion is that our action touching that building has not been very creditable. An arrangement was made with Gen. Mills whereby he was to erect the kind of a building that the Navy Department desired. It is on a magnificent site, fronting one of the finest Government buildings, and it would have been very unfortunate if a cheap, boxlike structure had been erected at that point. The building erected, standing on the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Seventeenth Street, diagonally opposite to the old Corcoran Art Gallery, is one of the finest office buildings in the city. It is a credit to the city, and it does not discredit the splendid public building that it faces.

Gen. Mills was supposed to receive 5 per cent on his investment on a rental of $26,000 per annum. We occupied the building for a number of years. It was entirely satisfactory. Then there was a suggestion of an increase of rent. It was, perhaps, proper to refuse it. I think it would have been possible to continue to occupy the building at the old rate, but the building was vacated; and for some years this building, which is more advantageously located than any other building in the city for the work of the State, War, or Navy Department, stood vacant. In the meantime we were making contracts with gentlemen who were building cheap and not wholly satisfactory buildings around in various parts of the city on which they were making not 5 per cent, but 10, as suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], leaving this magnificent building vacant.

Finally at a greatly reduced rent the Department of Labor moved into the building, and grudgingly we have raised that rent somewhat, but we never have brought it up to a point where it would pay what the Government originally said was a fair return on the cost of the building. And now there is a provision in this bill under which we are to pay, not $26,000 a year, which the building it worth on the basis of its cost, but $24,000, and we are refusing to move out. We say to the owner of the building, "We will stay there just as long as we desire. We will occupy those premises if we see fit, and we will pay you such sum as we fix." The sum we fix is a lesser sum than we ourselves have determined is a fair return on a building constructed in accordance with our specifications, and built because we needed it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. In view of what the gentleman states as to the hard terms imposed by the representatives of the Government upon the owner of this building, can we not get the same Government official to make the agreements for other Government buildings?

Mr. MONDELL. We do not seem to be desirous of paying a fair return for a good building, but we appear desirous of seeming to economize by paying a large return for a cheap building, a building not generally wholly satisfactory and never much of a credit to the city.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations, both in the House and Senate, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] stated, have given very careful consideration to the question of rent, particularly for these two departments. It was a condition and not a theory that confronted the committee. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] refers to the fact that the Government owns some land on the corner of Fourteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, and has had that property for 10 years. Of course, the House knows that the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction of a bill authorizing the erection of a public building. The fact remains that these departments are housed in their present quarters. It was necessary to provide different and better accommodations for them, or to provide rental in their present quarters. The Department of Justice is housed in three residences which have been combined, and as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] says, the accommodations of that department are a positive disgrace to this Government. Now, the representatives of both these departments stated that if they are authorized to enter into a five-year lease for the sums named in this bill, which carry no more rent than they are paying now, particularly with reference to the Department of Justice, they can secure adequate, up-to-date, fireproof accommodations for the use of those two departments; and it was to meet this necessity that the conferees, after carefully considering the matter, came to the unanimous conclusion that it was entirely proper to provide for this rental.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it proposed that any new building shall be constructed for the use of the Department of Justice; that is, constructed by private individuals and leased to the Government for use of the Department of Justice?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is proposed in this bill——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not mean in this bill; but does the proposition contemplate the erection of a new building by private individuals, who will then, when the building is constructed, lease it to the Government for use of the Department of Justice?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I so understand. It is proposed to give the Attorney General the opportunity, if he thinks best, to contract for a new building to be constructed for and rented by the Department of Justice for the term of years provided in this bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It is not at all likely that private individuals will construct a building and lease it to the Government at a loss on account of their love for the public and the Government, is it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true, and I am sure that there is no Member of the House who would expect or want a private individual to erect a building and lease it to the Government at a loss.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. A private individual probably can not borrow money more cheaply than 5 or 6 per cent, while the Government can borrow it for 3 per cent. If it is good business for a private individual to borrow money at 6 per cent and lease the building, why is it not good business for the Government to borrow it and erect its own building?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is a question that appeals just as much to the gentleman from Minnesota or any other Member of the House as it does to the gentleman from Tennessee. As I have stated, the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction of a bill to provide for the authorization or construction of a public building. That is a matter which rests with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The Committee on Appropriations were confronted with the necessity of taking care of these two departments, and they have done the best they could, and, as they believe, in the interest of economy.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion out of his generosity—he has been very kind in the allotment of time this afternoon—it is my own opinion that if the Committee on Appropriations should flat-footedly refuse to rent such grossly inadequate and improper quarters for the housing of our great departments, and should put it up to the House or the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and say, "Now it is for you to act," we would get some results; but we dillydally along from year to year. We build public buildings at every crossroads in the United States where they are not needed, but we let the Government itself here in Washington be mulcted every year by upward of $750,000 for rent, when we should build buildings that are needed here in this city of Washington. I think it is the height of mismanagement, not on the part of any gentleman here present, but of others, to allow this to be done. If there is one thing on which the people of the United States are agreed—and that means outside of the tariff and all other political things—it is that they want this Government in the city of Washington adequately and properly housed.

The other afternoon I had occasion to go to one of the departments of this Government where, I am informed, are housed all of the records this Government possesses covering one of the most vital periods in our national history, records that can not be duplicated anywhere in this world, records that show the title to hundreds of millions of dollars worth of property. These records are kept in a building at which I stood aghast when I beheld it. I asked the man in charge if fire was not likely. He said, "This is the biggest opportunity for a bonfire that I know anything about, and we live from hour to hour wondering if this is not the last hour before the fire."

Yet we sit here year after year and agree to the making of leases for buildings for 5 or 10 years and never squarely face the proposition whether we are going to build public buildings that are needed by these departments.

Now, I have taken a great deal of the time of the gentleman from Tennessee. He has been very generous. I have been thinking about this thing for five or six years, and this is the first chance I have had to explode. I thank the gentleman. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am very glad the gentleman had that opportunity this afternoon. I was just about to state that all this matter has been considered and thrashed over a number of times. It was fully discussed when the bill was originally before the House for consideration. Mr. Speaker, I hope we can come to a vote now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman give me three minutes?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Appropriations has no authority to authorize the construction of public buildings. No; but the committee proceeds to authorize the construction of private buildings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The committee does it by agreeing in advance to have the Government lease buildings to be constructed by private parties, and yet the committee complains because the Government does not erect its own buildings. So long as the Committee on Appropriations shall authorize the making of contracts like this with private individuals, we never shall have new and greatly needed public buildings. In the last Congress, Mr. Speaker, a bill was introduced which I understand was at the request of the Attorney General for the construction of a building for the Department of Justice on the site which was purchased for it 10 years ago. The plans had been accepted years before. Two hundred thousand dollars was paid for the plans of that building, a building for the Department of Commerce and Labor, and a building for the Department of State.

What has happened since we bought all that land and authorized the preparation and acceptance of the plans? Two hundred thousand dollars would have paid the rent for five years for one of the buildings proposed in this report.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman inform the committee anything about the cost of this building occupied by the Department of Commerce?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; but that building was erected and rented under the same sort of a law, and long after the site on Fifteenth Street was bought, and long after plans for a building on it had been approved. It was a Republican official who entered into the agreement with a private person to put up that building on the corner of Nineteenth Street and the Avenue.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman is aware that it is reputed to have been sold for $900,000, probably twice the cost of the building, and probably placed squarely on the rental value.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We have also rented a building constructed by a private party for the use of the Navy, and we now propose to permit a private individual to erect a building and lease it for five years to the Department of Justice, notwithstanding we have long had a fine site and excellent plans for that building.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman would use some of his persuasive eloquence that he has used on the floor before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I am sure he would get some results.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill S. 4856, an omnibus pension bill.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, Mr. ASHBROOK, and Mr. FULLER.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill H. R. 9533 may be taken up for consideration, and I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider the bill H. R. 9533, on the Union Calendar, in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I do not think that would be safe.

Mr. JONES. Very well, Mr. Speaker, then I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I would like to ask the gentleman if an arrangement can not be made for general debate?

Mr. JONES. I think so. I imagine that we will not want a great deal of time, and I will ask the gentleman to suggest how much time we will take.

Mr. TOWNER. As I understand it, so far there is no demand upon this side for time except on the bill. I suggest that general debate be confined to the bill, and in that case I think we will not want more than an hour and a half on this side.

Mr. JONES. And debate to be confined to the bill. Would not the gentleman be willing to have one hour on each side? We are going to take the bill up, I suppose, section by section.

Mr. TOWNER. Some members of the committee desire to use some time in the presentation of the case in general debate. If we can get through in less than that time I have no objection. I think three hours on a bill of this character is a very short time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I admit that it is a very important measure and contains a great many important provisions, but I suppose that we could discuss those under the five-minute rule. The gentleman thinks we ought to have three hours of general debate?

Mr. TOWNER. I think so, and if we can make it less, we will be very glad to do so.

Mr. JONES. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to three hours, to be confined to the bill, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, to be confined to the bill, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I take it that that means that the reading of the bill will not be started to-night for amendment, and that probably we will not stay in session much after 5 o'clock.

Mr. JONES. Not later than half past 5 o'clock, I would say to the gentleman. Most gentlemen were up very late last evening, and I think they would like to have this finished as soon as possible.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to quit about 5 o'clock to-day.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, let us have an hour's debate this afternoon, and quit at half past 5 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. That is all very nice for gentlemen who are not here steadily, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and I are. Of course, occasionally somebody else is here.

Mr. KITCHIN. It looked last night as though everybody was here except us. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask if this general debate is to be confined to the bill why it is not possible, inasmuch as it is for the benefit of Members who are in attendance, to reach some sort of an agreement for less than three hours of debate and have the debate under the five-minute rule. This is a unanimous report. It is true there are some committee amendments, and gentlemen have reserved a right to offer certain amendments, but there are no sharp differences about the bill.

Mr. MANN. How long was this bill under consideration when it passed before?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not remember. We have passed two or three of these Porto Rican bills. We passed the Olmsted bill.

Mr. MANN. I think we passed this bill twice, and each time it has taken two or three weeks. The gentleman says there are no matters in dispute——

Mr. GARRETT. My recollection is that we passed one of these bills on Calendar Wednesday. I think that was the Olmsted bill.

Mr. MANN. We passed the Olmsted bill, and then I think we passed the Jones bill.

Mr. JONES. No; the Jones bill was reported to the House, but was never considered.

Mr. MANN. Did we not pass it in the Sixty-second Congress?

Mr. JONES. No. One other bill was passed in 1910.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us go until half past 5 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. JONES. That is a matter that we will adjust after we dispose of the unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. I am not making any objection to the request.

Mr. GARRETT. It would not be possible, then, to make an agreement to dispense with all general debate?

Mr. MANN. I do not see how that can be done.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Is there considerable demand for time under general debate?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Iowa has already made a statement that there was some demand for time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that general debate be limited to three hours, to be confined to the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9533, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

[Mr. JONES addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think the committee had better rise at this time?

Mr. JONES. I suppose we might as well. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits, and to append thereto an editorial by Mr. Clarence Poe, editor of the Progressive Farmer, a very distinguished editor, on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits, and to print as a part of his remarks an editorial. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Agricultural bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8067. An act to quiet the title to certain lands in the possession of G. B. Dickson, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10750. An act permitting the Mondak Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River in the State of Montana.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 3, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, submitting facts relative to health conditions in Department of Commerce Building (H. Doc. No. 1079); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of J. C. Hendricks, administrator of Samuel Houston, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1080); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 209) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept assignment of patent for improvements in the manufacture of gasoline, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 622), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14725) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to subdivide a part of the town site of Plummer, Idaho, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 624), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SHERWOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 5221) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 621), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7221) granting a pension to Caroline G. Yockel, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and a memorial were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HASTINGS: A bill (H. R. 15283) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to grant 210,000 acres of nonmineral land to the State of Oklahoma for the benefit of agricultural and mechanical colleges therein established under the act of July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public land to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," as amended by the act of July 23, 1866; and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the Secretary of the Interior certifying that there are not sufficient lands in Oklahoma to comply with the aforesaid acts, to pay to said State of Oklahoma, in lieu thereof, the sum of $262,500 in order to secure to said State the benefits of said acts; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CROSSER: A bill (H. R. 15284) to promote interstate commerce, agriculture, and the general welfare by providing for the development and control of waterways and water resources, for water conservation, for flood control, prevention, and protection; for the application of flood waters to beneficial uses; and for cooperation in such work with States and other agencies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. TILLMAN: A bill (H. R. 15285) to appropriate the sum of $5,083.40 out of the United States Treasury to lay and construct a 30-foot strip of asphaltic concrete pavement around the United States post office in the city of Fayetteville, Ark.; to the Committee on Appropriations.
